All-Around Service

¶ Nowhere else in the field can the exhibitor find such complete service both in point of extended space and expert treatment of theatre building, equipment, music and projection problems.

¶ The wide range of equipment advertisers in the section is a hint to the producers of pictures, for the accessory advertiser knows what paper pulls. He can see direct results.

RIVOLI and Rialto records were all broken last week by "Deception," which showed to a total of 54,254 paid admissions in the first seven days of its New York run.

The record up till now has been 53,873 paid admissions.

The newspaper critics were unanimous in calling "Deception" a masterpiece.

The opening of the second week seems to indicate that it will equal, if not excel, the first week.

The money-making powers of "Deception" are limited only by the size of your theatre.

Justifying Exploitation Expense

Expensive exploitation can bring audiences to see your feature, but it can't make them like it. Effects —prologues, stage sets, music— can only assist. "Without Benefit of Clergy"

Directed by James Young Produced at the Robert Brunton Studios

PATHE is proud to announce the completion of production on "Without Benefit of Clergy".

Rudyard Kipling is the world's greatest living author, a master of story writers, whose admirers and readers are countless.

No news in connection with the photoplay business during the past twelve months has been published so widely or attracted so much attention and comment as the announcement that Mr. Kipling's works were to be produced in motion pictures.

After many months of preparation the first will be ready for release early in May.

Pathe assures its customers and friends that the picture is one to be proud of; and that the name of Kipling, the title of the story, and the excellence of the production combine to make a box-office attraction that is unique and unparalleled, and that will bring a new dignity to the entire business.

Announcements more in detail will soon be made.

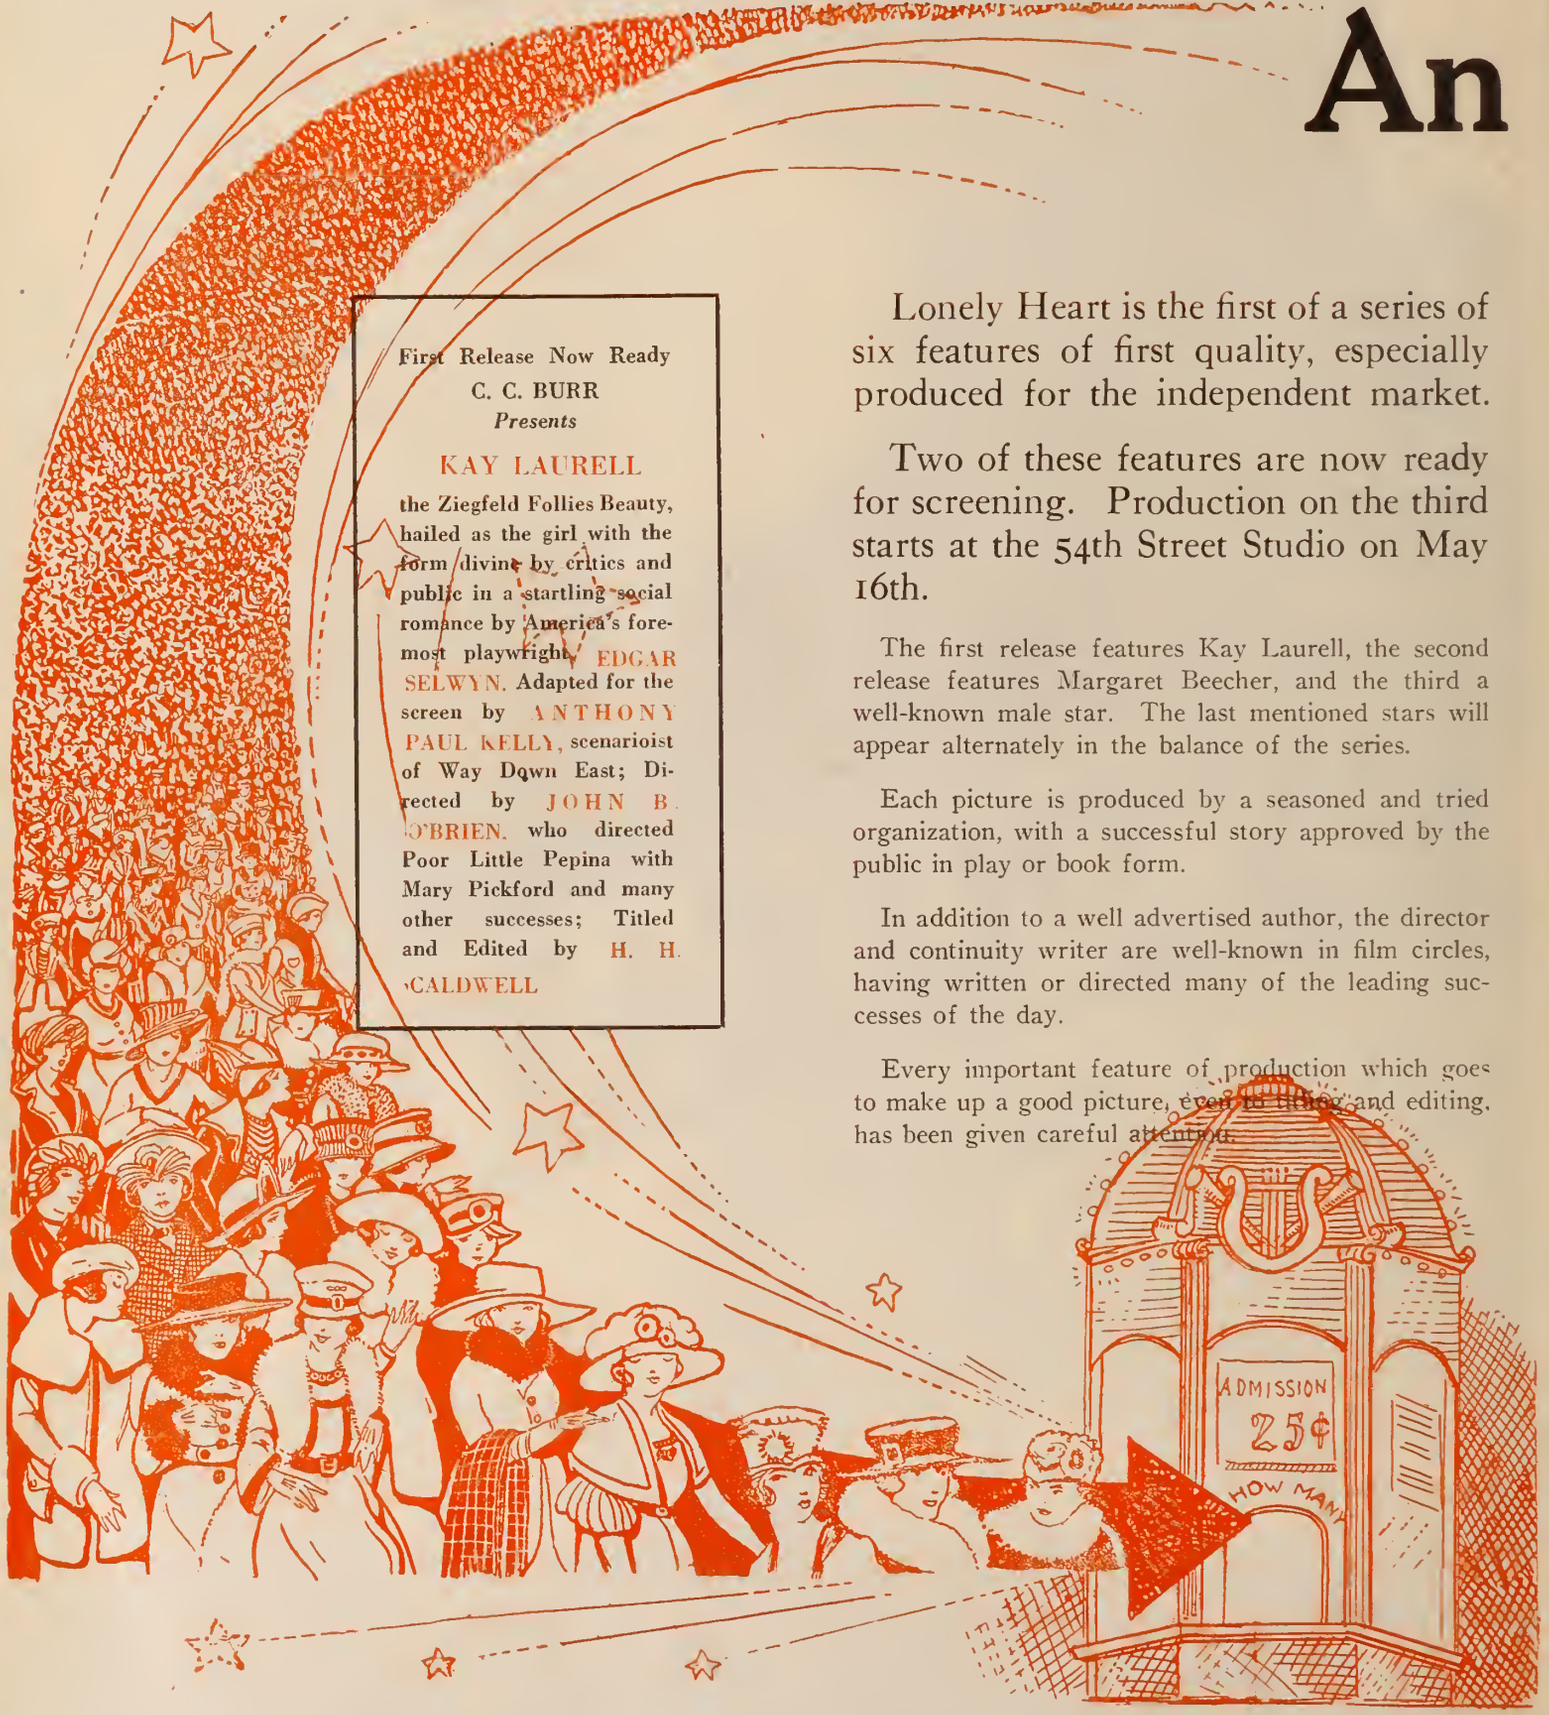
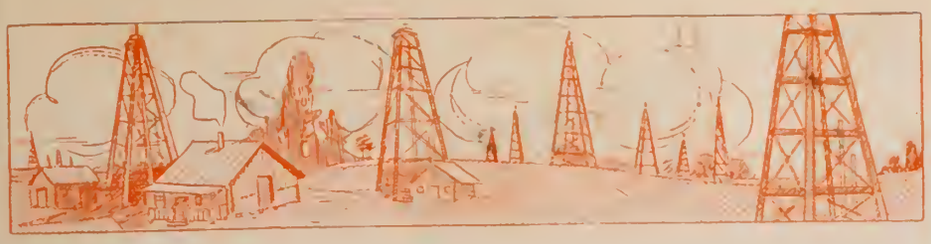
the Ziegfeld Follies Beauty, hailed as the girl with the form divine by critics and public in a startling social romance by America's foremost playwright, EDGAR SELWYN. Adapted for the screen by ANTHONY PAUL KELLY, scenarioist of Way Down East; Directed by JOHN B. O'BRIEN, who directed Poor Little Pepina with Mary Pickford and many other successes; Titled and Edited by H. H. CALDWELL

Lonely Heart is the first of a series of six features of first quality, especially produced for the independent market.



Two of these features are now ready for screening. Production on the third starts at the 54th Street Studio on May 16th.



The first release features Kay Laurell, the second release features Margaret Beecher, and the third a well-known male star. The last mentioned stars will appear alternately in the balance of the series.

Each picture is produced by a seasoned and tried organization, with a successful story approved by the public in play or book form.

In addition to a well advertised author, the director and continuity writer are well-known in film circles, having written or directed many of the leading successes of the day.

Every important feature of production which goes to make up a good picture, even to titling and editing, has been given careful attention.

Opportunity

Our organization embraces some of the leading specialists in their line.

There are no extravagant claims or wild statements necessary—our pictures are ready for screening.

Our plans of production have been sound, as outlined above, and shown by these productions.

If the independent market will support this series, we will produce another simultaneously with the release of the above, featuring a box office female star in well-advertised stories.

Here is a series of pictures produced especially for the independent market. These productions are big enough and worthy of sponsorship by any national distributor.

As an independent producer we prefer to divide our profits and get a quick turnover.

We believe in, and prefer, for this reason, the independent system of marketing our product.

We believe this is the best method for all concerned.

Whether or not the independent exchange man rises to this opportunity, will prove if the independent market is satisfied to continue to be the dumping ground for program rejects, or is ready to assume its rightful position as the distributor of the highest class motion picture product obtainable.

If you want good pictures here is your chance.

We will send our plan to any exchange serving a territory other than Boston, Philadelphia and New York.

MAY McAVOY

What One Critic Says:

WHEN MAY McAVOY appeared in a minor role in "The Truth About Husbands," a few weeks ago, we said that seldom had we seen equalled her beauty, charm and feeling; that she ought to be allowed to do something worth while. And here she is doing some of the finest work we have ever seen. . . . .

Miss McAvoy is a flawless brunette beauty who wears clothes better than anyone on the screen. Miss McAvoy gives a performance that is beautiful and moving and soul-satisfying. In the scene where she learns that Tommy does not love her we believe that she could not have been surpassed even by Lillian Gish. Our praise may seem extravagant to those who have not seen the picture, but those who have been fortunate enough to see it will understand.

—Harrette Underhill,
in the New York Tribune.

Starring in Realart's Birthday Production

"A marvelous ability for emotional portrayal," "a milestone in screen acting," "a real star," "unforgetable," "the finest work we have ever seen,"—these are some of the words with which the critics have hailed May McAvoy, the little nineteen-year-old actress who has been chosen to star in the Realart Birthday Production.

For in addition to her physical loveliness and almost perfect screen presence, she possesses that human fire which brings the tears even when you are smiling.

Her rise to stardom has been logical and well-earned and rapid. She has been leading woman and co-star in many successful pictures before the sensational success as Grizel in John Robertson's production "Sentimental Tommy."

And now she achieves stardom in a role in which she is perfectly cast—the wistful, loyal little heroine of the Birthday Production story.

A Story of Love and Combat Set in Nature's Great Outdoors

HERE is a picture flavored with the tang of the pine woods of Maine, spiced with great forests of evergreens; resounding with the crash of falling trees, the roaring of mighty waters, and the destruction with dynamite of strong dams. Here is a picture of the great outdoors, from the charm of Indian summer to the glittering grandeur of ice-clad trees.

Here is a picture with a score of punches and a "knockout." Imagine old "X K" Kavanagh sending his logs roaring down stream to make his daughter happy in her culture; imagine that giant of a man fighting Wall Street; imagine him dying from his great effort, but his spirit living on in the heart of his "Colleen." NEW YORK April 20, 1921.

Dear Mr. Johnston:-

I read the reviews in the Motion Picture News each week. They are written by men of intelligence and discernment, and are at all times well expressed. But they are more like press notices than criticisms.

It is difficult for me to understand why this should be. Your service departments are worthy of the name, and your editorials impress me as the sanest and clearest expressions of opinion on the motion picture industry now being published anywhere. You realize rightly that you are not employed by the advertisers who fill your pages with gorgeous displays, but by your readers, without whom neither you nor your advertisers could survive.

In your reviews, however, your advertisers apparently are permitted to dominate your sense of obligation to your readers. I do not mean to infer that you are alone in this respect - in fact you are considerably less culpable than any of the other trade papers. But the fact remains that you do not give your readers the exact information which they require.

The result is that your reviews are of secondary importance to the other features in your magazine. Do you consider that they are taken seriously? Do you not realize that the local exhibitors who read the News must swallow your critics' superlatives with the conventional grains of salt? Do you appreciate the fact these local exhibitors don't want you to gild the lily, or deodorize the Gorgonzola?

As motion picture critic of LIFE, I see all the more important pictures that are released each week. My reviews of them express the unbiased opinions of an appreciative observer. I have never accepted bribes from any film magnates (through no fault, be it said, of my own). It is, therefore, possible for me to condemn a rotten picture, regardless of the amount expended on its exploitation.

I firmly believe that the value of your publication - to advertisers and readers as well - would be incalculably increased if you were to follow a similar policy of frank and accurate criticism in your reviews. Possibly my attitude is wrong. If so, I should very much like to be shown.

Respectfully yours,

Robert E. Sherwood

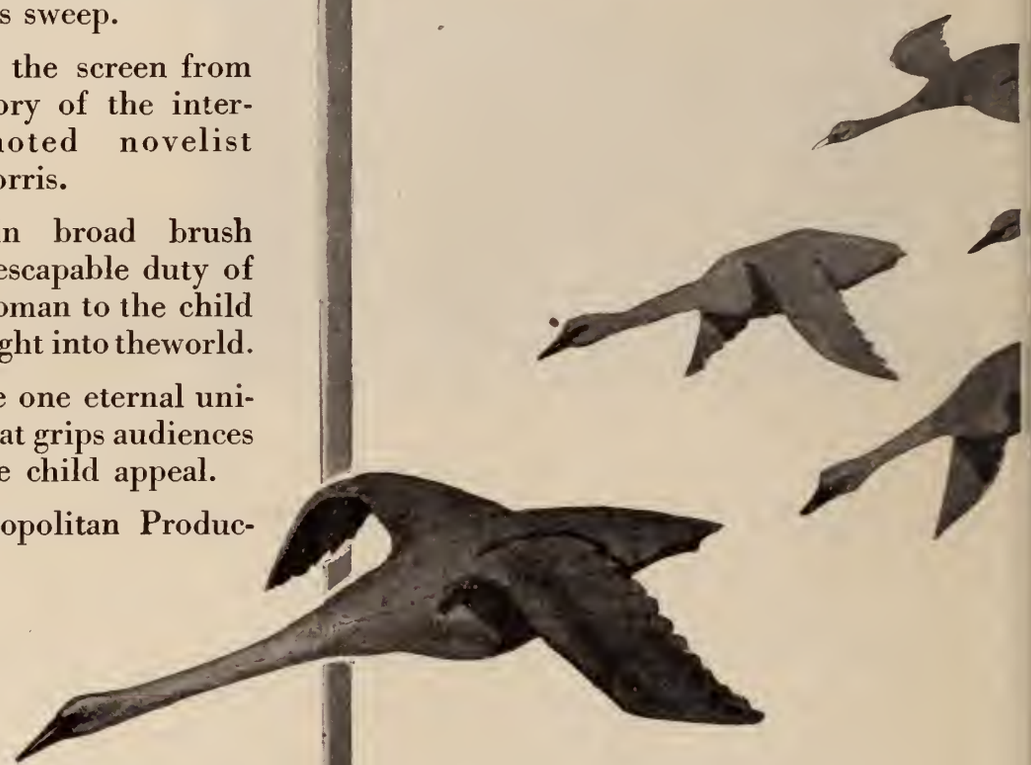
The 20th Century Problem—Divorce

Here is the supreme Special Super Feature that pulses vibrantly with the pitiful drama of a child torn by the love for her parents who are about to be divorced.

Under the unmistakable genius of that master director, Albert Capellani, it moves toward its tremendous soul rocking climax with a resistless sweep.



Adapted for the screen from the famous story of the internationally noted novelist Gouverneur Morris.

It paints in broad brush strokes the inescapable duty of a man and a woman to the child they have brought into theworld.

It sounds the one eternal universal theme that grips audiences everywhere—the child appeal.

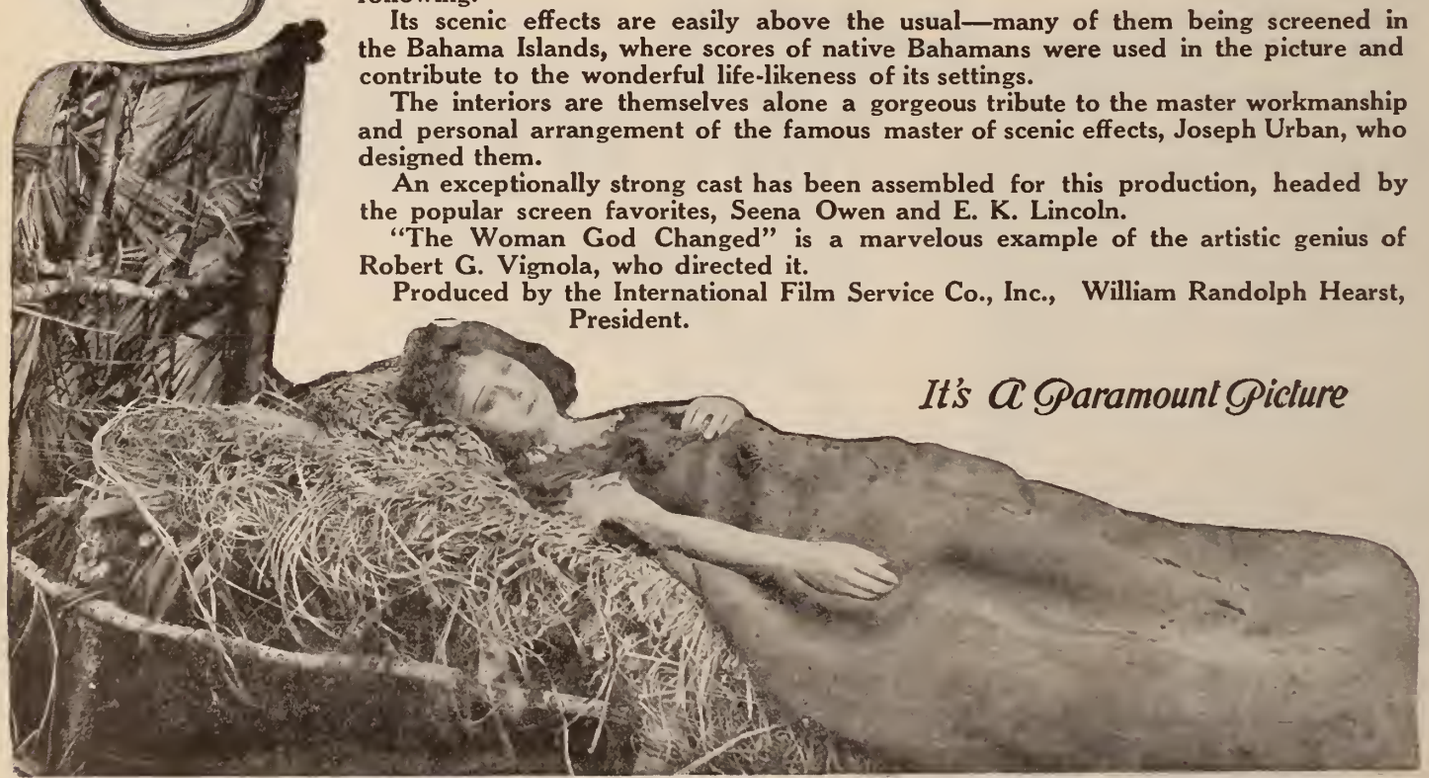
"The Woman

"The Woman God Changed" is not only a special Cosmopolitan Super Feature, but it is a powerful love drama that is away and beyond the ordinary in the novelty of its theme and the scope of its presentation, and will have an immense box office following.

Its scenic effects are easily above the usual—many of them being screened in the Bahama Islands, where scores of native Bahamans were used in the picture and contribute to the wonderful life-likeness of its settings.



The interiors are themselves alone a gorgeous tribute to the master workmanship and personal arrangement of the famous master of scenic effects, Joseph Urban, who designed them.

An exceptionally strong cast has been assembled for this production, headed by the popular screen favorites, Seena Owen and E. K. Lincoln.

Well, what are you going to do about it?

The papers had come out that morning with this startling bulletin:

SLIGHT CHANGE IN WEDDING ANNOUNCED

We have unquestioned authority to print the announcement that a slight change has been made in the lineup of the Wade-Doubleday wedding which takes place today. Mr. Peter Flagg will act as bridegroom instead of Mr. Monty Wade, as originally planned. Mr. Wade declined to act at the very last moment because of other interests, it is said. In all other respects the affair will take place as scheduled.

And now they had the "unquestioned authority" at bay. But what did that young woman say in self defense——"I did it for the wife and kiddies"? No siree! She stuck up her chin and asked: "What are you going to do about it?"

Trade Advertising—the All Important

AS to the importance of advertising in this field, I believe that the future leaders in the industry will be men who know as much about advertising as about pictures—and consider both of about equal importance.

Advertising is a big economic factor in this field.

Pictures are destined—and shortly—to be the most widely advertised of all commodities.

The public will be reached every day with liberal advertising space exploiting the individual picture and the trademark back of it.

And the tradepaper will be, must be, an integral and important part of these big campaigns.

This has always been true in every important advertising campaign—for the past thirty years.

When the manufacturer—of any commodity—advertises to the public and leads them to the dealer, then he uses the tradepaper to tell the dealer just what he is doing and how and why.

That's an inevitable link in the sales campaign.

People who suddenly discover the idea of consumer advertising leap to the conclusion that it replaces trade or dealer advertising.

It doesn't; it simply makes trade advertising more important, more necessary, by giving it a new role to play.

So far as MOTION PICTURE NEWS is concerned, its potential force is so large and unquestionable that it is simply a question with the advertiser of how he should use its advertising pages to increase his selling effort and profits. It's up to him.

Censorship—A Last Resort

WHATEVER the outcome at Albany—whether or not Governor Miller signs the Lusk-Clayton Censorship bill—the industry may credit itself with an eleventh hour presentation of its case, that was all it possibly could have been.

The speakers were in harmony. The program was well-ordered and definitely concentrated. Loose strings were eliminated. A business proposition was advanced. The possibility as well as the intention of producer self-control was evidenced. All in all the showing made was impressive, forceful and dignified.

We fail to see how Governor Miller can bring himself to sign the bill.

Judge Jenks, in a masterful address, laid bare the situation in all its truth and solemnity.

"Censorship," said he, "is a great and overwhelming use of a sovereign power. It is a last resort."

Its operations, he stated, place those involved beyond the pale of society. They brand with the stigma of criminality.

Can pictures possibly be so bad; can a business, innocent in itself, possibly go to such extremes of baseness as to call for a bureaucratic control, a supreme arbiter, such as official censorship?

If so, if such licentiousness could conceivably exist, what of the penal code designed to meet exactly such a supposed situation? What of its plain and powerful section 1148?

And, finally, what of the police powers, directly answerable, as they are, to the chief executive of every state, and directly able to cope with any such situation?

Three persons in New York State, it is proposed, shall be made absolute arbiters of the expression anyone may publish through motion pictures.

And the same person cannot defend that opinion and his right to publish it before a jury of his peers.

That's censorship!

We repeat: Ratifying, as we do and in full measure Governor Miller's firm stand against unfit pictures, we fail to see how he can bring himself to place a censorship statute upon the books of New York State.

And now to speak of the censorship situation in general.

Let's take off the gloves.

What is censorship?

We print on page 2917 of the issue a clean exposition of censorship as applied, for instance, to the State of New York. We have never read a better analysis. We ask everyone to read it through.

In our opinion—and we've never held a more sincere one—censorship is flatly and flagrantly unconstitutional.

In our opinion it can be so fought and eventually demolished in the states where it now exists by law.

And in our opinion that fight should begin, and begin right—tomorrow!

But, in any event, censorship is preposterous. It is obnoxious to every decent American, let alone those of us whom it seeks to brand as outcasts, unfit even for the right to trial by jury. It is intolerable. It is not to be quibbled about. It is to be fought—fought tooth and nail, smashed to smithereens if there's any backbone, any blood and sinews in the industry.

Censorship demands for an offensive—an offensive backed by all the outraged spirit and power of the motion picture industry; certainly it is not a matter for mild mannered defense, for polite expostulation.

There have been introduced, this legislative year, thirty-seven state censorship measures, of which twenty-nine already have been killed.

But next year we shall be again defending ourselves—and next, and just so long as any slight group of half-baked zealots or notoriety seekers or well-meaning and uninformed persons can thrust themselves to the fore by wielding a monstrous sword of whose ruthless power and iniquity they have not the slightest conception.

It's time—now—to fight! Time certainly for an industry fourth in rank in the manufacturing world, with its very existence in jeopardy.

Governor Holds Hearing at Albany, N. Y., on Lusk-Clayton Bill

Executive Urged Not to Sign; Alternative Proposal Submitted to Him

ON Tuesday afternoon of this week a hearing was held on the Lusk-Clayton Censorship Bill before Governor Nathan L. Miller in the executive chamber of the state capitol at Albany, N. Y. The measure was passed two weeks ago by the state legislature and is now awaiting the signature or veto of the Governor. The producing, distributing, and exhibiting branches of the motion-picture industry as well as allied interests were strongly represented at the hearing. Representatives of the interests supporting the measure were also present in force.

The main feature of the opposition to the bill was the submission to Governor Miller of a proposal, signed by the executives of the principal motion-picture producing and distributing companies, in which the Governor is asked to withhold his signature from the Lusk-Clayton bill and to appoint instead a commission of five disinterested persons "qualified by their experience and their interest in public affairs" for the purpose of making a "thorough and sympathetic investigation of the motion-picture industry" with a view to report to the Governor "recommendations as to the best means of protecting the industry and the public against objectionable films and advertisements." The proposal further pledges the full cooperation of the companies represented with such a commission and expresses the readiness of these companies "to provide the compensation and expenses of such a commission and of such a staff of assistants as they may find it necessary to employ." This proposal was submitted with the argument that it provided an arrangement which would be much more efficacious in ridding the screen of objectionable films than the Lusk-Clayton measure now awaiting action by the Governor. This proposition was handed over to the Governor and will receive careful consideration during the next few days.

The hearing brought to Albany the greatest array of motion picture producers, representing millions of dollars of invested capital, ever seen at the state capitol. The producers were represented by such men as Oscar A. Price, of Associated Producers, William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn Pictures, William Fox of the Fox Film Company, and others of similar magnitude. The exhibitors were represented by Charles L. O'Reilly, newly elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State; and the authors by Augustus Thomas. The reform element included Mrs. Clarence Waterman, Canon William C. Chase and others. United Labor was represented by Peter B. Brady, of the New York State Federation of Labor.

Self-Made Censor Welcomed to Debate

FRED S. MEYER, director of the Palace theatre, of Hamilton, Ohio, is an exhibitor who is ready to take advantage of the opportunity to bring the censor question in his city to a quick decision. The following appeared in his weekly program:

"There is a man in our town who has appointed himself more or less of a critic and censor of motion pictures. If he were just an ordinary man, we'd pay no attention to him, but the fact that he is the head of a big institution and a man supposed to 'know better,' deserves some attention from us. Same is given to him herewith with the assurance that any time he's man enough to come out in the open and meet us at any joint debate, we'll be glad to do so. Any time and any place."

The hearing was set for 10 o'clock. On Monday night, a special car out of New York City, brought some thirty or more producers and others to Albany. Other cities, including Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo, had their representatives present.

Without any knowledge of which bill would be the first to receive consideration before Governor Miller, the producers and others were at the state capitol before 10 o'clock in the morning.

Five hearings had been set for the day. By noon it became evident that the censorship measure could not be discussed until at least late in the afternoon. An adjournment was taken at 1:30 for an hour.

The censorship hearing did not get under way until shortly before 4 o'clock. It lasted until 7:45 p. m. The censorship measure was the last bill to be considered.

At the outset Governor Miller stated that he would hear all persons present who desired to speak either for or against the measure, despite the fact that he had been listening to arguments on other bills from 10 o'clock in the morning.

Paul D. Cravath was introduced as the first speaker in opposition to the bill. Mr. Cravath went on to outline to the Governor the magnitude of the industry, informing the Governor that one of the concerns which was represented at the hearing, had an investment of over $60,000,000, and that the twenty companies which were acting together on the proposition which would be placed before the Governor, as a compromise to censorship, had an investment of at least $250,000,000. Mr. Cravath said that he mentioned this fact as better illustrating the strength of the industry and its ability to carry out the program which it had outlined.

"I shall not take your time," said Mr. Cravath, addressing himself to the Governor, "to state the fundamental inherent objections to censorship." To this the Governor replied:

"Censorship in itself is to my mind a thing to be avoided unless some greater evil results by its avoidance."

Mr. Cravath: "I assume that you would not favor censorship unless you felt the exigency was very great and that censorship was the only effective means of remedying evils which we must agree exist. I am convinced that as the industry is now constituted and managed, its leaders, realizing, as they do, the seriousness of the emergency, are prepared to carry through their own reform, and they are not only willing, but prepared to do it. I believe that the program that these producers have drafted will effectively purge the industry of a certain kind of film and advertising that have brought so much discredit to it, and that have been the occasion of the movement that has finally brought about this bill."

H. D. Connick, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Gabriel Hess, of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Peter B. Brady, of the New York State Federation of Labor, and Augustus Thomas, of the Authors' League of America, spoke in turn against the Lusk-Clayton bill. President Charles O'Reilly, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, also presented a brief against the measure, as did Everett D. Martin, of Cooper Union Forum. What was generally regarded as the most masterly address of the afternoon was that of Judge Almet F. Jenks, of New York, who was formerly on the bench with Governor Miller. During the course of his talk Judge Jenks went over the bill, section by section, showing its faulty construction in a legal standpoint.

"What does this law do?" inquired Judge Jenks. It concedes to three persons of 'education and experience'—who, I want to know, passes upon the 'education and experience'? Has there ever been a board of censorship in New York State?

"Why should a committee of these people, of no experience and practice, with no standard, other than their own peculiar minds, have the power of determining as to whether this great industry should be halted?"

Judge Jenks called Governor Miller's attention to Section 7, which he said was one of the most serious in the entire bill. The Judge spent some time in outlining his version of this section.

Judge Jenks informed Governor Miller that he would file with him during the next few days an opinion on the legal aspects of the Lusk-Clayton measure.

Among the speakers in favor of the measure were Charles T. Tobin, Clarence Hamlin of Buffalo, Mrs. Clarence Waterman of Brooklyn, Dr. W. O. Stillman of the American Humane Society, Canon William C. Chase of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Allen O'Grady, former Deputy Police Commissioner in New York City. Mr. Hamlin attacked the advertising put out to aid certain pictures, while Mrs. Waterman referred to the National Board of Review as "a smokescreen for the motion picture people."

Applause greeted Mrs. C. B. Richards, former head of the Women's Division of the War Labor Board, when she concluded a short speech in which she said that she did not believe motion pictures were as bad as they were painted.

"I believe that some improvement should be provided," said Mrs. Richards, and the proposition that has been suggested today could bring this about. Let us have better pictures, but let us have them as the result of a thorough investigation, under the judgment, in the words of Theodore Roosevelt, of a square deal."

The proposal submitted by the principal producers and distributors for Governor Miller's consideration follows:

"We recognize that a certain number of films and advertisements of films have been so objectionable as to bring discredit on the entire moving picture industry. We also recognize that the moving picture industry has not thus far wholly succeeded in working out effective measures to prevent the exhibition of objectionable films and advertisements.

"We agree that the public interest requires that effective measures be taken to prevent the exhibition of objectionable films and advertisements. For reasons that have been very fully stated at the legislative hearings we do not believe that this can be effectively accomplished by State censorship, especially considering the danger that censorship in a few states, including New York, will be followed by censorship in most of the States.

"We believe the subject of the most effective means of ridding the moving picture industry of objectionable productions cannot adequately be dealt with until it has been fully studied not only by the producers and theatre owners, but also by some competent commission charged primarily with the protection of the public.

"We would welcome the appointment of such a commission and would co-operate with it in every way in our power.

"We, therefore, respectfully request you, the Governor, to appoint a commission of five disinterested persons qualified by their experience and their interest in public affairs to make a thorough and sympathetic investigation of the moving picture industry and report to you their recommendations as to the best means of protecting the industry and the public against objectionable films and advertisements. We will be glad to provide the funds for the compensation and expenses of such a commission and of such a staff of assistants as they may find it necessary to employ. We recognize that such a commission would be extra-legal. They would not have any legal authority, but our feeling is that you could appoint a commision of such eminence—men and women of such eminence, of such experience and such authority—that their recommendation would go very far to satisfy legislators, public opinion and the industry itself.

"We propose at once to establish and to maintain an editorial committee supported by the principal producers of moving pictures, to whom we will submit all films of our own production and whose directions we will follow. It is also intended that all other producers in this country will be afforded an opportunity of submitting their films to this editorial committee. We propose to do everything in our power to prevent the exhibition of films hereafter released which have not been approved by the new editorial committee. As a means of acomplishing this end, the producing companies, whom we represent, will pursue the policy of withholding their services from theatres that insist on exhibiting films hereafter released that have not been approved by the new editorial committee."

Among the prominent persons who were present at the hearing were:

Oscar A. Price, of Associated Producers; William A. Brady, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; George A. Skinner, of Educational Films Corporation; H. D. Connick, Lee Counselman, E. J. V. Ludvigh, Gayer C. Dominick, John C. Flinn and R. W. Saunders, of Famous Players-Lasky; William Fox and Saul E. Rogers, of William Fox Films Corporation; F. A. Gudger, Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; George P. Bissell, of the Du Pont interests and Laid & Co., Wilmington; J. Robert Rubin, of Metro Pictures Corporation; John G. Pembleton, of Griffith Enterprises; Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film Company; Harry J. Shepard, of Kineto Company of America; Paul Gulig, of L-KO Pictures and Universal Film Manufacturing Company; David Bernstein and Charles E. Danforth, of the Marcus Loew, Inc.; I. E. Chadwick, of Merit Films; M. S. Epstein, of Norma Talmadge Film Company; Mrs. R. Gleason, of Constance Talmadge Company; Morris Kohn ,of Realart Pictures Corporation; Charles C. Pettijohn, of Selznick Corporation; John M. Quinn, of Vitagraph Company of America; F. A. Gudger, of Bray Pictographs; Katherine Curtis, of Associated First National Pictures and Katherine Curtis Productions; Edward Earl, of Nicholas Power Company; H. S. Lott, of Bell and Howell Company; William A. Johnston, of Motion Picture News; Luella O. Parsons, of Morning Telegraph; William Rubin, of Theatrical Association of Syracuse; and Frederick H. Elliott and Lloyd Willis, of National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Benjamin B. Hampton, through J. W. Glenister, of Federal Photoplays, was represented at the hearing, and a telegram which he sent was added to the producers testimony. Mr. Hampton emphasized the fact that this year was the first in which clean leaders of the industry have had sufficient backing of the public and the rank and file of the industry to enable them to being about the needed reforms.

Mr. Hampton also used as an argument the fact that Dr. Crafts in a recent sermon announced he had decided to suspend efforts for censorship and Federal Commission plan and would work for police power. The leader of the reform movement also spoke very cordially of his meeting with producers on the Coast, according to Mr. Hampton.

Dr. Crafts, stated Mr. Hampton, declared that blue-Sunday movements were a fake and that he feels the anti-blue-Sunday movement ought to be turned into a movement for something useful along the lines of cooperating with the clean picture men in their present movement.

"Now that Dr. Crafts," wired the producers, "the father of censorship, has also dropped his commission plan in favor of cooperation and the use of police power, surely Governor Miller will want to cooperate with the picture leaders."

"Topics of the Day" Contract Renewed by Pathe

TIMELY FILMS, INC., producing Literary Digest's "Topics of the Day," has renewed its distributing contract with Pathe Exchange, Inc. The new contract covers a long term. Inaugurated as an experiment, "Topics of the Day" immediately gained favor with the theatregoing public, and today it is a feature attraction in a high percentage of the motion picture and vaudeville theatres throughout the country.

Coincident with the announcement of the renewal of the contract with Pathe, "Topics of the Day" is preparing to celebrate the completion of its third year of screen life. This takes place during the week of April 24.

Kansas Reformers Out for Sunday Closing

Staid old Kansas has, temporarily at least, turned a deaf ear to the wail of the unauthorized motion picture censor and the alleged reformer. For the last few weeks Sunday motion pictures in the Sunflower State have been in seeming danger. The spotlight of "reformation" was turned on exhibitors who operated on Sundays. In Leavenworth, Kansas City, Kan., and Atchison, the three largest cities in the State in which Sunday movies are shown, complaints from various welfare organizations were sent to Governor Allen.

In Kansas City, Kan., where the battle waged hottest, plans were arranged whereby a committee should call on the Governor and protest in behalf of the reformers against Sunday movies. Then, much to the embarrassment of the proponents of a "blue Sunday," the Governor left Topeka, the capital, for an extended trip without as much as an inkling of action towards the proposed abolition of Sunday movies. Before leaving Governor Allen announced that he probably would begin an investigation of various complaints, but did not commit himself about Sunday movies.

Kansas Governor to Study Censorship Problems

Governor Allen of Kansas is planning to spend most of the month of May in studying the motion picture censorship problems. For the last three months, Frank Roberts of Oskaloosa, Kan., has been studying the censorship in Maryland, Ohio and Pennsylvania. He is now holding a conference with motion picture exhibitors, representatives of producers and patrons of picture shows. Roberts will present the material he has gathered to the governor.

Then the producers, exhibitors and patrons of the movies will be called to the governor's office for conference to determine whether or not it is possible to draft a standard of censorship rules.

Tony Sarg, Illustrator, Enters Picture Fold

Tony Sarg, one of America's best known illustrators, has entered into film work and the initial subject of a series he is making will be seen at two big playhouses next week. The Rialto, New York, and the Stanley, in Philadelphia, have both arranged for advance showings.

Tony Sarg's work is well known in the pages of the Saturday Evening Post, and he is especially commissioned to illustrate all of Irvin Cobb's work. "Tony Sarg's Marionettes" have been frequent attractions in legitimate theatres on Broadway.

Associated with the artist in the animated screen work is H. M. Dawley, responsible for the successful novelty, "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain."

Seek to Stop Showing of "Passion" in Cleveland

A suit to stop the showing of "Passion" next week at the Allen theatre, Cleveland, O., was brought on April 20 in the Common Pleas Court against Associated First National of New York, and the Allen Theatre Company. It is alleged that all First National pictures belong to the Stillman Theatre Company.

Following the recent decision of the local courts that the original First National contracts are valid, that the recent re-organization of the First National organization did not invalidate the original contracts entered into between First National and its franchise holders, and that the Loew theatres shall exhibit first runs of all First National pictures, the Loew theatres of Cleveland entered suit against the First National Exhibitor's Company and against the Allen theatre.

Judge Brenon issued a temporary injunction to the Loew interests last Saturday afternoon, restraining the Allen theatre from showing the picture. The Stillman Theatre Company, under which the injunction was granted, was required to put up a $25,000 bond pending the final hearing on the restraining order.

"Passion" has been laid away to rest in peace until the courts decide whether it is included in the regular First National releases, as is claimed by the Stillman Theatre Co., or whether it is, as is claimed for it by First National, a special picture to be handled separately and apart from the franchise pictures.

Saxe House in Michigan to Open May 7

Saxe Amusement Enterprises of Milwaukee, franchise holder in the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the Wisconsin territory, has announced May 7th as the opening date for its new theatre in Green Bay.

The new theatre has already been christened the Strand. The seating capacity is 1,000 and the interior color scheme is an original conception with rose, crimson and gold predominating.

E. J. Weisfeldt, who arranges the prologues and general presentation for the Milwaukee Strand, will perform the same duties for the Green Bay Strand.

Ass'd Producers Appoints Six Branch Managers

Six appointments to branch office managerships were announced by General Manager Al Lichtman of Associated Producers, Inc., during the past week. All of the appointees are now at work in their respective territories. They are: Geo. S. Jeffrey, Boston; Ben W. Beadell, Chicago; E. C. Leeves, Dallas; E. S. Flynn, Detroit; S. E. Fried, Minneapolis; F. C. Bonistall, Pittsburg.

On the left Joseph A. Brady, appointed director of advertising and publicity for Associated Exhibitors, and on the right Roy Crawford, treasurer of that organization

Crawford Made Treasurer of Associated Exhibitors

Announcement has been made of the election of Roy Crawford, of Topeka, Kansas, as treasurer of The Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Crawford arrived in New York and has already assumed active work at the home-office of The Associated Exhibitors, New York City. He brings to the organization a broad business experience covering many years in the amusement field. His interests have not been confined only to the motion picture industry, but have also extended to theatrical interests as well.

Baltimore Rivoli Forced to Withdraw "The Kid"

Injunction proceedings instituted before Judge Stump by the Victoria, Garden and Hippodrome theatres in Baltimore against the Rivoli theatre, also of that city, forced the Rivoli to withdraw its presentation of "The Kid" the week of April 25-30. The comedy was to have run at all four houses simultaneously.

In court the combined interests alleged that their contracts made in 1917 for eight Chaplin pictures with the now non-extant First National Exhibitors' Circuit amply covered their rights. The absorption of the organization by the Associated First National Pictures, both parent and subsidiary bodies, the complainants argued, failed to alter circumstances. The Victoria claimed six days protection and four weeks allowance for an area taking in the Rivoli's location.

Stanley Co. Planning New Philadelphia House

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, announces that work will be begun at an early date on the erection of a new theatre in Philadelphia, plans for which have been prepared. The lease of the company on the Bingham Hotel expired on May 1st.

The new building plans call for an office building and stores on Market and 11th streets. The theatre will be erected in the rear and will seat 4,000.

Illinois Exhibitors' Ass'n Elects Officers

The purpose of Mr. Kent's trip chiefly to arrange for the fall business, an while at the Lasky studio he is devotin much time to seeing the forthcoming pi tures to be released by Paramount. M Kent has also had numerous business con ferences with Jesse L. Lasky, first vic president; Cecil B. DeMille, director ger eral; Charles Eyton, general manager the studio, and others. In his visits to th studio he has been accompanied by He man Wobber, district manager at Sa Francisco, and O. V. Traggardh, manag of the Los Angeles exchange.

Lusk Sailing for Europe

Norbert Lusk, representing Hugo Ba lin, leaves on the S. S. Aquitania May on an errand of importance to the painte producer. By appointment he will me in Cornwall a prominent author who books have never found their way to th screen.

Coast Film Organization Chooses Leaders

With a complete Board of Directors consisting of twenty-five representative people of the West Coast film industry elected, and with officers and executive committees named by the Board of Directors, the recently formed Anti-Blue Law, Anti-Censorship organization begins business in earnest to avoid undesirable conditions for the film industry.

The Board of Directors is composed of Ralph Lewis, representing the Actors' Association; Charles H. Kyson, Art Directors' Association; Frank S. Brown, Electrical Engineers; Scott R. Beal, Assistant Directors' Association; Rob Wagner, Screen Writers' Guild; Frank E. Woods, Screen Writers' Guild; Philip E. Rosen, American Society of Cinematographers; Reginald Barker, Motion Picture Directors' Association; William D. Taylor, Motion Picture Directors' Association; Joseph Engel, Frank A. Garbutt, Abraham Lehr, W. J. Reynolds, W. S. Smith, Sol Wurtzel, Motion Picture Directors' Association; Edwin A. Keller, Operators' Union; Ted Taylor, publicity writer; Frederick Palmer, Scenario School; Fred A. Miller and Frances Woodward, Los Angeles Theatre Managers' Association; Glen Harper, Theatre Owners' Association; Edward Roberts, Motion Picture Press, and the Rev. Nearl Dodd.

The organization will not have a president, but the chief officer will be known as Chairman. Frank A. Garbutt was elected to this position for the first year. The other officers selected are: Vice-Chairmen, William S. Smith, Sol Wurtzel, Joseph Engel, Frank E. Woods, William D. Taylor, Ed Roberts; Secretary, Ted Taylor; Treasurer, W. J. Reynolds.

The Executive Committee is as follows: Frank A. Garbutt, Frank S. Brown of Electrical Engineers, Charles H. Christie, Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn; Fred A. Miller, California Theatre; Glen Harper, Theatre Owners' Association; J. H. Goldberg, Film Exchange Board of Trade.

S. J. Goldman Is Vice-President of Warren Corp.

Sidney J. Goldman, for six years associated in motion pictures with F. B. Warren, during which time he has represented the interests in the Chicago territory of Goldwyn, Hodkinson and Associated Producers, has been elected a vice-president of the F. B. Warren Corporation and placed in charge of the central district of the United States for this new distributing factor.

Mr. Goldman originally joined Mr. Warren in the Goldwyn organizations as manager of the Chicago office, coming from the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises.

He resigned last week as Chicago manager for Associated Producers and has gone to the Pacific Coast, where he will spend the month of May watching the making of productions for the new company.

Should Demand German Film Reciprocity

"UNITED STATES has nothing to fear from an invasion of German films," said Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in discussing the demand for a tariff against German films coming into this country. "In fact, I am of the opinion that America should welcome the best films not only from Germany but from every other nation on the face of the globe where productions are made. I am fairly of the belief that the American producer is the superior of any other nationality.

"But I am strongly of the opinion that the United States Government should immediately make every endeavor to have the barrier which Germany has raised against our films removed. Foreign countries have every freedom for bringing films into this country, and there should be no reason in the world why American films should not have the same privilege in the foreign countries. As it is, Germany permits only 15 per cent of the total amount of films in circulation in Germany to be brought in from foreign countries."

Nine New Incorporations in New York State

Nine companies incorporated in the motion picture business in New York State during the past week, with a capitalization amounting to over $700,000. These concerns with their directors and the amount of capitalization include the Leader Theatres, Inc., $32,000, with Max Shapiro, Julius Gulkis and Mitchell Kay, of Brooklyn; Harris Dickson Film Corporation, $1,000, and the Blue Ribbon Pictures, $33,000, both these companies having for their directors W. P. Munsell, Hayward Ginn and Madison Corey, of New York; Fitzer Amusement Company, Fabius, $125,000, Max, Rae and Mitchell Fitzer, of Syracuse; Delancey Theatre, Inc., $250,000, Harry Blinderman, New York; Samuel Hollander and Louis Kahn, Brooklyn; Syndicated Exhibitors Exchanges, $3,000, Joseph Seiden, Charles N. David, D. I. Ewald, New York; the Magic Crystal Screen Company, for the manufacture of motion picture screens, $20,000, L. A. Wilczek, Max Levy, Hannah Kava, New York; the Al Gilbert Film Productions, $250,000, Albert Gilbert, V. Mitarotonda Joseph Errico, New York; Roosevelt Amusement Corporation, $5,000, Samuel Schwartz, M. D. Schwartz, Oscar Muller, New York.

Chas. H. Williams Tendered Farewell Dinner

Charles H. Williams, who has managed the Providence Strand theatre since its opening in 1915, was tendered a complimentary dinner on Sunday, April 10, by the Board of Directors of the house. The dinner marked the termination of Mr. Williams' connection with the house, which he opened and managed six years.

Lieutenant Richard Gamble, Police Censor of Providence, and the entire staff of the house were guests of the Board.

Penn Legislature Acts on Motion Picture Bills

The last week in April, generally agreed upon by the party leaders as the final one of the biennial session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, opened with strong prospects of the bill that would tax the gross receipts of motion picture and other theatres being enacted into law. However, there seemed to be reasonable chance that—as a concession to the motion picture interests, which have attacked the measure throughout the session as extremely unjust, inasmuch as it imposes a tax on receipts even on the days when a theatre actually loses money—an amendment might be passed which would reduce the amount of the tax. The bill as introduced provided for a one per cent tax on all gross receipts of theatres, and it seemed probable that if enacted into law the amount of the percentage would be reduced.

A source of considerable apprehension to the motion picture interests was removed when the Senate put the quietus on the Equal Rights bill after it had passed the House by a big margin of votes. The measure, which would have given negroes the same rights in theatres and other places as white persons enjoy, will slumber in a committee pigeonhole, with no further chance of being acted upon in the present session of the Legislature.

The second bill, introduced by Senator McConnell, providing for more than doubling the payroll of the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors, by increasing it from $35,000 to $81,000 a year, has passed the Senate and reached the third reading calendar of the House.

The "Equal Rights" bill, which would have given colored persons the same rights as the whites in theatres and other places of public accommodations, was practically killed in the Pennsylvania Senate on Tuesday, April 19th, when that body, by a vote of 39 to 9, sustained the law and ordered the committee in deciding not to report the message, which had been passed by the House.

Hoover Relief Fund Total Still Increasing

The motion picture industry is still adding to the Hoover fund for the relief of starving children in Eastern and Central Europe. Although with the filing of their formal report it showed that the picture industry subscribed $2,687,519.57, this amount will apparently be materially increased by belated returns which were not included in the report.

Oregon, for instance, which was originally credited with $1,680.25, has increased its collections to $4,275.09. News of this has been received by C. C. Pettijohn, acting chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Hoover drive, in a letter from W. A. Graeper. The sum mentioned above has been turned over by Mr. Graeper to Robert Strong, state chairman of Oregon for the European Relief Council.

Goldwyn Branch Managers to Meet on Coast

Executives and Managers to Convene in May in Company's Coast Studios

EXECUTIVES of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the managers of the twenty-two branch exchanges will meet at the Goldwyn studios, Culver City, Calif., for a branch managers' convention the second week in May.

Samuel Goldwyn, who is due back from Europe, May 1, will leave New York, May 4 with others from the Eastern offices of the company. F. J. Godsol, chairman of the board of directors, will attend the convention, as will Alfred Weiss, vice-president of the Distributing Corporation; A. S. Aronson, vice-president and general sales manager; Eric Shay, assistant treasurer, and Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity.

This convention is the first time in the history of the Goldwyn company that a sale convention has been held at the production headquarters. It is the purpose of the Goldwyn executives to bring the branch managers in closer touch with the actual making of the pictures which they market. A number of big productions scheduled for release next fall will be given advance showings at the studio theatre.

Vice-president Abraham Lehr, in charge of production, will take an active part in the convention, affording the branch managers a thorough insight into the operation of the studios and giving them as much advance information as possible about the features which they will receive during the coming season.

With this information as a basis for a plan of action, Sales Manager Aronson will formulate a definite sales campaign in which the characteristics of each picture will be considered. Every department of the manufacturing and marketing of pictures will be touched upon in addresses delivered by Mr. Goldwyn, Mr. Godsol, Mr. Aronson, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Schay, Mr. Dietz and others.

In addition to the business matters to be considered, it is expected that several of the Goldwyn authors now at Culver City will discuss various artistic phases of the motion picture. Rupert Hughes, whose comedy "Scratch My Back" was one of the biggest Goldwyn moneymakers of the past year for exhibitors, is down on the list of speakers.

The program is so arranged that J. G. Hawks, western scenario editor, and other studio executives, will have an opportunity to confer with the branch managers in order to get first hand information about the types of photoplay most in demand in different parts of the country.

L. M. Rubens, head of the Rubens Brothers' Theatrical Enterprises of Joliet, Ill., who has been elected president of the Motion Picture Theatrical Owners of the state

The following branch managers who are planning to attend the convention are: Arthur Lucas, Atlanta, Ga.; J. A. Koerpel, Boston; George A. Hickey, Buffalo, N. Y.; Cecil E. Maberry, Chicago; Jack Stewart, Cincinnati, O.; W. J. Kimes, Cleveland, O.; L. B. Remy, Dallas, Tex.; Ben Fish, Denver, Colo.; J. E. Flynn, Detroit, Mich.; W. E. Truog, Kansas City, Mo.; M. Wolf, Los Angeles, Cal.; Newton Davis, Minneapolis, Minn.; S. Eckman, Jr., New York; Felix Mendelssohn, Philadelphia; Nat Barach, Pittsburgh, Pa.; G. C. Parsons, San Francisco, Cal.; Jack Weil, St. Louis, Mo.; W. E. Banford, Seattle, Washington; W. A. Busch, Washington, D. C.; J. W. Pope, Jr., New Orleans, La.; E. J. MacIvor, Omaha, Neb.; Charles Knickerbocker, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Nebraska Exhibitor Loses Heavy Damage Suit

Charles G. Binderup of Minden, Neb., former owner of a chain of motion picture theatres throughout Nebraska and Kansas, lost a $750,000 damage suit in federal court at Omaha on April 21 against the following film exchanges: Pathe, First National, A. H. Blank Film Enterprises, Hall-Mark Picture Corporation, Universal, Carl E. Laemmle. C. E. Holah (former manager of A. H. Blank Enterprises) and members of the Omaha Film Board of Trade.

Mr. Binderup had filed the suit two years ago under the Sherman anti-trust act, alleging restraint of trade to the extent of bankrupting him.

Truce Declared in Kansas City Censor Fight

A truce has been declared in Kansas City between the theatre-owners and the Citizens' Censorship Committee on the question of city censorship for pictures. Recently the city's exhibitors had an amendment passed by the city council by the terms of which twenty instead of fifteen persons were necessary to sign a petition of protest calling for the investigation of any motion picture, alleged to be objectionable by the Kansas City Motion Picture Board. The amendment moreover provided that the signers had to be taxpayers. The mayor vetoed this measure.

Again it looked as if the battle were to be waged all over. However, representatives of the motion picture interests decided upon a conference with representatives of the Citizens' Censorship Committee. This resulted in a compromise, the censorship proponents agreeing to cease hostilities on their side and the picture interests agreeing to withdraw their support of the amendment just agitated. It was also agreed in the conference that an amendment, which would be fair to exhibitors and producers, would be submitted to the city council at an early date.

Rival Interests in Controversy Over Bldg Sites

Months of controversy have resulted in Baltimore in Mayor Broening signing ordinances permitting the erection of theatres by rival interests at the northwest and southwest corners of Thirty-third street, Boulevard and Greenmount avenue.

The American Theatres Company, Alfred G. Buck, president, was the first to try to get permission from the city to build. Then Palmore and Homand, well-known film distributors, appeared with a request to build at the same intersection and opposite the American Theatre Company's site. The two ordinances seesawed through the two branches of the Baltimore City Council, and for a time both were in danger of not passing.

The American Theatres Company, since its ordinance has been O. K.'d, has used nearly half page advertisements to announce plans. Excavation of its foundation has started, and the opening is planned for September.

Operators' Bill at Albany Dies in Committee

The Flynn bill, introduced in the New York State Legislature, several weeks ago, and which related to the examination of all motion-picture operators, died in committee at Albany, N. Y., last Saturday, when the legislature concluded its annual session. A hearing on the bill was held several weeks ago, at which time operators from New York and Buffalo were present and spoke.

Jury Finds Sunday Movies Are a Necessity

W. F. Harris, George Poindexter and Joseph Gold, Hopewell, Va., exhibitors were found not guilty of violating the state blue laws recently. The jury found that motion picture shows were a necessity in the city at the present time.

It is reported that A. L. Jones, attorney for the picture men, was being deprived of his Sunday school class in a local church for defending the accused.

Since the trial two churches have adopted a resolution declaring a boycott on the theatres until they close on Sunday, but according to W. F. Harris, secretary of the Broadway Theatre, Inc., no effect has been felt, but rather that action served as a good advertisement.

J. R. Grainger to Represent Allen Holubar

J. R. Grainger, Eastern Manager of Marshall Neilan Productions and sales representative for Charlie Chaplin, has closed with Allen Holubar, to represent that director in the East.

Promptly following the signing of a new contract with Associated First National Exhibitors for the distribution of his future product, Mr. Holubar, through special arrangement with Mr. Neilan, secured Mr. Grainger's services to pass on all contracts under his new agreement.

The A. M. P. A. unanimously adopted a resolution extending the association's appreciation of the intelligent stand taken by the New York Evening Mail and the New York Globe on the censorship question during the recent hearings at Albany.

Another Chain of Theatres for Chicago, Is Report

Chicago is to have another chain of big moving picture houses, according to Emil Stern, who announces that architects are at work on preliminary sketches for the first of the new houses, which is to be a 4,000-seat theatre, located on Belmont Avenue, west of the intersection of Ashland and Lincoln Avenues.

The structure will be built on a site having a frontage of 266 feet and a depth of 200 feet, and will include, besides the theatre, forty or fifty offices, several ground floor stores and a large court apartment building in the rear. The investment in this house will approximate, it is understood, $2,000,000, and the other theatres contemplated also will be large de luxe theatres.

Mr. Stern is widely known in the industry as general manager for Lubliner & Trinz. It is understood that in the present transaction Mr. Stern is not representing Lubliner & Trinz, but is heading a new syndicate.

Parent Teachers to Co-operate with Producers

On Wednesday, April 20, a meeting was held at the Deshler Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, by the executive committee of the State Parent-Teachers' Association for the purpose of discussing the motion picture problems in Ohio. Attending this conference was C. C. Pettijohn, representing the National Producers, James A. Maddox, representing the exhibitors of Ohio, William S. Bundy, representing the Governor of Ohio and Gilbert C. Taylor, of the House of Representatives.

It was decided by unanimous vote by the executive committee of the Parent Teachers' Association to cooperate with the producers and exhibitors, in bringing about a higher standard of motion pictures.

It is the plan of the State Parent Teachers' Association, through its president, Mrs. Samuel Marshall Williams and Mrs. A. B. Nelles, president of the Franklin County Association, to have a resolution urging cooperation adopted by the national meeting of Parent Teachers' Association and Congress of Mothers, which takes place at Washington, D. C. during the week of April 25. If the National Association adopts the resolution, it will be asked to name a national committee to cooperate with the The Theatre Owners of America and the Producers' Association in working out a definite program. A detailed plan has been worked out and will be presented by the Ohio delegates.

Jersey City House Opens

The Central theatre in Jersey City, N. J., was formally opened on the evening of April 27th. The house is owned by the National-Central Theatres, Inc., of which Louis F. Blumenthal is president.

A Plan to Create Harmony in the Motion Picture Industry

By Benj. B. Hampton

SOMETIMES it pays us to disregard details, and, cutting through the underbrush that obscures vision, go directly to the point.

One pressing need in the motion picture industry today is unification of warring elements. If it is possible to bring about harmony inside the industry, it will be possible to meet successfully the menace of censorship, blue Sunday laws and taxation.

How, then, is it possible to accomplish harmony so that a united industry can move to a solution of its problem?

Efforts up to date have been unsuccessful, due, I believe, to our lack of courage to admit that the industry can never be united until an exhibitor is put at the head of a national association.

It may be startling for a producer to express an opinion such as this. But it seems to me that the logic of the situation compels every fair-minded man to admit that our lack of harmony, our civil war, is due to our failure to realize the position of the exhibitor in the industry.

The "producer" is precisely what the term indicates—he produces the product, which is passed along to the middleman or the distributor for sale to the retailer. In almost any other industry the retailer occupies a position subordinate to that of the manufacturer, but distinctly and emphatically this is not the case with motion pictures. In this industry the exhibitor is exceptionally important because of the peculiar relation of pictures to the public.

The theatre owner is not merely a buyer and seller of commodities, as is the shoe merchant, the dry goods man or any other retailer in the town. The exhibitor occupies a position somewhere between the newspaper, the public school and the church. He is not a mere retail merchant—he is a provider of entertainment and education, and that places him in an extremely peculiar, important position in his community.

The exhibitor, because of the very nature of his business, must meet not only the problems of a retail merchant, but he must face continually the criticisms and attacks of all the people who disapprove of the type of merchandise he is selling. Unlike any other retail merchant, the theatre owner must deal daily, almost hourly, with the reform elements in his community. When we say that he is in the front line trenches we do not exaggerate his position.

If some of the men who sit in Longacre Square and attempt to control this industry from Broadway hotels would spend a few months in dealing with exhibitors' problems face to face they would soon realize that this industry cannot be ruled autocratically by any group, no matter whether it is composed of producers, distributors or exhibitors. The industry is too big; it is spread over too much territory; too much brains and too much intelligence are involved in it to permit it to be controlled by any autocratic group. Primarily it is necessary that this industry be controlled democratically. That is to say, it must be controlled by the majority of the people who have investments of money, energy and thought in the industry.

This brings us logically to the largest group in the industry, undoubtedly the exhibitor group. More people are employed in the exhibition of pictures, more capital is invested in exhibition, more problems have to be met by exhibitors in their dealings with the public. Unquestionably, from the standpoint of its size and from the standpoint of capital invested, the exhibitor group is by far the most important commercial group in the industry.

Not alone is the commercial angle to be considered. To my mind, unquestionably the most important phase of the entire situation is the relation of the exhibitor to the public. I repeat that he is the man who comes into direct daily contact with all the elements that are fighting motion pictures. The producer is isolated, insulated—he is a long, long way off from attack. The exhibitor meets it every day, every hour at his box office. Every evangelist who goes to a town and starts a "blue Sunday" agitation, every reformer who wants censorship, whether city, State or Federal, attacks the exhibitor in his own town at his own box office.

I believe the one way to bring about harmany in the industry is to admit the facts and go frankly to the exhibitors and say to them:

"Gentlemen, we want you to nominate the president of a national association. We will line up with you to bring about harmony to meet the common enemy and to work out our problems. We recognize that you furnish us with our contract with the public. It is through you that we must deal with the public, and therefore we accept your leadership in these relations."

In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to my personal position in this matter, let me say that my suggestions are offered impersonally. I am here dealing with no individuals and no associations.

Distinctly and emphatically I am not criticizing any associations nor any individuals connected with any of the associations now in existence. My efforts to bring about better understanding of the problems and perils of motion pictures are impersonal. Whatever little I can do, in writing or speaking, is done freely, because of my faith in pictures and my belief that the public needs pictures. I want to see the art progress and the industry grow greater. In stating my conviction that a united industry is not possible until producers and distributors willingly accept an exhibitor as the head of a national association, I am not referring in any way, directly or indirectly, by statement or by innuendo to any existing organizations, nor to any persons.

My earnest feeling is that in our efforts to create a national association that will embrace all the elements of the industry we have been in error in disregarding the logic of the situation. We have been trying to cause the tail to wag the dog, and the dog will not be wagged by the tail.

There was a time, years ago, when the producer or the distributor was the dominating factor in the industry. We ought to frankly recognize the fact that this era passed out of existence when the nickelodeon began to disappear. The exhibitors are today sound, solid, responsible business men, with millions of dollars permanently invested in their enterprises. Consequently their relation toward the business must be one of permanence.

Too many producers and distributors are impelled by a desire for quick and immediate returns. Their investments are often largely or entirely of a liquid and temporary character, and their relation to the industry is not necessarily either solid or enduring. Certainly we have big, strong, well-managed producing concerns. But certainly also the issue has been obscured and confused by our failure to recognize clearly the steadily increasing importance and solidity of the exhibitor.

I believe it is time now to frankly admit that importance and to place the exhibitor at the head of a national association and then to work with him cordially and fully to bring every element in the industry into line.

Michigan Senate Buries Motion Picture Censorship Measure

THE Michigan censor bill, directed against motion pictures, was defeated on April 27, when after a two-hour debate, the Senate voted 20 to 9 against reporting it out of the State Affairs Committee.

The feeling against the bill throughout the state has been running high, and on one day alone, 45,000 petitions reached the Senate against the proposed legislation.

Free Speech and the Movies

By Paul L. Blakely, S.J.

THE demand for censorship of the moving-picture is now nation-wide. There is some fanaticism back of this demand, which is almost a "drive" in its dogged intensity, but, fundamentally, the movement is a protest against the exploitation of vice for commercial purposes. In the trade and out of it, decent men are agreed that some form of censorship or regulation is imperative, for it is an unfortunate fact that the trade is infested with men whose moral standards barely approximate the standards of the professional procurer. Conditions are so deplorable that, in their opinion, State or Federal censorship is the only remedy. The plan which they propose differs in detail according to local needs. Essentially, however, it means "pre-release censorship"; that is, all films must be reviewed and approved by a State or Federal Board before they can be exhibited to the public.

Now this plan might or might not destroy the improper film. But the question of prime importance is: Is it practicable? Let us grant that graft, politics, and bribery would never influence the appointment of the censors, or their decisions. Let us grant, further, that the moral standards of the censors would be generally acceptable, and their judgment such as to recommend itself to all good citizens. But has pre-release censorship a place in America? My first-hand acquaintance, which is not small, both with the evils of the trade and the wiles of producers and exhibitors does not prevent me from venturing an answer in the negative.

The Lusk bill, probably to be passed by the New York Assembly, is built on the pre-release censorship principle. In providing that no picture may be shown in public unless first approved by a State Board, the bill flatly contradicts, in my opinion, a principle embodied in the FederalConstitution and in the constitution of every State in the Union. This principle sets forth my right as a citizen to express my "sentiments" freely "on all subjects," being always responsible for the abuse of this right. Moreover, it not only forbids the enactment of any law which destroys free speech, but of any law which abridges it.

Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. (Constitution of the State of New York, section I.)

In varying form this section has appeared in all the constitutions of the State of New York, from 1777 to the present time.

From the plain wording of the section, it is clear that the right can be abused. The very men who wrote it, and the people who approved it, knew that the right would be abused by evil men to tear down the civil, moral and political structure they had built. Yet in spite of this knowledge, they established freedom of speech "on all subjects" as a constitutional right, placing all tampering with it beyond reach of the executive, the Assembly and the courts, because they knew that without it a free government of free men is an impossibility. What they wrote in this section is no empty declamation. They meant it.

It is urged, however, by friends of the Clayton-Lusk bill that State regulation of the moving-picture is not an act in restraint of free speech, but an act to control a licensed business.

EDITOR'S NOTE:—The article printed herewith appeared in the April 16 issue of America, the leading Catholic weekly review, under the caption, "Free Speech and the Movies." It is one of the most striking expositions of legalized censorship as a violation of the constitutional right of free speech that we have had the pleasure to read. We submit it herewith in full.

Evidence is not submitted to show that an act to control a licensed business is justified, even when it destroys free speech, and I find myself wholly unable to accept this view. The section above quoted refers to a right of the people with which the Assembly is forbidden to interfere. Its obvious purpose is to safeguard the right of "every citizen" to communicate "freely" to others "his sentiments on all subjects." In pursuance of this purpose the section enumerates two methods by which a sentiment may be communicated; speaking and writing. But the specific enumeration of these methods should not be construed to exclude any and all other methods. In recognition of the fact that a sentiment may, or at some future time might, be communicated in another manner, the section adds a term of general import, to "publish," that is, to make known in an intelligible manner. It cannot, therefore, be seriously urged that the section safeguards freedom in the communication of thought in two cases only, "writing" and "speaking," and withholds this freedom when the communication is published in any other manner.

An example may point this argument. I propose to communicate my "sentiments" to the public. I set them forth in an editorial, a poem, a short-story, or a cantata. These sentiments may be blasphemous, obscene, offensive to decent-living men, even subversive of all law and order. Nevertheless I am not obliged and cannot be obliged, even were I an habitual offender, to submit them to a State censor, because the Constitution protects my right as a citizen freely to "publish" my sentiments "on all subjects." State regulation can begin only after the fact of publication, by holding me responsible, when evidence is offered that I have abused my constitutional right. In like manner, if instead of printing my sentiments, I prefer to publish them in a speech, I cannot be obliged to submit my manuscript to the police, or to hold a rehearsal for a board of censors.

This I think will be granted. But if granted, I can find no valid reason why my constitutional right to publish my sentiments freely on all subjects should be denied if I elect to publish them in a moving-picture. I hold that my right to do this cannot be denied or abridged without destroying the constitutional guaranty of free speech.

But the manufacture, sale and exhibition of the moving-picture, it is said, is a licensed business. Granted. The accidental circumstance that I may wish to sell the finished expression of my sentiments cannot be wrested to destroy a right. Even Shakespeare went into the market, and orators, novelists, editors, lecturers, singers, and public entertainers very commonly sell their sentiments externalized by means of print, the human voice, or the phonograph record. But no one has ever urged seriously: You may give your books away, or your newspapers, or your magazines, or you may lecture or sing or act for the public, free of charge. Then we cannot interfere with your right to publish your sentiments on all subjects. But if you prepare a manuscript with the intention of selling it, or act or sing or lecture in a licensed hall, charging an admission-fee, then the section means nothing for you. You must submit your manuscript to State censors who will give or withhold, as they deem fit, permission to print; or, as the case may be, you must first rehearse your speeches, lectures, or songs, before the censors.

If to publish my sentiments does not mean to communicate them in any way that is intelligible to human beings, then as a constitutional guarantee, the free-speech sections of the Federal and State Constitutions are worthless. They may, possibly, protect my right to utter my sentiments by word of mouth or on paper. They destroy that right when I prefer to utter them on celluloid. And if the State can require me to submit my celluloid manuscript to censors, on the plea that I intend to sell the pictured manifestation of my thought, it must be admitted that the State can compel me to submit my manuscript, or my act, to censors unless I agree to give the externalized production to the public without cost.

To put the moving-picture beyond the pale of this constitutional right on the ground that it is an article of commerce, may or may not check the evils of the trade. But it most certainly is a movement most dangerous to all civil liberty.

Let the obvious now be added, that the present state of the moving-picture industry is nothing less than disgraceful. It needs reform, but in a constitutional government, a reform must be effected in a constitutional manner or it cannot be effected at all. The men back of the trade may be thugs, panderers and cut-throats, but even a felon has his day in court, and unless the constitutional forms are observed, he cannot be punished. Legislation of the Clayton-Lusk type will do infinitely more harm than good. Any law restraining or abridging the liberty of speech or of the press is unconstitutional and utterly out of harmony with American principles and procedure. Yet I venture to believe that all the constitutional sections which safeguard this precious right of free speech, provide a remedy in the provision that all citizens shall be held responsible for its abuse. If laws to punish the immoral producer or exhibitor do not exist, let them be enacted. If they are not enforced, then nothing less than an awakened and purified public consciousness will cure the evil. The steady combined efforts of our religious, educational and social organizations will do much to awaken that consciousness. But it is certain that reforms cannot be secured by enacting legislation which destroys a constitutional right.

Music and The Theatre

"How They Won the Game with Music"

By Charles D. Isaacson

NOW that the baseball season has begun I have written a little story for the amusement of the readers of the NEWS and for their use in their own publicity.

HOW THEY WON THE GAME WITH MUSIC

If in the course of my tale I make the grand faux pas of using expressions which are utterly out of the baseball fan's vocabulary—if in the development of my descriptions I use circumlocution with words, words, words, when a common, ordinary, garden variety of baseball parlance would be the better choice—you will pardon the offence I hope.

I am a musician. Not just a musician, if you please, but a musician who is extremely fond of the game. Now, no doubt you are instantly picturing a long-haired, mysterious-eyed individual. You are wrong, you would not know me for a maker of music until you heard me—and then, who knows what then?

I am not anything like a certain famous pianist from overseas. I would not mention his name, for since that first day at the Polo Grounds he has probably learned to measure his offences with red-faced embarrassment. He had just arrived from Russia. His name had been heralded over the country and at his first engagements the halls were packed to overflowing, he had been given ovations as are generally reserved for Presidential candidates—Democratic ones—Bryan ovations. The newspapers were full of praise for his art. Then we went to the baseball game.

I tried to explain it to him, and he seemed enthusiastic enough. It must have looked incongruous for the crowds about us to see my friend, with the long, curly locks, the esthetic face and long slender fingers, standing and shouting, "Go it," or whatever the translation of that is, in Russian.

After the game the excitement was still with him. We had dinner and there we met some of my newspaper friends. The pianist wanted to tell about the game. He did. I wish I could reproduce his language exactly to the gesticulations and accenting. It was something like this:

"It was wonderful. One gentleman stood up and picked the discus—the discus, that's right. This he hurled with force up to another, who caught it and twirled it back. It appears that the discus should not get to one man, and another tried with a long stick to break the discus. Once or twice he did stop the discus, and then proceeded to race around the fields. They call the field a jewel—not a ruby, some jewel though."

No, I am not like the Russian pianist.

But I am extremely fond of the game. It is a perfect hobby of mine to transport staid, mystic-looking artists from the studio to the diamond. I shall never forget the amazement of Paderewski when he saw his first game. In the case of Mischa Elman, the famous violinist, there is a fan whom the littlest boy on the street could not outshriek.

One day Caruso forgot himself. He goes to see the game whenever he has the opportunity. But one day he forgot he was Caruso and the possessor of the greatest voice in the world. He started to tell the umpire just what he thought of him in the choicest conglomeration of United States and Neapolitan slang. He was going at a great rate when his secretary came up, put his hand over the Caruso mouth and said: "You must sing tomorrow at the opera." For a fan of baseball, there is the popular Geraldine Farrar, and for a genuine expert on the game—an expert who could give even the great Hugh Fullerton some pointers—I introduce to you the meteorically successful Galli-Curci. Her first game was at a countryside resort. The guests were playing against the local boys. On the guests' side, the pitcher, well I had better confess it—I was the pitcher.

After the game Mme. Galli-Curci very naively said: "I think the local boys had you worried, didn't they? They didn't seem to care where you threw the ball—they always hit it, didn't they?" I said, "Madame, you are right. You are hereby appointed sporting editor of the Catskill Mountain News."

But all this is preliminary to my tale. And I have a story to tell which I believe will go down in the annals of baseball as something utterly unique.

Did you ever hear of a game where music was the star player?

I will tell you of that strange affair. It was in Sandusky, Ohio. The home team, headed by George Wiles, was in a closing combat with a visiting nine. The whole town had turned out to watch the event. Automobiles and carriages lined the streets on all sides of the park (a big, level lot). On the grass and on fences were the home-town fans and the foreigners. The town was in the best of spirits, the weather had been particularly genial, and everything pointed to an opportunity of a lifetime.

The Sandusky boys, however, were a little discontented. They had held their grievances to themselves, preferring not to dim the hopes of their citizens. The team had been badly battered. Local magnates had been making offers to the men and some of the stars had deserted for other aggregations. The Sandusky team before that time had been known as the fastest unit in that section of the country. Wiles had been responsible for the successes and now he felt himself liable for the failures. He had a tremendous sense of local pride, this Wiles and he assumed that the weight of the universe—the local universe—was upon his baseball shoulders.

So on this particular day, while they smiled and pretended to be on their happiest behavior the home team really nursed a secret fear of their dissipated strength and saw defeat staring them in the face. They did not know however, of the trump card which George Wiles was keeping back—did not know of the secret held by Wiles, the pitcher, the shortstop and another. Every now and then Wiles, the pitcher and the shortstop would look knowingly at each other, and each of the three would pass near the bleachers and wink significantly to an onlooker—the same in each case. The byplay was so cleverly handled that nobody realized that conspiracy was on—or if the fact had been sensed, some people would have wondered what the particular onlooker had in the bag at his side.

But the four conspirators and the rest of the home team smiled and practiced as if nothing were out of keeping with the calm, serene picture which the park then presented.

The game started. The onlookers gave the local boys a glowing reception. My, how the cries rose to heaven. The onlookers in the extreme assurance of their victory even gave a cordial cheer to the visitors, as if to say: "We like you, and we wish you no hard luck, but of course what's going to happen to you today is—well, you'll see. In the meantime, here's a little cheer to keep you up."

The visitors went to bat. They were donated instantly with four balls. The next man set a neat fielder on his initial attempt. The first inning found a straight line on the scoreboard where a round one should have been. But when the local fellows went up to bat they seemed unable to connect with the—not discus—I mean ball. They retired with a score which resembled Ponzi's ultimate resources—zero. The second, third, fourth were disastrous affairs. By the time the sixth inning had loomed, it was bad, bad, bad.

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Martin Quigley and Watterson R. Rothacker have a big (and perhaps dangerous) job ahead of them. They're to pick the winner in the Chicago Journal's beauty contest by which some Chicago girl will get a job with Christie Comedies. Lew Cody, who was out at the Rothacker Chicago plant, saw some of the photographs entered in the contest and immediately offered to be an associate judge but Martin and Watterson turned him down cold. Al Christie wired his congratulations and condolence. "In all Chicago there are not two men better equipped to do the job," he opined: The winner will be announced at the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union Ball at the Arena, May 5.

Manager Carl Harthill, of Reelcraft, attended the conference of Reelcraft officials in New York last week. Mr. Harthill is optimistic over the business outlook.

Dorothy Phillips and Allen Holubar were in Chicago for a few hours last week and took the opportunity to visit Balaban and Katz's Tivoli as the guest of Max Goldstein. Both Miss Phillips and Mr. Holubar expressed themselves as delighted with the theatre, which, they declared to be the finest house they have ever seen.

Manager Ben Beadell, of Associated, is back at his desk after a hurried trip to New York City.

Harry A. Spanuth, well known producer and distributor, and C. W. Spanuth, who also has a wide acquaintance in this territory, and recently of the Clark theatre, will open a state right exchange, serving Northern Illinois and Indiana on May 1. It will be known as the Commonwealth Exchange and will be located at 746 South Wabash avenue. During a recent visit to New York Mr. Spanuth closed for twelve feature productions and a series of three short subjects. According to his plans a feature will be released every two weeks and a short subject every week. "You Find It Everywhere," starring Herbert Rawlinson and Catherine Calvert, probably will be the first feature offering, followed by "The Man's Law," featuring Irving Cummings, and "The Lure of the Orient." The short subjects will include twelve Newlywed Comedies, seven two-reel Midget Comedies and the Spanuth Vod-a-vil Movies. Harry Spanuth is one of the veterans of the Chicago motion picture field and was active in the organization of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation and later the Central Film Company of Chicago. The sales force now is being organized and C. W. Spanuth will be vice president and salesmanager.

Irving Lesser stopped off in Chicago long enough to view the print of "Peck's Bad Boy" at the Rothacker studio this week and then personally took a print of the picture with him to New York where it will be screened at the Strand theatre.

Douglas D. Rothacker, manager of the Rothacker Company's Industrial Division, is spending a week in St. Louis.

B. Herbert Milligan, of Creation Film Company, is in New York for a week's sojourn on company business and also to look after his Kalem Studio interests in the east.

Carl Harthill, Chicago manager for Reelcraft, is back at his desk after attending the meeting of Reelcraft officials and managers in New York last week.

Wabash Film Exchange, in keeping with its policy of expansion, has added feature pictures to its regular list of short subject releases. The first of the feature will be "Wolf Bayne," featuring Jack Hoxie and Louise Lovely.

"Deliverance," the feature picture built around the life of Helen Keller, known as "the wonder woman of the age," has gone over big in Chicago and Illinois, according to Gollos Enterprises, who have taken over the Indiana rights to the picture in addition to the Illinois territory previously controlled by them.

W. A. Engelman has returned from New York, where he completed arrangements to represent the Mount Olympus Distributing Corporation in the central west. Mr. Engelman's headquarters in Chicago will be located at 122 S. Michigan Avenue, and his territory will include Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, and Missouri. The pictures to be released in this territory include a large line of one and two-reel comedies in addition to the Dizzy Dumbells, which were made in Chicago by the International Photoplay Company.

The motion picture industry shortly is to lose two of its most popular members in Frank Flaherty, who has resigned as manager of the Unity Photoplays Company, and John Frundt, former vice-president of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, and who recently has disposed of his Claremont Theatre. Messrs. Flaherty and Frundt are leaving the motion picture field to become interested in an automobile accessory distributing agency to be known as the Jones-Flaherty Sales Corporation, which will be located at 3110 S. Michigan Avenue. Among the principal accessories which it will feature in Northern Illinois, Northern Indiana, Wisconsin and the Michigan Peninsula, will be Westinghouse batteries, self-oiling springs, a stop light and a French carburetor. Frank Flaherty has been connected with the management of film exchanges for nine years, and is one of the most widely known and popular exchange men who ever did business in the Chicago territory. Mr. Frundt also is an old-timer in the motion picture field and enjoys the friendship of hundreds of exhibitors.

A conference of Bartola Musical Instrument salesmen was held in Chicago last week, among those present being H. H. Haven, F. O. Patterson, K. G. Kurtz and others. Mr. Haven reported a sale, which is believed to be a record-breaker, three organs in one day, the instruments going to the Hostettler Enterprises of Omaha.

W. D. Burford journeyed to Lansing, Michigan, to attend the banquet and opening of W. S. Butterfield's new Strand Theatre, in that city and reports that Mr. Butterfield has a splendid new house which promises to be as big a success as the banquet.

General Manager W. E. Atkinson and General Sales Manager E. M. Saunders, both of New York, presided at a conference of Metro branch managers, which was held in Chicago last week. Those in attendance, beside L. A. Rozelle, of Chicago, were A. Fischer, Minneapolis; S. L. Haldeman, Kansas City; C. Werner, St. Louis; and C. R. Osborn, of Omaha. A pleasant feature of the meeting was a dinner tendered to the visiting Metro Pictures Corporation officials by Mr. Rozelle, at the South Shore Country Club, on Thursday evening.

J. A. Salter shortly will take over the direction of a chain of theatres in five Illinois cities and pending assuming control of these houses, has resigned from Educational Films, where he has been a successful salesman. Previous to that Mr. Salter was connected with Vitagraph for four years and his total years of experience in the film industry, including some years as an exhibitor, number ten, and he is considered as having a comprehensive knowledge of the business and marked ability as a showman. The names of the theatres which he will control will be announced within a few days.

Monday, April 25th, was the date for the formal opening of Unity's new headquarters on South Wabash avenue and Frank Zambreno, Frank Flaherty and the members of Unity's sales force acted as host to the throng of friends who called to admire the new exchange.

Ike Von Ronkel, of Favorite Players Film Company, announces that the Indianapolis offices of his company, which are in charge of Manager W. J. Lee, have been moved from 212 Wimmer Building to 144-6 West Vermont street.

Interstate Film Service was scheduled to move to its new headquarters at 730 S. Wabash avenue on Saturday, where Lee Herz has taken large space anticipating an expansion in his releasing activities, which is scheduled for an early date. Eddy Herz left this week for a month's trip through Illinois in the interests of Interstate.

George Kleine is moving his offices from 63 E. Adams street, where he has been located for some time, to 116 S. Michigan avenue.

One of the leading Chicago railroads, connecting the Windy City and Minneapolis, is arranging to put on a special train which will carry the Chicago and Illinois exhibitors to the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Minneapolis the early part of June.

The opening of Ascher Brothers' Roosevelt Theatre in the heart of Chicago's loop shopping district Saturday, April 23rd, was one of the most important events of the year in Central West moving picture circles. It is the twenty-sixth theatre to be operated under the Ascher banner, and is acclaimed by Chicagoans as one of the most noteworthy and artistic moving picture houses of the country. A complete description of the splendid theatre and its equipment will appear in the next issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

An all week long reception and housewarming marked the formal opening of Universal's handsome new exchange at 831 S. Wabash avenue, and Manager Lesserman, Assistant Manager Maurice Hellman, and the entire staff were busy welcoming visiting exhibitors and other film men.

Columbia Printing Co. Extends Service

The Columbia Printing Company, Chicago, widely known to the trade for many years as makers of high grade theatre tickets, is adding service features to its business. New forms of order blanks, which are gotten up with special reference to the convenience of the exhibitor and special designs of tickets to suit the theatre owner's taste, are among the newest features offered.

Navy Aids Atlanta Theatre on "The Scuttlers"

A tie-up with the United States Navy in a recent recruiting campaign, permitted the Strand Theatre, Atlanta, recently, to do some excellent business on "The Scuttlers" and also to put up an excellent lobby-display.

The Navy Recruiting Office has a full-rigged model battleship, complete in every tiny detail, which they use in their window, as an inducement to Young America to don the Navy blue. This ship always wins attention, and the Strand built a special little "set" around it, showing the ship at sea.

Around the lobby, were various articles of ship's use,—life-preservers, cork jackets, marlin spikes, and all manner of weird looking things which only the sailors themselves could identify. Framed photographs showing "life at sea" had also been loaned by the Navy recruiting office, and added their bit to the "salty" atmosphere of the lobby.

Frank Hammond, manager of the Lynch houses in Atlanta (with the exception of the Howard and the Lyric) was responsible for the lobby, and received considerable congratulations.

Mitchell Builds Fine Lobby Display

W. Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Majestic Gardens theatre, has completed a most successful engagement of "Outside the Law," no small part of which was due to his exploitation campaign.

Besides the more orthodox advertising which Mr. Mitchell used, was a lobby display of unusual excellence and artistry, as shown by the accompanying cut.

One of the novelties of the display is the 14-foot banner over the lobby door, on which "Outside the Law" was printed in Chinese characters. Mr. Mitchell consulted his Chinese laundryman for the copy on this banner, and then had his artist reproduce what was written as best he could. The cut-out of Priscilla Dean was from a 24-sheet poster. Apple blossoms and lanterns were used to advantage in the decorations.

The newspapers carried 300 inches of advertising and the billboards were covered over a wide section.

Original painting used as exploitation for "Earthbound" playing recently at the Rialto theatre, Omaha, Neb. The canvass was located over the lobby entrance

View of the lobby of the Majestic Gardens theatre, Kalamazoo, decorated for the showing of "Outside the Law."

"Roundup" exploitation by the Istrione theatre of Jackson, Miss., as told in the accompanying story

McDonald Doubles for Fatty Arbuckle

Manager C. L. McDonald, of the Istrione theatre, Jackson, Miss., played "The Round-Up" recently, with himself as the stellar exploitation role. Having been an Oklahoma cowboy himself, he dolled up in his old Western outfit as shown by the cut on this page and drew plenty of attention to himself and the Arbuckle picture by parading the streets daily. Megaphone speeches and teaser newspaper ads helped.

The Istrione lobby was decorated for the occasion as shown by the cut. A powerful spotlight was played on the cut-out over the entrance at night and several lariats added atmosphere.

Making Disaster Over Into Dollars

A good showman is often able to make apparent disaster over into an effective exploitation medium, and just this is what Manager C. L. McDonald, of the Istrione theatre, Jackson, Miss., did recently.

A flood that made the street on which the Istrione is located look like a day in Venice happened along when McDonald was playing "The Mark of Zorro." Thanks to the architects, the theatre was built high enough so no water got inside the house, and McDonald was ready to open up any time his patrons could get to the lobby.

The Istrione manager figured that the water would go down as quickly as it had risen, so he mapped out an exploitation campaign based on on unusual condition A number of boats and boys were corralled and sent out to row about the inundated Jackson streets. The boats flaunted banners that read: "Istrione Open a Usual at 1:30 P. M. "Life Belts Furnished," "Annette Kellerman Coming t the Istrione," "She Will Teach You t Swim." Before it was time to open th usual matinee the water had subsided an McDonald's unusual advertising began t bring results. By 1:30 the theatre wa packed and McDonald patted himself o the back for his ingenuity and sense t "never say die."

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Sentimental Tommy—

Reflects great credit on the producers and any theatre that shows this picture. We gained by exploiting May McAvoy as new star. Not a big box office attraction but please. (Middle West.)

Great—can't say enough in its favor. Did tremendous business all week. (East.)

The Love Special—

Wallace Reid always goes great here and this picture proved to be no exception as far as box office receipts are concerned. A good house all week. (Middle West.)

Wally Reid is a great favorite of our patrons and we did a splendid business with this feature which seemed to please our patrons. (Middle West.)

Straight Is the Way—

The title handicaps the picture, which is only an average production. Had it not been for Charlie Chaplin in "The Adventurer," I would have had a "slim" house all week. (Middle West)

The Easy Road—

We label this as a good picture. The box office statement was better than average. (West.)

The Gilded Lily—

Went over big. Everybody liked it and said so. (West.)

This one was mediocre. Business was only fair. (East.)

The Education of Elizabeth—

The picture drags in several spots and needs improving, but the name, "Billie Burke," filled my house for a week. (Middle West.)

City of Silent Men—

Splendid picture, but rather heavy for this time of year. People left theatre feeling oppressed. Big opening, however. (East.)

Brewster's Millions—

This picture got plenty of laughs. An old favorite which is done-over well in film form. (Middle West.)

Her Husband's Friend—

A regular stereotyped society drama. Nothing new, but usually interesting. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Passion Flowers—

The best picture Norma Talmadge has had for a long time. Proved an excellent box-office attraction. (Middle West.)

Nothing like a Talmadge picture to get the crowds but this one didn't please so well, though business was up to expectation. (Middle West.)

A great many people were disappointed in the story but they came to see the star. Business was up to standard. (East.)

A splendid feature film which lived up to Norma Talmadge's high standard. Played to much better than average business during the week of its run. (Middle West.)

Man, Woman, Marriage—

Continued to draw crowded houses on second run. (East.)

Opinion as to entertainment value greatly divided. Business good. (East.)

The Oath—

A good picture but only drew our regular patrons. (Middle West.)

Jim, the Penman—

Very artistic, but too gloomy. People didn't enjoy it. (East.)

Her Lord and Master—

Mamma's Affair—

They like Constance so they liked this one. Big business. (West.)

The Kid—

Eight days to extra big business. Went over like a house afire. (West.)

REALART

The Little Clown—

Had picture indorsed by local "Better Films" movement, and gave special matinee for school-children. Business excellent (South.)

The Plaything of Broadway—

A fairly entertaining production that drew average business. (East.)

The Snob—

Very acceptable and pleasing picture with good cast. (West.)

Something Different—

Splendid picture. Had much favorable comment. Good direction and good back grounds. (West.)

Ducks and Drakes—

They like this one and it did a good business. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Freeze Out—

This got big business for us and they seemed to like it. (West.)

Just fair box office bet for us and pleased fairly well. (West.)

Once to Every Woman—

Only an average picture, with a theme which it not particularly new. A fairly good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Unknown Wife—

Good clean little picture but no drawing card. (West.)

FOX

Prairie Trails—

Good picture that played to good business. (West.)

His Greatest Sacrifice—

We believe Farnum's popularity is dwindling. Anyway this picture didn't pull for us. (Middle West.)

Skirts—

One of the poorest pictures I have ever played. Spent several hundred dollars on special advertising, staged a fashion show, and did everything I could think of in a frantic attempt to put it over—but it wouldn't go. Just barely cleared expenses. (South.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

A Small Town Idol—

Sennett has produced one of the best comedies ever screened and it did a big business at our theatre during its entire run. (Middle West.)

Broke the house record on opening and held over for second week. (Middle West.)

Good summer stuff. One of the funniest comedies ever made. (East.)

The Forbidden Thing—

Title drew well—awoke curiosity—and the picture pleased. Business fair. (South.)

Dying Lips—

The production was good but the story was fair. Business was fairly good. (East.)

METRO

Polly With a Past—

Plenty of room for exploitation with this picture. Good production. Large house all week. (Middle West.)

Went over good for me. Box office satisfactory but not big. (West.)

Without Limit—

Good picture that drew satisfactory business. (West.)

A good photoplay that brought good business. Well acted throughout. (East.)

A Message From Mars—

A good lively production which attracted and satisfied large audiences. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

The Highest Bidder—

Star well-liked by my patrons, and picture was good, but business was only fair. (South.)

Don't Neglect Your Wife—

Good business and pleasing picture. (West.)

PATHE

The Devil—

Holding its second week to satisfactory business which is an indication that the picture pleases. (West.)

An excellent production playing to fair business. (East.)

Now or Never—

Extra big for a week on split week for features. (West.)

VITAGRAPH

Black Beauty—

An excellent picture which appealed strongly to the younger set but which failed to draw adults as we expected. Did only average business during its week's run. (Middle West.)

Proved a terrible flivver for this house, much to surprise of management. An excellent picture, nevertheless. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Seven Years Bad Luck—

Good picture from entertainment standpoint and brought good returns. (West.)

Kismet—

One of the best pictures of the year. Skinner's work is superb, and the Oriental settings are particularly good. (Middle West.)

The Stealers—

Turned the crowds away. Couldn't take care of them at all. A real attraction. (East.)

SELZNICK

The Greatest Love—

This picture was well liked but for some unaccountable reason failed to draw and proved a disappointment as box office attraction. (West.)

Broadway and Home—

A fairly entertaining picture playing to fair business. (East.)

STATES RIGHTS

Straight From Paris—

Exploitation put this over to very satisfactory business. (West.)

The County Fair—

Fairly entertaining picture which attracted only fair business. (East.)

Here is the atmospheric stage setting for "The Old Swimmin' Hole" which E. R. Rogers, managing director of the Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., built for his engagement of this picture. The prologue was evidently along the lines of that originated by Joseph L. Plunkett of the New York Mark Strand theatre

Hyman's "Oath" Prologue

Brooklyn Mark Strand Stages Pantomimic Specialty Number

IN order to give variety to the type of prologues being presented at the Mark Strand (Brooklyn) theatre, Managing Director Hyman presented a spoken prologue to "The Oath," thereby eliminating for one week the usual song and ballet arrangement with which he beautifies all his introductions to feature attractions.

Against the black cyc over on the left-stage side was a fireside scene, with a suggestion of library table and lamp. Here Hugh Colman, the hero of the picture, is discovered sitting at the fireplace. The rest of the stage is absolutely dark. Colman looks at a picture of a girl he is holding in his hand, arises and places it on the shelf over the hearth. He stands gazing at the fire for a few moments, and then registers determination in pantomime. Colman changes the smoking jacket he is wearing for his coat, takes his hat and cane and starts to exit. This is the cue for the lights to come down quickly on the left and to come up on the extreme right.

Here is the interior of a girl's room. A light fancy set is employed. The girl, Minna Hart, is found sitting in a chair weeping. The doorbell rings and Minna moves for door to center stage. As she starts to leave the lights go down on the right and come up center stage, revealing a hallroom. Colman is standing hat in hand, and as Minna enters she registers surprise. Coleman moves as if to embrace, but Minna, with a Bible in her hand, points to the book, and there is a small bit of pantomime in which Colman draws back as if in horror. Minna is seen to triumph, for they clasp hands and Colman repeats after Minna: "I do solemnly swear never to see you again, and cease to regard you as my wife for the rest of our lives, so help me God."

As Colman begins to speak the lights are coming down, and the first title of the picture, "The Oath," is being shot on the screen.

By using a triple-arched drop, painted black, and backed up by a black cyc, the same effect was obtained as found in the well-known fade-in in motion pictures.

An overhead spot, over each of the three scenes, turned the trick. In the first scene the overhead spot was not brought into full play because of the light obtained from a 500 watt lamp in the fireplace.

It was so different and novel that the Brooklyn Mark-Strand theatregoers gave it a big hand, and the fact that the opening title of the picture, "The Oath," was shot over the climax of the scene on the screen in front of the set, while a basso sang Tosti's "Good-Bye" from the wings, tied the whole thing up to their entire satisfaction. Comments from all sides were pleasing, and for theatres booking "The Oath" the Brooklyn Strand's presentation holds a world of suggestions.

Door Knob Advertising Works Well at Ogden

A door knob campaign was a feature of the exploitation that Fred V. Greene, Jr., exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in Denver, carried out when "Idols of Clay" was played at the Ogden theatre, Denver.

Small tags were prepared in yellow and black, about two inches wide and seven inches long. A hole was punched in the top and a string loop fastened through each tag.

A battalion of two dozen boys were engaged in the job of fastening these tags on every door knob throughout the residential section of the city.

The Ogden plays to a high-class neighborhood patronage, so the tags were produced in artistic fashion. About 500 were distributed in the theatre's vicinity; and practically every house in the neighborhood was covered.

At the same time diamond shaped cards were issued reading: "Here's the Point. Don't Miss 'Idols of Clay,' a Paramount Picture at the Ogden Theatre Tonight and Tomorrow Night." These were slipped in letter boxes or spaces around the doors. They supplemented the tags and were used as a follow-up campaign.

"Idols of Clay" went over in big shape and Manager Eppled attributed its success in large manner to the way the advertising and exploitation went across.

Reisenfeld's Presentation of "Deception"

Rivoli Theatre, New York, Decorated in Sixteenth Century Atmosphere

CREATING a program of music and stage numbers around a photoplay is revealed in its purest beauty at the New York Rivoli theatre, where Hugo Reisenfeld is presenting "Deception."

Not content with setting the historic film to music of the early sixteenth century, he has also carried out the spirit of the period in the furniture of the theatre, the decorations and in the lobby and exterior.

It has become a truism with Mr. Reisenfeld that audiences cannot step from Broadway right into the spirit of the second Tudor in England, and therefore has carried out his scheme of decoration even to hanging a pair of candelabra under the Rivoli marquee and placing four complete suits of armor at the corners overhanging the curb. These simple symbols have a way of hinting that "Deception" depicts the days of candle light and of plumed knights and fair ladies. Along the sides of the building hang shields of the period to add color to the general decorations.

When the patron steps into the lobby he is again reminded that he is to step back to nearly the Middle Ages.

In the lobby are copies of the various proclamations—that declaring King Henry's divorce from his first wife, his charges against Queen Anne and Sir Henry Norris, and even one of Henry's scrawling love letters to Anne. There are also two beautiful pencil drawings of the unhappy queen.

On the mezzanine floor and the staircases are tapestries that date back 400 to 500 years, as well as great oaken chairs, chests of drawers, candlesticks, sculptures, refectory tables and benches, and a row of ancient chain armor, the whole collection given a touch of color by the old standards and banners. The visitor cannot help coming under the influence of the old furniture with its deep carving, the old draperies and the wrought iron candelabra, and when the program opens he has almost come under the influence of the past.

But Mr. Reisenfeld's art comes most potently to the fore in his presentation program. The opening of the performance is announced by four heralds with trumpets and the orchestra plays an overture, which is a garland of ancient music. The orchestra has been augmented by the addition of several ancient instruments seldom heard in a modern orchestra, and include a clavacene, a viola d'amour and oboe di caccia.

Old music of the period depicted by the historical film also forms the basis of the prologue, which is called "The Hunt Is Up," and which has a setting of the Tudor times. The prologue takes its name from a song written by "one Gray," a favorite court singer of Henry VIII, and is dedicated to the King. Carl Rollins, baritone, appears as a minstrel, and the Rivoli Male Chorus appears as a group of courtiers and huntsmen. As the prologue, which is a production of the New School of Opera and Ensemble, fades from view, the feature film is shown with a music score which brings to Broadway some of the rich melodies of a forgotten period and selections from works of old composers that are seldom heard. In the course of the progress of the film drama there is played a grouping of music which in itself would constitute a rare old library. Excerpts from Jean Batiste Lully, Allesandro Scarlatti, Francois Couperin, Johann Mattheson, Henry Purcell, Arcangelo Corelli, Antonio Vivaldi, Andre Ernest Modeste Gretry, Jean Philippe Rameau, George Frederick Handel and Johann Sebastian Bach.

This prop "chicken" was used by the California theatre to exploit "Chickens" playing recently at the California theatre, San Francisco, one of the Roth and Partington trio of houses

A striking feature of the musical score, and one which indicates the great amount of research work which Mr. Reisenfeld did before arranging the musical setting to the picture, is the singing toward the close of the film drama of one of Anne Boleyn's own compositions. The picture shows the unhappy queen being led to the headsman in the courtyard of the Tower of London when the song, "O Death, Rock Me to Sleep," is sung by Inga Wank, mezzo soprano. The song was written by Anne Boleyn during the few days that she was confined in the Tower to await execution, according to historians, and the only version in existence is in the manuscript department of the British Museum.

Bach's "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor" is played as the concluding number of the program by Prof. Firmin Swinnen on the organ.

Lobby display for "The Last of the Mohicans" which J. B. Mason manager of the California theatre, San Diego, Cal., originated for the showing of this picture

Wilkerson's Prologue for "Billions"

Purl Wilkerson, director of the California theatre, Los Angeles, recently staged a prologue for "Billions" of such pleasing qualities that it attracted much added patronage for the picture.

The stage setting was a magnificently appointed bachelor apartment, with the cast, representing the servants, making free with the quarters of their master while he was absent.

A male quartette and a tenor soloist enacted the parts in the prologue. The number consisted of effective stage business and interpolated songs.

Mason Builds Another Attractive Lobby Display

For the showing of "The Last of the Mohicans," at the California, in San Diego, Calif., J. B. Mason, proprietor and manager of the house, arranged an attractive lobby, featuring an Indian and a tepee. The Indian was not a lay figure but a real man, and with his pipe and his tomahawk added a marked touch of reality to the scene. A good use was made by Mr. Mason of the stock display sheets sent out by the exchange. In the picture Mr. Mason is seen standing at the entrance to the theatre.

Arnold Induces Musicians to Double in Brass

John Arnold, manager of the Washington theatre, Sherman, Texas, is blazing an exploitation trail in his vicinity that is startling the natives. And in so doing, Mr. Arnold is finding out some things that may be turned into the advantage of exhibitors the country over.

Particularly as applied to the orchestra has Mr. Arnold made a most valuable suggestion. During his recent showing of "Love, Honor and Behave," Mr. Arnold investigated that his various musicians could all double in brass. He thereupon hired a Ford truck, got the musicians together, stuck banners along the sides of the truck, and paraded the town in election style.

In addition to this ballyhoo stunt, Mr. Arnold bought a six-column by eighteen-inch space in the Sherman Democrat, and inserted what the editor of the Democrat declared to be the best advertisement ever published in the paper for a motion picture theatre. The ad was featured by a pen and ink sketch of a big Easter lily. The greater part of the word matter used in the ad was devoted to expressing the theatre's Easter greetings in terms of friendship.

Uses Famous Poem in Prologue Number

An elocutionist reciting with fine dramatic effect Robert Service's famous poem of the prairies, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," was employed to etch realism into the prologue furnished at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre to introduce the feature film, "The Sky Pilot."

The prologue was a page out of a plainsman's life, the drop showing the exterior to a sagebrush trading post, with a group of cattle rustlers loafing on packing boxes and joshing each other. Finally one asks Walter Smith, raconteur, garbed as a cowman, to recite "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

"County Fair" Gets Another Good Lobby Display

"In the exploitation of "The County Fair," Samuel Harding, owner of the World theatre, Kansas City, and his advertising manager, Howard Jamison, took advantage of the experience gained by other exhibitors in putting the picture across and also added a few touches of his own.

A "circus tent entrance," constructed in front of the theatre with brightly colored flags strung from the top of the house down to the entrance, provided a harmonious setting for the picture. "Cold Molasses," the asthmatic plowhorse, Wesley Barry, astride a large hog and a large collection of relics characteristic of county fairs, were given a prominent space as pictorial decorations in the lobby.

"A Riot," and "You'll Laff," were printed in large red letters on the canvas entrance outside, while the entire theatre force was garbed in long duck coats and typical rural straw hats. A daily "Rube" parade served to add to public interest.

Four Page News Sheet a Knock Out

One of the latest and most successful stunts worked by the Philadelphia office of Paramount, whose publicity man, Eli Orowitz, has been responsible for many clever innovations in the past year, was the publication of a four page news sheet, to exploit "Forbidden Fruit." The paper, headed "West Philadelphia News," "Cape May News," and so on, depending on the section where it is distributed, is practically full size, and looks exactly like one of the smaller neighborhood sheets. Across the top runs a head:

HUSBAND KILLED BY BUTLER PAL, with a two column lead describing the murder. All four pages present Paramount news, mostly about the feature, as news stories, and only the "ads" directly name the pictures and announce where they are playing and so forth, the last page carrying a full sized "ad."

Some "Scotch" Used in Putting Over "Tommy"

When "Sentimental Tommy" was scheduled for the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, Leslie F. Whelan, the Paramount exploiteer, broke into a Clan MacDonald meeting and said: "We Scotch have got to stick together."

Clan MacDonald needed no great urging to boost the picture. Highland patriotism so stirred in the breasts of the bagpipe corps that they decided to do an extra good turn for their favorite author. They donned their kilties, got out their wheezy instruments, painted a sign advertising the run of the picture, and paraded the strets.

Detroit was more accustomed to honk-honks than to bagpipes, and the crowds lined up on the curb to see the abbreviated procession. The box office of Broadway-Strand registered a record business.

Exploitation Stunt Arouses Interest in Baltimore

Great interest in "Outside the Law" was created in Baltimore by a publicity stunt arranged by Joseph H. Mayer, of the Universal Exploitation Department, for the showing of that picture in the New theatre.

Mayer rented an automobile truck and built a large cage on it, similar to a police cage for the safekeeping of important prisoners. Inside this cage were placed two persons representing criminals; one a man in striped prison garb wearing a ball and chain, and the other a woman in black prison garb, representing "Silky Moll," the underworld character played by Miss Dean in "Outside the Law."

Outside of the cage was another man, dressed in the uniform of a prison keeper and carrying a rifle and cartridge belt. A twenty-foot banner about the side of the truck announced the coming of the picture to the New theatre.

The truck was driven over the main streets of Baltimore during the two days prior to the opening day of the showing, and during the early days of the week's run. It was surrounded by crowds every time it stopped and resulted in widespread interest in the picture.

The exploitation was supplemented by 5,000 announcement cards, mailed to a selected list, bearing a picture of Priscilla Dean and the slogan, "Catch this woman; she's 'Outside the Law,'" and by 15,000 postcards sent to automobile owners.

The picture went over with a bang, reports from Baltimore indicate. The exploitation in Baltimore was augmented by 300 one-sheet stands in that city and by a 24-sheet poster campaign in nearby towns and cities.

This lineup shows some of the Chaplin imitators who helped put "The Kid" over for the Majestic theatre, Jackson, Miss.

Minister Boosts Picture from Pulpit

Announcing a picture program from the pulpit was the unusual procedure of Rev. C. C. Shoemaker, of Port Austin, Mich., when "The Grim Game" played the Neptune theatre.

Mr. Shoemaker saw the show, according to his statement, liked the picture and decided that he would help Manager Charles H. Cowles exploit it.

The exploitation point in this story lies in the suggestion that it is not an impossibility to obtain the co-operation of the churches and church people for pictures, and that any manger who neglects any opportunity in this direction is not exercising the best of judgment.

Cleveland Paper Cooperates with Theatre

Manager O. D. Cloakley, of the Allen theatre, Cleveland, broke into the front pages of the Cleveland News recently with the announcement of a drawing competition for school children under fourteen years of age in connection with the showing of "Black Beauty" at the Allen. One hundred and eight prizes were offered, ranging from $20 in cash to tickets to the theatre for the best essays submitted on the story of "Black Beauty."

It is seldom that front page space can be secured for exploitation purposes, but in this case the News gave up three columns to the announcement of the stunt.

Barrett Works Out Clever Presentation Number

A cleverly worked out musical presentation of "Earthbound" at the Isis theatre, Lynchburg, Va., puzzled the audiences who witnessed the screenings of that photodrama of the unseen world and caused no end of comment.

Colored light effects were used, red and blue alternately, on the hangings until the scene in which the wronged husband shoots his closest friend. At that point the entire house was plunged into darkness and from the pipe organ a human voice was released. A tenor with a beautiful lyric voice was placed in the organ chamber at the rear of the screen. The sounding of his voice in the auditorium of the theatre was controlled by the organist by means of the shutter pedals. The tenor sang Massenet's beautiful "Elegie." The organist used the Vox Humana stop, playing in unison with the singer, so that the audience was unable to tell which was singer and which was organ. It gave an unusually eerie effect to the singing of the "Elegie." This musical presentation stunt was worked out by Guy Barret, manager of the Isis theatre, and W. R. Ferguson, Goldwyn exploiter, and was most effective.

Mr. Ferguson used the mammoth globe, which was constructed for the showing of "Earthbound" in Washington, as told in the News, and built his lobby decorations around it. A cut shows the effect after Mr. Ferguson had finished his job.

Chaplin Imitators Help Put Over "The Kid"

Manager D. W. Wolverstein, of the Majestic theatre, Jackson, Miss., recently put over "The Kid" in big style. Through a tie-up with the Daly Clarion-Ledger, cash prizes were offered for the best Chaplin imitators, and 25 of the best entries were daily paraded through the business section of the city. About 300 boys made a try for the prizes. A cut showing some of the imitators appears on this page.

Sobler Stages Extensive Exploitation Campaign

A. W. Sobler, publicity director for lymouth Pictures Corporation, put over extensive exploitation campaign for the remiere showing of "Every Woman's roblem" at the United States theatre, aterson, N. J., last week. The campaign gan with a series of teaser newspaper ds. Following came private showings to ading women's organizations, a tie-up ith the Paterson Evening News, in which prize of $100 was offered for the best olution to the heroine of the story's prob-m. The News printed a synopsis of the tory to where the problem was fully pre-nted and then asked for 200-word solu-ons on a competitive basis. The an-ouncement story was carried on Page ne, and the whole scheme given plenty f daily publicity. Five hundred answers ere received.

Window displays were secured in the est shops in the city, and a co-operative ewspaper advertising stunt put over with ading Paterson merchants.

The Press-Guardian used readers an-ouncing free tickets for the show among he classified advertising, the idea being to uild up reader interest and publicity for he picture was furnished in generous mounts.

Heralds were mailed out to a selected ist of people summoning them to appear t the theatre and act as a jury. The her-ld was a "summons" mailed in plain en-elope with regulation legal seal, etc.

A tastefully decorated lobby featuring ne-sheet cut-outs of the heroine of the icture as a woman judge was used to ad-vantage.

The result of the exploitation campaign was unusual business.

The washing machine helped E. J. Barnette, manager of the Tremont theatre, Galveston, Texas, put over "Suds," as told in the accompanying story.

Barnette Pulls the Washing Machine Stunt

"It may be old, but oh how they fall for it!" This is the beginning of an explanatory note which E. J. Barnette inclosed with a photo showing how he used the now famous washing machine stunt in connection with the engagement of "Suds" at the Tremont theatre, Galveston, Texas, of which Mr. Barnette is manager. "Established a house record both in dollars and people," Mr. Barnette also wrote in his letter, which is appended herewith just to prove once more that exploitation gets business.

Here is the original lobby display which Benj. Caplon, manager of the Clover theatre, Baltimore, used to exploit "The Revenge of Tarzan"

Even New York Falls for the Hokum

The plate glass windows of a score of stores in West 125th Street, New York, were decorated during the last three days of last week with paintings suggesting scenes from "The Old Swimmin' Hole," and the announcement that this picture was then being shown at Proctor's 125th Street theatre.

This exploitation scheme was the idea of D. N. Robinson, the manager of the theatre. He interested Captain Stanley Lewis, a recruiting officer of the United States Army, and Lewis, who is an expert in wielding the brush, carried the project into execution. The army officer drove up and down 125th Street in a torpedo-shaped motor car done in red and with a calliope attachment that carried to everybody in Harlem the information that something out of the ordinary was going on.

From time to time Lewis stopped his car, and, carrying brushes and tubes of water colors, rushed across the sidewalk to a store window, arrangements having previously been made with the shop proprietor, of course, then while the calliope continued to shriek and crowds of curious gathered about, he painted a picture on the glass. Not all the "canvasses"—or, more properly, crystals—were alike, but each was a marine, suggestive of a swimmin' hole, and depicted a boy either in the water or about to dive, and each indicated the location of Proctor's and the hours of performance.

The stunt worked well, as the theatre was packed for every performance and the audiences were enthusiastic.

Circle Gives "Passion" Elaborate Presentation

Ralph Lieber, manager of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, gave "Passion" an elaborate and artistic presentation at its recent showing.

In staging the number, Mr. Lieber had the assistance of George Sommes, director of the Little Theatre Society, of Indianapolis; Gertrude Hacker, a local dance instructress and Frank Zimmerer, the Circle art director.

The number was along the lines of the prologue which S. L. Rothafel presented at the Capitol theatre, New York, in conjunction with the showing of "Passion."

The curtain arose on four couples, dressed in the style of the French Revolutionary period. Wall decorations, furniture and hangings were in tone. The couples danced the minuet and are having a very gay party when "Zamor," the negro manservant of DuBarry in the film, bursts through the double French doors in the rear of the set and in pantomime tells his mistress that a mob is coming. Noise of the mob comes through the open doors. The patricians cower at the left side of the stage and in rushes the mob. The peasants hesitate at the window. The patricians go through the motions of begging for mercy; with snarls of rage the peasants attack them and the curtain falls.

The exploitation campaign was extensive and varied, including several novelties. Among the latter was the use of a trick rooster and his master. The rooster, smoking cigarettes and doing other novel stunts, followed his owner around the business district. The fowl was decorated with a sign: "Passion at the Circle next week."

Jones "Rag Show" Works Well

To awaken interest in the first episode of "The Lost City" serial, Manager Jones of the Isis theatre, Pensacola, Fla., offered free tickets to all boys who would bring in five pounds of clean white rags. Mr. Jones needed the rags for cleaning purposes about the theatre and thus "killed two birds with one stone."

Several thousand coupon tickets were also distributed among the school children.

Wright Coaxes In Extra Business with "Golf"

How a single reel subject can be mad to draw not only additional people to th theatre but scores who rarely attend ha just been shown by Manager H. E Wright, of the Strand theatre, Seattle with "Golf," a slow motion picture re leased by Educational.

Because "Golf" analyzes the gam thoroughly through the Cincal slow mo tion process, Manager Wright knew tha it would be of the greatest interest t every golfer, so he obtained a list of mem bers of the Seattle clubs and sent to eac a letter calling attention to this particu lar reel. He added a catchy sentence in "I play a little golf myself, and this ree was of great interest to me." Extract from the publicity stories sent out by Edu cational were used in the letter, includin this sentence which was sure of catchin every one who knows the game:

"Golf experts have always declared tha in driving, the club follows the bal from four to twelve inches in a full stroke but the slow motion camera proves posi tively that the ball leaves the club at th very second of impact."

In addition to this letter special ad were used on the sporting pages of th Seattle newspapers, and a number of spe cial stories were given by sporting writ ers who saw the picture either at a pri vate exhibition or the first regular show ing. Manager Wright declared that h believed these articles and the advertis ing brought practically every golfer in Se attle to the theatre during the week th picture was shown.

The Strand and other Jensen and von Herberg theatres in Seattle and Portland have been devoting especial attention t the short subjects lately, booking Educa tional product solidly. Not only are thes one and two reel pictures given a portion of the Sunday newspaper space, but ofte separate ads are run to call attention t them.

Bebe's Jail Sentence Capitalized by Browne

Bebe Daniels and Frank L. Browne form an effective pair when it comes to putting over the former's photoplays.

Recently, when Miss Daniels was arrested for speeding, Mr. Browne, who manages McClune's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, made capital of the star's misfortune by tying it up with his advertisement of "She Couldn't Help It," which was booked for his theatre at that time.

And now Mr. Browne has done it again. Bebe began serving her jail sentence April 5, and by a coincidence (?) her latest pictures, "Ducks and Drakes," was booked for Clune's for a week's showing, beginning April 17th.

Naturally every paper out there carried first page stories of the star's jail term and these were eagerly collected by Mr. Browne. Every story bearing on this situation was clipped and from them a one sheet was made.

This was placed in the lobby where it drew attention, much comment and large crowds. There was almost a riot at one time when two factions started disputing as to whether Judge Cox did right in sentencing the beautiful girl for ten days. But not all of the crowd stayed in the lobby.

Another exhibit in the lobby was a framed telegram, purporting to come from Miss Daniels and expressing her regret at not being able to be present at the opening of her picture and giving as her reason the fact that she was detained in Santa Ana for ten days.

Two more Chaplin and Jackie Coogan impersonators. This pair helped Manager J. A. Jones of the Saenger theatre, Pensacola, Fla., put over "The Kid"

Frank Lacey's lobby decorations at the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., included oriental rugs valued at $6500. The employees of the theatre wore special costumes for the occasion

Mr. Browne got up some auto signs. There were four of them, mounted on stands and placed in front of the theatre. The first said, "Bebe Daniels is in jail for speeding—but she is here in her latest Realart picture, 'Ducks and Drakes.'" The second advised prospective patrons: "Don't speed in Santa Ana—but speed in here and see Bebe Daniels in," etc. Said the third: "You're safe if you speed in here and see Bebe Daniels," etc. The fourth commanded, "Stop! Don't speed past this place—come in and see the speed girl in," etc.

Newspaper and other advertising employed by Mr. Browne was modeled along the same line, tying in with Bebe's misfortune.

Needless to say Mr. Browne got the crowds.

One of the most successful theatre managers in the business, Mr. Browne has earned for himself an enviable reputation.

He went into the show business when twelve years old and remained on the stage fourteen years, appearing in vaudeville, drama, and burlesque. At twenty-six he became first assistant manager of the Theatre Comique, the first real motion picture theatre in Boston. He remained there a year, leaving to become manager of the Pastime theatre, also in Boston.

Following his three years with that theatre he won the title of "Theatre Doctor," being constantly engaged to open new houses and install systems. His next managerial position was with the Allston theatre, Boston, where he spent three years.

Mr. Browne then went to the Pacific Coast, taking charge of the Alhambra theatre, San Francisco. After two years with that house he was appointed manager of Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles, where he has remained.

New Angle on Co-operative Advertising

During the past couple years publicity men have discovered that they can obtain any amount of free advertising for their shows by cooperating with merchants in window tieups, the army, navy, etc., etc.

But Harold F. Wendt, publicity director of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O., has discovered a method whereby one can obtain free advertising for his theatre constantly and without any work on his part after the initial steps have been taken.

It works like this. You go to all the various business establishments within a block of your theatre and impress upon them the value of their being located in the same block with such a civic institution. You have advertised its location until it is firmly fixed in the minds of everyone. Now, if in their ads they mention the fact such-and-such a business place is just next door to the ——— theatre, of four doors north of the theatre, people will immediately know the location of that business place and naturally be attracted in that direction. And the constant appearance of the name of the theatre in this way surely is anything but detrimental to the business.

Lester Improves on Stage Wedding Idea

Unique Stunts for "Love, Honor and Behave" Pulled at Columbia, S. C.

IN these days of the "H. C. L.," when Love's Young Dream is halted, not to say rudely shattered by the nightmare of bills, the stunt pulled by Manager L. T. Lester, of Columbia, S. C., when he played "Love, Honor and Behave" at the Rialto theatre, has all the fine points of an absolute inspiration. It was, likewise, a blessing far from disguised, to the young couple who figured as principals in the stunt.

Far in advance of the play-date on the picture, Mr. Lester arranged a tie-up with all local merchants of any importance, and with the newspapers. He advertised that many and varied would be the gifts bestowed upon the young couple who consented to be married on the stage of the Rialto theatre, just preceding the eight o'clock performance on the opening day of the picture.

One merchant contributed white kid gloves—sixteen button length for the bride, and dress-gloves for the groom; another presented the bride's slippers and beautiful hose; still a third presented the wedding-gown, and another the veil. A local florist came forward with the most beautiful bouquet that had been carried by any blushing bride in Columbia the whole season; and the groom was being cared for, in as good shape. A local cafe offered to present the young couple with their first day's meals,—and in fact, there seemed no limit to the gifts, practical, beautiful and useful. Even the minister and license came free of charge.

And all that was asked in return was that the young couple be married on the stage of the Rialto, and that instead of the old formula, "love, honor and obey," they use the newer and more modern one, "love, honor and behave."

There was little difficulty in getting the couple—in fact, Mr. Lester had a number to choose from, and is he to blame if he chose, with an eye towards the further decoration of the beautiful stage setting he had planned?

The Rialto was jammed to the point of suffocation on the opening night. The street cars all carried banners their full length, reading "Mack Sennett's Greatest Comedy—'Love, Honor and Behave,'" so that not a man, woman or child who could read, could possibly be ignorant of what was going on.

An added attraction was the race picture, "The Race of the Age," and as its final scene faded out, the orchestra began Lohengrin's Wedding March, the curtain rose slowly, and there was the wedding party, posed against a background that looked exactly like the pulpit of a church. Palms, lilies and cut-flowers were there, just as the society editor always reports at church weddings. And there was a little hush over the house, as the minister began reading the ceremony.

The young couple were the guests of the management at a dinner-party after the theatre, and it is said that they—meaning the couple—promptly set up housekeeping on the spoils of that day.

The stunt created talk throughout Columbia, and it will be a long time before it is forgotten. Manager Lester will have to go some to think up another stunt that will make this one fade in the memory of his towns-folk.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Bennett Buys Triangle Studio, Yonkers, N.Y.

WHITMAN BENNETT announces the purchase of the old Triangle studio in Yonkers, N. Y. Mr. Bennett has had this plant under lease for the past year. In announcing his acquisition of the former Triangle studio, Mr. Bennett stated that his outright purchase of this plant was due to his conviction of "returning prosperity."

"I can already see the reaction from the slight depression the picture theatres suffered," said Mr. Bennett, "and that is why I put my good money in an outright purchase at this particular moment." Mr. Bennett was formerly an exhibitor in New York City.

"Prosperity is so much a matter of faith," he continues. "The exhibitor who is a bull on the future of the United States is going right along smiling while the chap who is cutting down the quality of his shows, quantity of his advertising, dropping essential employees, cutting his orchestra—that kind is sliding.

"If exhibitors need faith, certainly producers do. The man with faith in his product will not hesitate to gamble on the future regardless of temporary depression and our purchase at this juncture of the old Triangle plant must be the best indication of our absolute confidence in the soundness of this industry."

May McAvoy, star of Realart's "Birthday Production," to be released in connection with Realart's celebration of its Second Anniversary in June

8 Lasky Companies Active

Paramount's Coast Studio Busy; Melford Starts Oppenheim Story

BUSINESS optimism in the motion picture industry is reflected in the abnormal stress of activity at the Lasky studio where eight companies are busily engaged in work on Paramount productions to be released during the ensuing year.

George Melford began work last week on his production for Paramount of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Great Impersonation," James Kirkwood is featured and Ann Forrest plays the leading feminine role, the adaptation being the work of Monte M. Katterjohn. Ernest Traxler is assistant director.

William D. Taylor is making favorable progress with his production for Paramount in which Ethel Clayton is to star—adapted by Julia Crawford Ivers, from "The Lifted Veil," a play by Henry Arthur Jones.

Cecil B. De Mille is busily engaged upon the opening scenes of his new Paramount production which was suggested by Leonard Merrick's story, "Laurels and the Lady." The cast will include Dorothy Dalton, Conrad Nagel, Mildred Harris, Theodore Kosloff and others. William De Mille is in consultation with Rita Weiman daily concerning her story which she is writing for his next production for Paramount. The title and other details are as yet unannounced.

James Cruze is directing Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in his new Paramount picture, "Gasoline Gus," adapted by Walter Wood from two stories by George Pattullo. Sam Wood, directing Gloria Swanson in her first Paramount star picture, Elinor Glyn's "The Great Moment," adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn, has almost reached the concluding scenes.

Frank Urson has been making scenes for the opening of "The Hell Digger," Byron Morgan's story for Paramount which he also scenarized. Wallace Reid is the star and Lois Wilson is leading woman, and very shortly the company will go North to the mining districts of California where the big gold dredgers, which the author refers to as "hell diggers" are used.

Considerable time has been spent at the Lasky studio in the sets representing "The Paper Lantern," a gambling den and cafe in Shanghai, for Betty Compson's first Paramount star picture, "At the End of the World." This is an adaptation by Edfrid Bingham of the European play by Ernest Klein and Penrhyn Stanlaws is the director.

Realart Plans Celebration

To Release "Birthday Production" in June; May McAvoy Is Starred

REALART announces that a feature of the June celebration to mark its second anniversary will be the release of a production in which May McAvoy will be presented as the star. The production is as yet untitled, but is referred to by Realart officials as the "Birthday Production." The picture is now being produced at Realart's West Coast studio, and, according to advices from the Realart headquarters, "this picture will be both an artistic and box-office success and a worthy production with which to celebrate the second anniversary of the organization."

In a statement just issued Miss McAvoy's career is traced by Realart and her success as "Grizel" in Paramount's screen version of Sir James M. Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy" especially emphasized.

"Miss McAvoy has not made a sensational, overnight ascent from comparative obscurity to fame as it is frequently chronicled in screen history," says the Realart statement. "For nearly three years she has been painstakingly studying the art of screen expression and has been leading woman or co-star in many notable productions.

"However, it remained to Realart to foresee her great possibilities and long before 'Sentimental Tommy' was offered to the public at the Criterion Theatre, in New York, she had affixed her signature to a contract to appear as the star in the carefully planned, long projected Realart Birthday picture.

"Miss McAvoy has beauty plus the ability to wear clothes; the artistic instinct which enables her to portray understandingly roles which would tax to the limit the resources of many stars with far more seasoned experience. In "Sentimental Tommy" her characterization of "Grizel" was marked by its repression, although every opportunity for over-acting was offered. Critics in all the metropolitan cities where pre-release showings of this production have been given are unanimous in their commendation of her impeccable interpretation of one of Barrie's most loved characters."

Geo. Arliss to Release via United Artists

GEORGE ARLISS will hereafter release his pictures through United Artists Corporation, according to a statement just issued from the United Artists' headquarters. Hiram Abrams, president of the corporation, has just announced the signing of the contract with Henry M. Hobart, president of Distinctive Productions, Inc., the producers of the George Arliss pictures, whereby this important arrangement was closed.

The first picture that Mr. Arliss will make for release through United Artists Corporation is "Disraeli." The play by Louis N. Parker has been acted more than fifteen hundred times by Mr. Arliss through five theatrical seasons all over the country. Subsequently, Mr. Arliss revived it for a special run in New York City.

Film production of "Disraeli" is to begin immediately and it is planned to release the picture early in the fall. As many members of the original cast as are available are being assembled now.

Sets Boston Record for Day and Date Shows

Educational's Boston office claims to have just set a record for the number of Boston theatres playing the same pictures simultaneously. It is pointed out that this is all the more remarkable since Boston theatres have long followed the double feature or the feature-and-vaudeville policy. Until Educational entered the field, it was almost impossible for short subjects to secure representation, declares the statement.

Manager John J. Scully, in making the report, calls attention to the fact that every downtown Boston theatre is represented in the list and that there were scores of outlying and neighborhood theatres playing his product for one or more days during the week, which he does not include in the record.

This is the record for the week: The Modern and the Beacon both played "Back From the Front." The Washington Street Olympia, Scollay Square Olympia, Old South and the Star, used "Torchy Mixes In." All four of these houses used Kinograms, in addition to the comedy. The B. F. Keith theatre, Boston theatre and Bijou Dream also used Kinograms. In addition to the comedy the Washington Street Olympia and the Old South theatres used "The Great Mirror," a Bruce Scenic.

Holman Day Special Is Set for May 22d

Associated Exhibitors announces that the Holman Day production, "The Rider of the King Log," will be released on May 22nd. The picture, according to a report from the Associated Exhibitors headquarters, was recently shown to prominent citizens of Maine and members of the state's House and Senate at Augusta. The spectators expressed hearty endorsement of the picture at the close of the showing, according to the statement. The story is laid in the lumbering regions of Maine.

At a hearing before the Massachusetts State House on censorship, Mrs. Althea Quimby, president of the State W. C. T. U., is quoted by Associated Exhibitors as declaring that if all pictures "were like 'The Rider of the King Log,' there would be no call for censorship and no need of it."

Actors Hurt in Filming of "Foolish Wives"

Two actors are reported by Universal to have been severely burned in the filming of "Foolish Wives," Erich Von Stroheim's million-dollar Universal production, when they jumped from a blazing seventy-foot tower.

The burning of the tower was a part of the picture, and the men were supposed to jump before the flames reached them, but delayed too long, it is explained by Universal. The camera recorded their plunge through a flapping sheet of flame. This plunge will provide another thrill which was not written into the 'script.

"Wallingford" Picture Well Under Way

George Randolph Chester, who is at Vitagraph's West Coast studios directing "The Son of Wallingford" which he wrote in association with Mrs. Chester especially for a Vitagraph super feature, is making rapid progress on this production, according to reports received in the East this week.

The cast assembled for this production includes Tom Gallery in the title role, Priscilla Bonner, George Webb, Antrim Short, Bobby Mack, Andrew Arbuckle, Van Dyke Brooke, Sidney D'Albrook, Florence Hart and Lyls Leslie.

"Black Sheep" Released on May 15

"Black Sheep," the Pinnacle Productions picture, featuring Neal Hart, which was directed by Paul Hurst and Louis Chaudet, will be released, it is announced, on May 15th on the independent market.

Supporting Mr. Hart in this newest Pinnacle feature will be found: Miss Audrey Chapman, Mimmy McLaughlin, Ted Brooks, George Williams, Frona Hale and Al Kaufman.

The story of "Black Sheep" is the screen adaptation of W. C. Tuttle's "Baa, Baa, Black Sheep," which appeared as the feature article in the January issue of "Short Stories" magazine.

Larry Semon, Vitagraph comedian, in his new comedy, "The Hick." Marion Aye is his leading woman

Preparing New Stories for Goldwyn Pictures

SEVERAL stories of unusual interest are being prepared by the Goldwyn scenario department for future production. Charles Kenyon, the well known playwright, is making the adaptation of Hall Caine's famous novel, "The Christian." Arthur F. Statter has just finished the continuity for an original screen story by Leroy Scott, tentatively called "The Mother."

Rupert Hughes is now working on a story designed to fit the special talents of Tom Moore. Its working title is "From the Ground Up." Gouverneur Morris is busy on an original Chinese fantasy, as yet unnamed. Lambert Hillyer is finishing the screen version of "The Man From Lost River," an original story by Katherine Newlin Burt.

Skirboll Bros. Become Ohio Independents

The Skirboll Brothers have gone into the independent distribution of feature photoplays in Ohio. They have called their new concern the skirboll Gold Seal Production. It is under the direct management of W. N. Skirboll. The Skirboll Brothers have, for the past year been identified with the Ohio Exchange for Educational Films. They are still identified with the Ohio Exchange for Educational Films, and Harry Skirboll continues to be manager of the Ohio Exchange for Educational Films. Although the Skirbolls are financially interested in the Skirboll Gold Seal Productions, the two enterprises are being handled separately, as two distinct organizations. Each maintains its separate headquarters and sales force.

"Kazan" and "The Mask" are the two initial features purchased for release in Ohio through the Skirboll Gold Seal Productions.

Robert Bruce Starts on New Camera Tour

Robert C. Bruce, who has been producing "Scenics Beautiful" for Educational Films Corporation for more than six years, has started from his Western camp on an expedition which will occupy the entire summer and a portion of the fall, according to word received at the home office.

According to Educational, "The Man Who Always Sat Down," the first of the Bruce European pictures, which records a flight over the Matterhorn and Mount Blanc, has already broken records for first run bookings, though it has been released less than a month.

"Partners of the Tide" Is Booked Heavily

Hodkinson reports "many bookings" for its release, "Partners of the Tide," Irvin Willat's picturization of Joseph C. Lincoln's novel of the same title. P. N. Brinch, general sales Manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, announces that during the past week the picture has been booked by Ike Libson of the Palace theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio; Chas. Reddy of the Victory theatre, Providence, R. I.; C. Myles of the Majestic theatre, Detroit, Michigan; J. A. Maddox, Southern theatre, Columbus, Ohio; Ed. James of the Winter Garden theatre, Seattle, Wash.; and James C. Quinn of the Rialto theatre, El Paso, Texas.

Keaton in New York to Sign Two Contracts

Buster Keaton has arrived in New York City for the purpose of closing a contract with Metro Pictures Corporation, which is distributing his two-reel comedies through arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck. Announcement is also made from the Metro headquarters that Mr. Keaton has another contract also in view to be signed within the next month. The other principal to the contract will be Natalie Talmadge, according to the statement, the object matrimony.

"Doug" Starts Work on "Three Musketeers"

ON what is said to be the biggest motion picture stage in the world Douglas Fairbanks has started the celluloid version of Dumas' immortal story, "The Three Musketeers," prepared for the screen by Edward Knoblock and being directed by Fred Niblo, who directed Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zorro."

The first shots taken were of the Queen's boudoir, the set for which has been erected on Brunton's "Stage No. 6," said to be the largest motion picture stage in the world.

All of the feminine players, gorgeously costumed, appeared in these first scenes. They include Mary MacLaren in the part of Queen Ann of Austria; Marguerite De La Motte as Constance; Barbara La Marr, characterizing Milady and all of the ladies-in-waiting.

Mollie King Feature for Independents

While Mollie King is appearing on Broadway as co-star with Lew Fields in "Blue Eyes," her shadowself will be presented by The World Film Corporation as the star of its states-rights feature, "Suspicious Wives." Miss King is supported by such well known players as Rod LaRocque, Ethel Grey Terry, H. E. Herbert, Frank DeCamp, Gertrude Berkeley and Warren Cook. The story is by Robert F. Roden, and the production was directed by John M. Stahl. The editing and subtitles are by Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub.

The Mollie King feature follows World Film's "The Wakefield Case" starring Herbert Rawlinson; "Whispering Shadows," presenting Lucy Cotton, and "The Problem Eternal" in which Joe Moore and Eileen Sedwick are co-starred.

"Their Dizzy Finish" Is New Hallroom

"Their Dizzy Finish" is the title that has been given to the second of the big Federated Hallroom Boys Comedies.

This comedy, as the title implies, is a "comedy-thriller" and is replete with some of the most daredevil stunts, performed by Sid Smith, who is featured in Hallroom Boys Comedies, that have ever been attempted for the making of a film.

Mr. Cohn is editing "Their Dizzy Finish" in New York, and the comedy will be announced shortly for release.

To Represent Hodkinson in Minneapolis

J. E. Rosen has been selected by District Supervisor Joe Bloom to handle the Minneapolis territory for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. H. L. Mitchell, who was formerly the Minneapolis Representative for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been made special salesman in Mr. Bloom's division.

Reproductions from the unusually artistic posters and 24 sheet stands on "Dream Street," a D. W. Griffith picture to be released by United Artists

"Dream Street" in Big Demand

"DREAM STREET," David Wark Griffith's latest production, which is being booked throughout the country by the United Artists, has gone across with a bang, according to a statement from United Artists. Its first showings both in New York City and Philadelphia are reported to have brought to United Artists an unusual exhibitor response for bookings,.

"The splendid popular success of Mr. Griffith's newest production, 'Dream Street,' in New York City and Philadelphia, has brought to our organization throughout the country the biggest booking response from exhibitors that our organization has so far experienced," Mr. Abrams declares.

In the statement issued from the United Artists headquarters in New York, lengthy extracts from the dailies of New York and Philadelphia are submitted to show the favorable reception accorded to the new Griffith production by the press critics. The New York Evening Telegram is quoted as follows:

"David Wark Griffith's sheer genius in pictorial work is revealed again in his new screen play 'Dream Street.' Here is the witchery of the camera as no other motion picture director can evoke it. Beautiful atmosphere scenes fairly swim before the delighted onlooker's eye. Faces beam with lovely lights on the screen. Interiors are soft, elusive corners. Exteriors have the touch such as artists achieve in great paintings. . . . Miss Carol Dempster easily attains first rank as a Griffith leading lady."

In the New York American, under the heading of "Melodrama is Lifted to High Level in Film, 'Dream Street,'" Alan Dale is quoted as follows:

"The delightful art of molding melodrama—which, as we all know, is a crude thing—so that it seems like something far more artistic is strenuously emphasized in the new picture, 'Dream Street.' When the picture is over, you say to yourself: 'This is the most gratifying instance of fantasy, with something symbolical thrown in for good measure.' You kid yourself. It is melodrama with the curse deftly removed. . . 'Dream Street,' is a very excellent, gripping melodrama. . . 'Dream Street' holds your interest from start to finish, and is more forcefully presented. . . The play was well done and was free from those annoying side issues in the shape of irrelevant comedy that disfigure so many stories. . . . I have seen no better screen actor than Ralph Graves. He has dash, youth, facial expression, and wonderful magnetism. Also, the epileptic brother, portrayed by Charles Emmet Mack, was admirable. He reminded me of Tully Marshall at his best. . . 'Dream Street' is worth seeing."

The Philadelphia Record said:

"It is love that makes the world go round, and it is love that is unfailing as the theme of any retold tale. So it is that 'Dream Street,' the latest production for the screen of that master director D. W. Griffith, touches the heart of every beholder, for a love that is transcendent animates the tale and presents a new aspect of the greatest of human emotions. But it is not the love of a man for a girl that alone entrances—rather Griffith has chosen to put upon the screen the love of two brothers and it was the affection that animated and caused to glow the story of 'Dream Street' made known last evening at the Chestnut Street Opera House.

Tourneur Film Is Set for June 19 Issue

Maurice Tourneur's production for release by Associated Producers, made under the working title of "Bright Lights," has been named "The Foolish Matrons," which is the same title as that of Donn Byrne's story from which the picture was adapted. June 19th has been set as the release date. Hobart Bosworth is the featured player. The cast also includes Doris May, Kathleen Kirkham, Mildred Manning, Margaret McQuade, Wallace MacDonald, Charles Meredith, Michael Dark, and Frankie Lee. Clarence L. Brown co-directed. The scenario is by Wyndham Gitten.

Bebe Daniels Has Dual Role in Pictures

In "Two Weeks Without Pay," Bebe Daniels newest picture for Realart, this star will appear in a dual role. She plays the parts of a salesgirl and a motion picture daredevil. "Two Weeks Without Pay" is announced for immediate release under the Star Franchise.

The story, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, was written by Nina Wilcox Putman. It was adapted for the screen by Alice Barton and photographed by H. Kinley Martin. Major Maurice Campbell directed. In the supporting cast are Walter Hiers, Polly Moran, James Mason and Jack Mulhall, leading man.

Special Showing for Feature

AT the request of the Main Society of New York City a special showing of the big Holman Day Special production, "The Rider of the King Log," will be held in New York City on May 14th at Aeolian Hall. All the members of the society and many prominent citizens of the state, including the Governor and other officials, have been invited to attend the performance.

The picture is described to be a strong romantic story set in the lumber camps of Maine. It was made in Maine and more than a year was spent in filming it there. Over 3,000 citizens of the State appear in the big scene of the picture, declares a statement from Associated Exhibitors.

Members of the State Legislature have already seen the picture at a special showing in Augusta, and have expressed their endorsement of the production. It was pointed out to us as a model of a clean picture at the hearings on censorship before the Massachusetts Legislature.

In a statement issued during the week Associated Exhibitors has the following to say about the Holman Day production:

"The character of Kavanaugh or old X. K., the dominant personality in 'The Rider of the King Log,' is one of the best which Mr. Day has ever created. He is a powerful giant of a man enthroned as king in his little realm of pine and spruce. For years he had developed his leases and rights until in the wilderness had grown up the small town of St. Agathe, peopled with Kavanaugh's own men and their families.

"Next to the love for his motherless daughter, was his love for his people, and his possessions. While he is intent on the education of his daughter, the great Temiscouta Pulp & Paper Company has silently surrounded his leases, usurped river rights and dams, and are attempting to throttle the activities of Kavanaugh and ruin the little town of St. Agathe. This man's lone fight against this powerful combination means his death, and the passing on of the Kavanaugh power and spirit to his daughter, who carries the fight to a successful conclusion.

"When Holman Day stepped out of his automobile on location, he saw Frank Sheridan dressed in his spiked boots and belted jacket, and the rough habiliments of the back woods. He imagined that the composite picture that he had mentally drawn of Kavanaugh was stalking toward him in real life, for Frank Sheridan was happily cast in the part of Kavanaugh. He is Kavanaugh every day whether on Broadway or in the Maine woods, and in the splendid acting which he has given to the part, he has created a character which places him in the front rank of screen stars.

"Sheridan has had a long career on the screen and on the legitimate stage, but he has never had a part which seemed to fit the character of a man any better than Kavanaugh, in 'The Rider of the King Log.'"

First Nat'l to Release "Peck's Bad Boy"

"PECK'S BAD BOY," starring Jackie Coogan, the youngster who made such a hit in the title role of Charlie Chaplin's six reels of joy, "The Kid," has become an Associated First National Pictures attraction and will be released by that distributing organization within the near future on the regular schedule. Announcement was made on Wednesday of this week by First National that negotiations with Irving Lesser for the Production had been completed and that the feature would be included in the releases of the organization probably within the next five weeks.

'Buried Treasure" Gets Favorable Reception

After its extended pre-release engagement in New York City Buried Treasure," Marion Davies' atest picture for Cosmopolitan 'roductions, has been favorably re-ived by the audiences in leading heatres throughout the country, ccording to a report from the Cos-opolitan headquarters.

The Philadelphia Inquirer said of Buried Treasure" when it played Philadelphia:

"It is seldom that followers of he silent drama have the opportun-y to witness as fine a portraiture f mysticism as that which is woven droitly into the production at the rcadia of 'Buried Treasure,' ith the popular Marion Davies in e stellar role. Despite the diffi-ulty of portraying on the screen n atmosphere which has proved a tumbling block even to skillful riters in the printed page, this ackground is never lost."

In the east with Miss Davies are Norman Kerry, Anders Randolf, Edith Shayne, Earl Schenck, John harles and Thomas Findlay.

Scours City to Locate Tahitian Girls

In order to obtain the proper atnosphere for "The Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan production scheduled for early release by Paramount, Cosmopolitan productions scoured New York for real Tahitian girls for the scenes laid n the South Sea Island dance hall. With the aid of the French Consul nd several other people interested n the South Sea Islands, and especially former residents of Tahiti, wenty Tahitian girls were found in his city and other cities in the ountry, declares Cosmopolitan. The girls wear the pareu, which is the ative Tahitian costume and hibiscus flowers in their hair, as do the South Sea Islanders.

"The Woman God Changed" was written by Donn Byrne and the scenario was written by Doty Hobart. Robert G. Vignola directed he picture. Seena Owen and E. K. Lincoln play the leading parts. Lillian Walker, Henry Sedley, H. Cooper Cliff, Brian Darley, Paul Nicholson, Templer Saxe and Joseph Smiley are also in the cast.

Capellani Rejoins Cosmopolitan

ALBERT CAPELLANI, one of the foremost directors of motion pictures in the world, recently arrived in this country from Paris, where he was spending a vacation, to rejoin Cosmopolitan Productions. Before his departure for Europe last December, Mr. Capellani completed "Inside the Cup," the great Cosmopolitan production which has been scoring unprecedented successes throughout the country, and he also directed "The Wild Goose," which is to be released soon.

"The Wild Goose" is described by Cosmopolitan as one of the most powerful domestic dramas ever shown on the screen, and Mr. Capellani's direction in this picture is up to the very high standard which he set in his past achievements.

Albert Capellani was born in Paris, and for twelve years he directed motion pictures in Paris and other parts of France. Mr. Capellani directed the great twelve-reel production of Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "Les Miserables," which was shown in this country several years ago. Coming to this country in 1914 after the outbreak of the war, Mr. Capellani directed Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, Holbrook Blinn and many other stars. He later became director general for Selznick, and then directed Nazimova and Emmy Whalen for Metro.

Albert Capellani

After leaving these companies, Mr. Capellani formed the Albert Capellani Productions, directing pictures with Dolores Cassinelli, June Caprice and Marjorie Rambeau.

In March, 1920, Mr. Capellani joined Cosmopolitan Productions and soon after began work on "Inside the Cup." In this picture Mr. Capellani gave an example of his masterly direction, and the result has been a picture which exhibitors throughout the country have acclaimed as the greatest feature success of the year.

In "The Wild Goose," which is taken from the novel by Gouverneur Morris and was adapted for the screen by Donnah Darrell, Mr. Capellani has produced a great work of art, declares Cosmopolitan officials. With the aid of Joseph Urban's settings, this picture is one of the most beautifully mounted and directed screen productions that Cosmopolitan Productions has produced, it is declared. Its theme is described to be wonderful and gripping, and Capellani has brought out the great features of that theme with a skill that his experience of eighteen years in motion picture production abroad and in this country has taught him.

Kipling Feature Is Completed

DIRECTOR JAMES YOUNG reports to Paul Brunet that he has completed the filming of Rudyard Kipling's first Pathe picture, "Without Benefit of Clergy." Cutting and assembling are now in progress at the Brunton Studios. Release will be set for the production early in May. The actual shooting of the scenes required considerably less time than Director Young anticipated, considering the picture's essentials of exotic atmosphere and finished characterizations. This saving of time was largely due to Robert Brunton's care in making the sets and properties, for which Rudyard Kipling himself had supplied models and designs, and most explicit written directions, it is declared. Moreover, both Director Young and the leading man—Thomas Holding—had the advantage of picture experience in India, in fact were familiar with real life scenes and characters such as are reproduced with so much fidelity in "Without Benefit of Clergy."

During the last weeks of the filming of the Kipling feature many members of the Los Angeles Oriental Colony were permitted to visit the streets, market place, courts, bazaars and dwelling interiors of the ancient Hindu city of Lahore reproduced on the Brunton lot. They expressed their admiration of the fidelity of these sets to the original scenes, even to the smallest details. Several distinguished travelers seeking and being granted the same privilege, expressed themselves similarly. Among these was M. Etienne de Marsac, the international journalist and film expert—a guest of Randolph Lewis, who, assigned as a technical expert by Paul Brunet, had assisted Mr. Kipling in the preparation of the continuity of "Without Benefit of Clergy."

Mr. Lewis has reported M. de Marsac as saying:

"I am certain that this is one of the most notable productions of the year, with beautiful photography and marvelously accurate and beautiful settings. It is certain that Mr. Kipling will be amazed at the perfect fidelity of the environment which he will see depicted in the street of Lahore, built on the Brunton lot.

"Here, indeed, is the highest perfection of the motion picture art, coupled with an amazing breadth of research and capacity for reproduction of type. This street of Lahore, on actual close view of the spectator, is almost as real as its original in India. And for sheer beauty of light, tone and composition, the courtyard of the house of love is one of the most striking pictorial creations that I have ever seen, while yet preserving with charming fidelity all the spirit of Kipling's description. All through I think that this first Kipling picture will mark one of the big epochs in the history of the cinema."

New Sennett Comic to Be Released May 8

May 8th has been selected as the release date of Mack Sennett's new comedy to be distributed by Associated Producers, which is titled "She Sighed by the Seaside." Ben Turpin heads the cast.

Al Christie Promises Record Comedy

AL CHRISTIE, president of the Christie Comedy organization, has added Eddie Barry and Helen Darling to the cast of "Nothing Like It," a two-reel comedy which will be released through Educational Exchanges. The cast also includes Dorothy Devore, Earl Rodney and Eugene Corey. Christie has built a complete stage on his biggest open stage, including the theatre stage, orchestra seats complete, entire galleries, and then the scenes back stage including the dressing rooms.

Charles Christie, general manager, who is in New York in consultation with E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., declares that this picture is merely representative of the new policy of his company as the result of his experience with Educational distribution during the past year. "We have been able to get so much larger returns from our product, and so much more speedily" he explains, "that we are able to put more money and greater effort into the comedies than before without increasing the rentals to exhibitors."

Pathe to Describe How Radium Is Obtained

Pathe announces that in Pathe Review No. 109 there will be presented "the whole complicated process of obtaining radium from carnotite ore." Mme. Curie, the French scientist, to whom is credited the earliest experiments with radium for curative purposes, is expected shortly in this country to receive from President Harding one gramme of radium as a tribute to her work in her chosen field. The funds to procure this gramme were raised by popular subscription. This gramme is estimated to be worth $125,000. Pathe announces that Pathe Review No. 109 will be released about the time that Mme. Curie arrives in this country.

Will Rogers on New Film

Frank Lloyd Company Comes East; Worsley Finishes "Ace of Hearts"

WILL ROGERS has returned from Case Grande, Ariz., where the last exteriors for "Doubling for Romeo" were taken and on Wednesday last began work on his next starring vehicle, "A Poor Relation," adapted from Edward E. Rose's famous old play. Clarence Badger is directing. In the cast are Sylvia Breamer, Molly Malone, John Bowers, Sydney Ainsworth, George Williams, Robert Devilbiss, Jeannette Trebaol and Walter Perry.

Director Frank Lloyd and several members of the company acting in the Rita Weiman photoplay, "The Grim Comedian," left Wednesday for New York to take the final scenes in that picture. The Times Square section at night will be photographed. The members of the company making the trip are Phoebe Hunt, Jack Holt, John Harron, Gloria Hope, Norbert Brodin, cameraman, and Harry Weil, assistant director.

Wallace Worsley on Wednesday finished the photography on Gouverneur Morris' "Ace of Hearts," in which Leatrice Joy, Lon Chaney, John Bowers and others are appearing.

The cast of Mary Roberts Rinehart's original photoplay tentatively known as "The Glorious Fool," has been completed by the addition of Frederick Vroom and Lillian Langdon. E. Mason Hopper is directing the picture. Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix have the leading roles.

A small town street has been built on the Goldwyn lot here for "Beating the Game," Charles Kenyon's story, in which Tom Moore is starring, under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. Hazel Daly, the wife of Moore's former director, Harry Beaumont, plays opposite the star.

Reginald Barker will soon start work on the new Gouverneur Morris story, "Who Shall Judge?" which Ruth Wightman has adapted to the screen.

Big Circuits Book Kinetos

Kineto Review, Released by Nat'l Exchanges, Wins Many Bookings

THE news has just come in to Kineto Co., that the Lubliner and Trinz Circuit of thirty-five houses in Chicago are playing all Kineto Reviews one a week, contracting for an entire year. Harry Weiss, of the Superior Screen Service, Inc., distributors in the Chicago territory for National Exchanges, Inc., wired that information the other day.

Savini Films, who are distributing in the South, report similarly with the Lynch houses. The manager of the Howard Theatre in Atlanta says he has received all kinds of commendatory letters on account of his showing the Kineto Reviews.

In Missouri, the Famous Players Circuit is playing them with the same good reports, according to the Independent Film Co. of Missouri, and in California the Sol-Lesser-Gore houses are all playing them.

"Everywhere," states Kineto, "the best theatres are playing the Kineto Reviews and finding that agreeable surprise, a subject can be very high class, very worth-while and still be more entertaining than the ordinary picture.

"It is worthy of note that the exhibitors are recognizing the unusual value of the Kineto Reviews and in many cases they are billing them as 'Specials.' The Allen Theatre in Cleveland was one of the first to do this."

Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Co., insisted that a long tryout be given them, so that there could be no doubt of their national reception when the time came for them to be released generally.

Novel "Stunt" Put Over at Authors' Dinner

At the recent annual dinner of the Authors League of America in New York eminent authors and the movies were brought closer together through an ingenious stunt arranged by Tom J. Geraghty, supervising director of Paramount pictures made in the company's eastern studios.

As the authors and writers arrived at the banquet Mr. Geraghty had close-up pictures made of them in action. This was all very well and nothing unusual about it—just like taking a news reel—and George Ade, George Barr McCutcheon, Ellis Parker Butler, Gelette Burgess, Rex Beach and numerous others went through the picture making with much eclat.

The "kick" in the scheme came as the banquet was being concluded The toastmaster announced that he had something to show the writers, a curtain was dropped from the end of the hall and the guests were shown on the screen their pictures which had been taken but two hours before. The stunt proved one of the most interesting on the program, and the authors expressed themselves as entirely satisfied with the movies.

Arthur C. Kane Visits Coast Studios

Arthur S. Kane, president of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures, Corporation, is now on the Pacific Coast, having gone to Los Angeles to confer with the various picture stars in whom he and his company are interested, and his several business associates in California.

Though Mr. Kane had little to say regarding details of his plans, before leaving New York City, it is surmised that he will spend much of is time in the studios of Charles Ray, whom he presents in his productions. This star is now at work on "The Barnstormer," his eight feature under his contract with First National. It is expected that Mr. Kane, Mr. Ray and Richard Willis, vice-president and general manager of Charles Ray productions, Inc., will confer regarding Mr. Ray's future productions under this contract.

"Beach of Dreams" for Release by R-C

Robertson-Cole has in "Beach of Dreams" what it describes to be "a particularly good summer release." The production is based on H. De Vere Stacpoole's novel of the same name and presents Edith Storey and Noah Beery in the featured roles. E. Richard Schayer adapted the novel for the screen, and William Parke was in charge of the direction. In the cast besides Miss Storey and Mr. Beery are Sidney Payne, Jack Curtis, George Fisher, Joseph Swickard, Margaret Fisher, W. Templer Powell, Gertrude Norman and Cesare Gravini.

Interesting "Shots" in Current Kinograms

In the Kinograms reel, released the first half of this week, exclusive pictures are shown of the Hasty Pudding Club at Harvard with the members taking the roles of chorus girls in their annual theatricals. Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion, is shown at the start of his training for the Carpentier bout. There are some excellent picture of the Boston Marathon, and then there is a touch of pathos in a bicycle race of crippled French war veteran at St. Germain.

President Harding's first visit to New York since his election is recorded, and there is another patriotic touch with scenes of the award of the Croix de Guerre to St. Mihiel, which was the scene of the first independent operation of American troups.

24 Christie Comedies Issued in 10 Months

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that it will release its twenty-fourth two-reel Christie Comedy on May 22, just ten months after the opening of its first offices. This will be "Southern Exposure," a farce, featuring Neal Burns and Vera Steadman.

Under the original contract between Educational and Christie twenty-four comedies were to be provided for release during the twelve months ending June 20, but so great was the demand on the part of exhibitors, it is stated, that it was necessary to schedule one of these every two weeks, instead of two a month, as originally scheduled. This policy of twenty-four a year will be followed permanently.

Gordon Place Assisting C. Seymour Clark

C. Seymour Clark, director of publicity and advertising for the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, announced today the appointment of Gordon H. Pre-View for "Reputation"

Special Showing at Hotel Astor, New York; Planning Big Campaign

NEXT Monday afternoon, at two thirty P.M., in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor, Carl Laemmle will present Priscilla Dean in her new big production, "Reputation." Invitations for pre-view have been issued to all of the exhibitors in the New York zone and to the trade papers and the newspapers. A special musical score has been arranged by James C. Bradford which will be rendered by an orchestra of twenty-seven pieces, personally conducted by Mr. Bradford himself, and according to reports from the Universal Film Co., a real dramatic treat is in store for the trade.

In "Reputation," Miss Dean is said to have gotten entirely away from the "crook" roles, in which she has heretofore been seen and in this new field she assumes a dual role and four distinct additions of characterization.

One of the most complete publicity campaigns ever inaugurated for a picture has been planned for the presentation of Priscilla Dean in "Reputation," declares Universal. Every angle of showmanship is covered in an eight page press book that is the size of a newspaper, it is announced. The publicity stories are laid out in systematic order so that the exhibitor will have no trouble in arranging his publicity to run smoothly in advance and during the showing of the picture.

Several novel throw-aways have been prepared, according to the Universal statement, notably a "Scandal Sheet," which is a four page newspaper of the new tabloid size, that is to be distributed by newsboys in the same way the German newspaper is circulated to the public.

Dwan Film Set for June 12

"The Broken Doll" Is Scheduled for Release by Associated Producers

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS declares that the new Allan Dwan production, "The Broken Doll," which has been scheduled for release by Associated Producers, on June 12, is a picture "pulsing with heart-throbs and replete with tense situations." The cast includes Monte Blue, Mary Thurman, and little Mary Jane Irving in the principal roles. The scenario and the direction of the picture are credited to Mr. Dwan. The production is an adaptation of Wilbur Hall's story, titled, "Johnny Cucabod."

The statement just issued from the headquarters of the Associated Producers has the following to say regarding the story and cast of "The Broken Doll:"

"'The Broken Doll' is a story of the great love of a big-hearted ranch hand for a little crippled child. Of course there is a romance brought about through this association which results in the marriage of the youngster's admirer to the daughter of the Sheriff who is equally interested in the welfare of the little cripple. There are plenty of thrilling situations in the story—all brought about by the ranch hand's endeavor to raise sufficient money to purchase a new doll for Rosemary, when he accidentally breaks her old favorite—'Louise Albertine.'

"Monte Blue as Tommy Dawes, the ranch hand, gives a splendid performance in this most recent Dwan Special, which is to be released by Associated Producers on June 12. Likewise, little Mary Jane Irving as Rosemary, the crippled little idol of Dawes, is at her best. In the role of Harriet Bundy. Mary Thurman gives a pleasing interpretation.

Short Subjects Pushed at Universal City

THE production of one and two-reel subjects, both comedy and Western, is running at high speed at Universal City, Cal., reports from the Universal home office indicate.

Lee Moran is completing his first two-reel comedy, entitled, "Whose Wife Is Kate?" Harry Burns, a recent addition to the Universal directorial staff, is working on the second of a series of Universal-Jewel comedies starring Joe Martin, the orang-outang. Ward Hayes is filming "A Taxi Tangle" with Billy Fletcher in the leading role. Hoot Gibson is being directed by Lee Kohlmar in "Too Tired Jones."

Jack Perrin is being directed in "The Rim of the Desert," a two-reel Western, by Edward Laemmle. Magda Lane plays the principal feminine role. The company is on location on the desert.

News Briefs of N. Y. F. I. L. M. Club

President Chadwick, of the New York F. I. L. M. Club, appointed Mr. Henry Siegel to attend the meeting of executives of the different F. I. L. M. clubs of Boston, New Haven, New York City, Albany and Buffalo, which will hold its first meeting on Thursday, May 5, in Pathe Exchange, Albany.

Mr. Felix Goldfarb was appointed to fill the vacancy on the Grievance Committee Membership.

The Grievance Committee is now composed of four exchange managers, four exhibitors and one exchange manager who acts as chairman of the committee. The exhibitor bodies are represented by Attorneys Edelhertz and Suchman. The other exhibitor members are W. A. Landau and H. Rachmil. The exchange managers are Messrs. Jack Von Tilzer, chairman; Arthur Abeles, Melvin Hirsch, Felix Goldfarb, President Chadwick, ex-officio.

A resolution of condolence was passed extending sincere sympathy to Mr. Sam Zierler on the death of his mother.

Improvements Made to Hal Roach Studios

Pathe reports that extensive improvements made on the Hal Roach Studios in Culver City during the past few months have approximated $100,000. These improvements include the erection of a tile stage, 200 x 80 feet. A new two-story fire-proof building, 100 x 40 feet, contains all the dressing rooms. Then there is the laboratory, 75 x 50 feet, built of hollow fire-proof tile. This laboratory is said to be the equal of any picture-making laboratory in the country. Adjoining the cutting-room is the swimming pool, 50 x 75 feet and 8 feet deep. The building of a second dark stage to meet increased production activities is planned for the near future, says Pathe.

Linder Returns in Glory

French Comedian Winning Favorable Criticism in New Picture

MAX LINDER, the French comedian who has come back to America after finishing his war work, has made a hit with his initial offering "Seven Years Bad Luck," released through Robertson-Cole, according to reports from all over the country.

"Audience was laughing all the while," says one exhibitor, "and I can recommend this picture to anyone for it will surely clean up big. It is wholesome and passed all censorship questions because it is clean. Linder does some real funny business which has put him high with our patrons."

At a run in Los Angeles for a selected group of society women, "Seven Years Bad Luck" went over with more applause than the average picture gets in a real theatre with music.

Linder has engaged Clarke Irvine to be his advertising and publicity agent, and Mr. Irvine is establishing a department at the Linder studios to handle all the press book material and news matter directly to newspapers and exhibitors. He expects to make a stop-over trip to the East within a few weeks in the interests of Linder's second picture, "Who Pays My Wife's Bills?"

After a month's vacation Linder is to commence another five-reeler at his studio in Universal City.

New Serial for Hutchison

Geo. Seitz to Direct "Hurricane Hutch"; Production Begins May 1

PATHE announces that Charles Hutchison is to be the star of a new serial, entitled "Hurricane Hutch," which will be put into production about May 1st. "Hurricane Hutch" will be directed by George B. Seitz. The interiors will be filmed at the Seitz studio in New York, and Ausable Chasm in upper New York State will be used for a number of the exterior scenes. "Hurricane Hutch" was adopted as the title in preference to that of "One Chance in a Million."

The supporting cast for "Hurricane Hutch" will contain a list of players already well-known to screen audiences. Lucy Fox, who starred in Leonce Perrit's "The Empire of Diamonds," will appear in the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Hutchison. Warner Oland will play the "heavy." The part of the female "heavy" will be taken by Ann Hastings. Harry Semels will also be seen in an important role.

According to the statement from the Pathe headquarters, Charles Hutchison is to maintain if not surpass his previous record for daring and thrilling stunts in Pathe chapter-pictures. Says Pathe:

"Already Hutchison and Seitz have picked their locations, and from their choices it is very apparent that Hutchison will not spare himself in performing daring deeds before the camera.

"Deception" Breaks Record at Rivoli

All previous records for attendance at the New York Rivoli were broken last week by "Deception," Paramount's European production directed by Ernest Lubitsch, announces that company. For each day of the week the attendance figures were as follows: Sunday, 9,214; Monday, 7,536; Tuesday, 7,710; Wednesday, 7,572; Thursday, 6,911; Friday, 6,609; Saturday, 8,702. Total, 54,254. The highest previous week's record at the Rivoli was 53,873.

80% of Houses Signed Up

To Show Educational Releases in Week, May 1-7, Says Home Office

A STATEMENT from the Educational headquarters declares that in connection with Educational week, May 1 to May 7, many exchanges have already placed contracts for entire series of pictures that have not before been booked in a number of theatres and in many cases where they have not been seen in smaller cities. The statement also says that preliminary reports from the various branches show that product of the company will be shown in at least 80 per cent of all the houses in this country and Canada during the seven days set aside for the celebration.

Five cities are reported to have sent word to the home office that it is impossible for them to set a new record by having some of these pictures shown in every theatre during Educational Week, since they have established that record before. However, the attempt will be made in such cases, declares the home office, to have the entire programs with the exception of the feature made up from the one and two-reel pictures, including comedies, scenics, specials and Kinograms.

Another of the effects of Educational Week, according to the home office, is to bring about an unusual advance in those exchange districts which opened late. The first Educational offices began bookings with the week of June 20, 1920, but others were opened at various intervals, a few of them getting started as late as the first of October. As a general rule these last offices were in the smaller territories that have not had the opportunity to consume the same amount of product as the larger ones. Result of the canvass of the solicitors and the offer of spot bookings has been to create an immediate demand for the pictures and every office has reported numerous contracts to start immediately instead of waiting for the first of May.

No pre-releases will be permitted for the purpose of making a showing, but the first run theatres in the principal cities will have an opportunity to show the pictures for the first week in May which include "Snooky's Wild Oats," a two-reel Chester comedy; "Zero Love," a single reel Gayety; "The Red Trail's End," a Chetser Outing and two issues of Kinograms.

Pathe News Has Views of "Brodie" Leap

A REPORT from Pathe headquarters states that when Sailor Daniel Carone recently dove from the Brooklyn Bridge into the East River, "on a bet," Pathe News, in response to an invitation from Carone, was on hand to witness the feat and secured exclusive motion-pictures of the 150-foot dive. These views are shown in Pathe News No. 31.

Carone "did the Brodie" on Sunday, April 10th. Pathe News cameramen "were unobtrusively on time," according to the Pathe statement, "one sauntering along the bridge walk while another was stationed on a tugboat hovering about off the foot of Beekman street." The result of these preparations was that every detail of the thrilling stunt from the moment that Carone mounted the girders and took the leap until he reappeared on the surface of the river and climbed aboard the tug, was caught by the various cameras on the scene. The Pathe statement declares that "not as much as a black-and-blue mark showed for a souvenir of his performance."

Universal Engages New Exploitation Man

The latest addition to the Exploitation Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is J. A. Daly, well known in publicity circles, it is announced at the Universal home office. Daly will make his headquarters in Philadelphia, and will help exhibitors in and near Philadelphia to exploit Universal productions. He also will do similar work in and near Washington, and may work as far South as Charlotte, N. C.

Daly will devote most of his time during the next few months to the exploitation of "Outside the Law," Priscilla Dean's recent underworld drama, and to "Reputation," the new Universal-Jewel production made by the same star.

New Film for Ass'd Exhibs

Contracts for Release of Bryant Washburn's "The Road to London"

CONTRACTS have been closed by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and Screenplays Productions, Inc., for the release by Associated of "The Road to London," starring Bryant Washburn. Negotiations were conducted for Associated by Mr. Arthur S. Kane, chairman of the board of directors, and by Lee Ochs, representing the Screenplays Productions, Inc. The picture will be released on June 19.

"The Road to London" was made in London and the surrounding country with an American and English cast. Many of the most famous places in the English Capitol are shown in the film. The country scenes afford unusual opportunity for beautiful photography, and full advantage was taken of this, it is stated.

The story is a comedy drama, filled with the romance of a young American and a pretty English girl. Mr. Washburn has seldom had such an opportunity as is presented in "The Road to London" for demonstrating his ability, and his performance is said by those who have seen the picture to be an excellent one.

The picture tells the story of a young girl who is about to be married to a wealthy Englishman, as her parents desire it. The young American "doing" London, arrives on the scene of one of her most distressing moments and he undertakes to rescue her from the contemplated marriage. He captures the young lady and carries her away in a stolen automobile. Their adventures while being pursued by the irate parents and the angry suitor create five reels of excellent entertainment, it is declared.

Associated Producers Has "Devotion"

Associated Producers, Inc., it is announced by General Manager Al Lichtman, has acquired for general distribution "Devotion," a six-reel special production dealing with a topic of universal and timely interest. The picture will be released through all Associated Producers exchanges in July.

"Devotion" was written and produced by A. J. Bimberg.

Witwer to Write the Lee Moran Comics

Arrangements have just been made with H. C. Witwer, one of America's best known humorists, to supply Lee Moran with comedy stories for screen production. The first story he will provide for the use of Lee Moran is called "Robinson's Trousseau" and was recently published in the American Magazine. Lee Moran will use it for his next two-reeler.

Paramount Releases for April 24th

THE releases announced by Paramount for April 24th are "What Every Woman Knows," made by William DeMille from James M. Barrie's famous play; and "The Home Stretch," a Thomas H. Ince production, starring Douglas MacLean.

In "What Every Woman Knows" Conrad Nagel and Lois Wilson have the leading roles. The supporting cast includes Charles Ogle, Fred Huntley, Guy Oliver, Winter Hall, Lillian Tucker, Claire McDowell and Robert Brower. The scenario from Barrie's play was prepared by Ogle Printzlau.

"The Home Stretch" is a comedy offering which concerns the quandaries of the turf. In supporting cast Beatrice Burnham makes her initial appearance as feminine lead for Doug. The remainder of the cast includes: Walt Whitman, Margaret Livingston, Wade Boetler, Mary Jane Irving, Charles Mailes, Molly McConnell, Jack Singleton, Jo Bennett and George Holmes. The story is an adaptation of Charles Belmont Davis' story of the same name. It is the third Douglas MacLean picture that Jack Nelson has directed.

Coast Paper Commends "The Spenders"

"The Spenders," a Hodkinson release, has just completed a successful run at the big California theatre, Los Angeles. In reviewing the picture the Los Angeles Times says:

"Top-notch comedy drama is Wilson story. Joseph J. Dowling's characterization of Uncle Peter Bines is a perfect delight which deserves a niche in the halls of film fame. Ben Hampton saw to it that the picture reflected all the droll people of Wilson's story.

Chaplin Engages Mack Swain for Foil

Charlie Chaplin has secured the services for a long period of Mack Swain. In future Chaplin productions, Swain will act as a foil for Chaplin. He will make his initial appearance as a member of the Charlie Chaplin Company in "Vanity Fair," which is now under production.

Holubar Signs Contract with First National

A CONTRACT was signed this week by Associated First National Pictures and Allen Holubar's producing organization by the means of which First National will continue to distribute future products of the Allen Holubar company.

Mr. Holubar has definitely in mind six productions which he wishes to do. Miss Dorothy Phillips, starred in "Man - Woman - Marriage" will be starred in four of them while the other two will be made with all star casts. One story which he is anxious to begin work on first is still somewhat in abeyance due to a question as to whether he is successful in acquiring the rights to it.

The formation of the company which will handle the Allen Holubar Productions has been progressing for some time past, and the personnel has been practically completed. James Grainger, now special representative for Marshall Neilan and Charles Chaplin, will supervise the releasing contracts for Mr. Holubar by courtesy of Mr. Neilan. Harold Bocquet, who assisted in directing "Man - Woman - Marriage," will continue in the position of assistant to Mr. Holubar in the new company, and Byron Haskins will act as chief cameraman.

Photographic Novelties Seen in "Wet Gold"

J. Ernest Williamson will release his latest undersea production, "Wet Gold," via Goldwyn. Mr. Williamson wrote the story and designed a 150-foot submarine which was used in this picture. Actors are seen to leave and enter the submarine through a trap-door as the vessel lies on the bottom of the sea. The action in the submarine was photographed by the use of the Williamson tube, a long iron and canvas arrangement with a photographic chamber at its lower end, within which the photographer works. This tube is lowered from a barge on the surface. Several new departures in submarine photography and equipment are shown in "Wet Gold," it is announced.

Romance and daring are combined in the undersea drama, it is declared. Ralph Ince directed the picture and plays the leading role.

"Yon Yonson" of Stage Won to Screen

Knute Erickson, the original "Yon Yonson" of the legitimate stage and the creator of his famous characterization of "Daffy Dan" which he played in nine different stage productions, will make his debut as a screen actor in the role of "Scrap Iron" Swenson, in Roscoe Arbuckle's latest Paramount Picture, "Gasoline Gus" now under production.

Eberhardt Made Editor of "Money Sheet"

"Unchartered Seas" Issued

Current Release Stars Alice Lake; "The Last Card" Set for May 23

METRO PICTURES announces its current release to be "Unchartered Seas," in which Alice Lake is starred. "The Last Card," starring May Allison, will be ready for booking May 23, according to the Metro announcement. "Big Game," which also stars May Allison, will be held for later distribution, it is stated.

"Unchartered Seas" was released April 25th. The photoplay was adapted by George Elwood Jenks from John Fleming Wilson's story which appeared in Munsey's Magazine. Wesley Ruggles directed the production. The supporting cast includes Carl Gerard, Rudolph Valentino, Fred Turner, Charles Mailes, and Rhea Haines.

Some of the action in "Unchartered Seas" progresses against a background of snow and ice of the Arctic seas. A somewhat similar background is found in "Big Game," and it is understood that the release date of "Big Game" was retarded, and that of "The Last Card" advanced in order to preserve variety of background in the release schedule.

"The Last Card" is described to be a mystery story, adapted from Maxwell Smith's story, "Dated," by Molly Parro. Bayard Veiller directed the production. Members of the suporting cast especially prominent are Al Roscoe, Stanley Goethals, Frank Elliott, Irene Hunt, Dana Todd and Wilton Taylor.

Breaks 5 St. Louis Records

"East Lynne" is Reported to Have Gone Over Heavily in Mid-West

ACCORDING to a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters, "East Lynne" has broken five records in St. Louis. Here are some particularly noteworthy reports just received from Joe Bloom, supervisor of the Middle-West territory, of how "East Lynne" went over in St. Louis.

"The Delmont theatre, St. Louis, played 'East Lynne' to a record breaking house for five straight days. Great difficulty in accommodating patrons."

"The Webster, St. Louis, broke all house records."

"The Cherokee, St. Louis, broke all house records."

"The Grand and Florisant, St. Louis, opened 'East Lynne' on a very stormy night and had them standing to the door. Indications point to a record-breaking attendance on following days."

"The Shenandoah, St. Louis, did an exceptionally large business with 'East Lynne.'"

"The Robin, St. Louis, broke its house record that it had held for years."

"The Strand, St. Louis, did the biggest business it had done in many and many a month."

"The Erber, East St. Louis, new 2,000 seat house, opened with 'East Lynne' and played to crowded house. They have agreed to play large percentage of Hodkinson productions in this house."

Fox's May Releases Named

Program of Attractions Available During May Contains Six Features

FOX Film Corporation announces its release schedule for May, which includes six features. Tom Mix will be seen in "The Hornet's Nest," which was written by Mix himself. George E. Marshall directed "Beyond Price," written by Paul H. Sloane, will present Pearl White in the stellar role. J. Searle Dawley directed the production.

Governor Praises Beban and His Picture

George Beban is now on the Coast continuing his tour of personal appearances in connection with the presentation of his picture, "One Man in a Million." His last stop in the Mid-West before entering Canada was at St. Paul, Minn., where he was greeted by Governor J. A. O. Preus and Speaker Nolan of the House of Representatives. Mr. Beban has received the following letter from Governor Preus:

"I want you to know how much I enjoyed your picture 'One Man in a Million' and your little excerpt from 'The Sign of the Rose' which I witnessed at the Capitol Theatre last night.

"In addition to getting a great measure of satisfaction from your portrayals on the screen, I was greatly impressed by the talk you gave the audience on the subject of a higher standard of motion pictures."

At Winnipeg, Man., he was welcomed by the mayor and later was the guest of honor of the Kiwanis Club. He appeared in person at the Capitol theatre in Winnipeg where he was given a hearty reception. From Winnipeg, Mr. Beban went to Seattle, where he opened a week's engagement. This will be followed by engagements in San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles and San Diego.

Tom Meighan Feature for Release May 1

A veritable sledge-hammer blow against conviction on circumstantial evidence is delivered in "The City of Silent Men," the Paramount Picture starring Thomas Meighan, which is released on the Paramount schedule May 1.

Mr. Meighan plays the role of a small town youth, a mechanic, who goes to New York, falls in with some crooks who make him their tool, and is sent to prison on circumstantial evidence for a murder which he did not commit. For the sake of realism and faithfulness to detail, Director Tom Forman took Mr. Meighan and other members of the company to Sing Sing prison where, through the courtesy of Warden Lawes, intimate scenes of prison life, both within and outside the grey walls, were taken. There is also an interesting scene showing the famous Bridge of Sighs, which connects the New York City Criminal Courts Building and the Tombs Prison.

The story was adapted by Frank Condon from John A. Moroso's novel, "The Quarry." Playing opposite Mr. Meighan as leading woman is Lois Wilson, while the supporting cast numbers among its members such well known players as Kate Bruce, Paul Everton, George MacQuarrie and Guy Oliver.

"Four Horsemen" Still Packing Them in

Metro Pictures reports that the removal of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" from the Lyric to the Astor theatre, New York City, has brought about no diminution in the audiences witnessing the production. The picture opened at the Astor on April 10. Although the Astor theatre's seating capacity is not so great as the Lyric's, the week's receipts at the former house have been, according to an aproximate report from the Metro offices, about $22,000.

The Chicago dailies have been lavish in their praise of the picture following its opening at the La Salle theatre in that city.

More Endorsement for "Inside of the Cup"

Cosmopolitan reports the recipt of additional exhibitor endorsements of its production, "The Inside of the Cup." W. J. Melvin, Phiel theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., is quoted as follows:

"This was positively the best picture shown by us this season and I am glad to state it broke all records for the town, despite the fact that we had an awful storm the first day. This picture did twice as much business as some of the super-specials and pictures like 'The Nut,' 'The Love Light' and Passion.' The photography, story are excellent, in fact I would call 'The Inside of the Cup' a 100 per cent picture, and it is bound to be one of the outstanding pictures of the year. If properly handled it will break records everywhere shown, as it did here."

Stars in Support of Realart Star

Ruth Stonehouse and Edward Flanagan, two screen players who have been stars in their own right, will support Mary M. Minter in "Don't Call Me Little Girl," recently announced by Realart for release under the Star Franchise.

Other members of the cast who have carried leading roles are Jerome Patrick, leading man in "The Furnace," and "Her First Elopement"; and Winifred Greenwood of "The Faith Healer" and "Sacred and Profane Love."

Pathe Releases for May 8th Announced

THE Pathe release scheduled for the week of May 8 contains two serial episodes, a Rolin comedy and Pathe Review, No. 102. The second episode of the new chapter-picture, "The Sky Ranger," is titled, "The Sinister Signal." George Seitz and June Caprice are presented in the starring roles in this production. "The Auction Block" is the title of the ninth episode of "The Avenging Arrow," starring Ruth Roland. A thrilling fight in a runaway carriage is said to be a feature of this chapter.

"Snub" Pollard and the Hal Roach comedians are presented in the Rolin comedy, "No Children." The situations evolve about an apartment house where children are unwelcome. Pathe Review, No. 102, offers the following subjects: "An Afternoon With Sanki-San," Pathecolor views of the daily pastimes and recreations of Japanese women; "Her Hank of Hair," showing views of the wig-making industry; "Diving for Dinner," a slow-motion study of the sea-lions at the New York Zoological Park, and "Yankee Land," showing views along the Connecticut River.

Sennett Special Scores in Detroit Theatre

A telegram recently received from Sydney Smith, manager of Majestic theatre, Detroit, and addressed to General Manager Al Lichtman of Associated Producers, Inc., carries the announcement that all previous box office records established by this theatre were far outdistanced when "A Small Town Idol," Mack Sennett's six-reel special, opened at the popular Chicago photoplay house a short time ago.

So successful was the original seven-day engagement that the Sennett feature was held over an additional week.

Newspaper space was used heavily, and other methods of publicity were employed, in addition to an effective exploitation campaign.

Margaret Seddon Cast in Important Role

Margaret Seddon, who has just completed an important part in "Just Around the Corner," the Cosmopolitan Production which Frances Marion has directed from a scenario she wrote, has joined the cast of "Boomerang Bill," a Cosmopolitan Production in which Lionel Barrymore is taking the leading part. "Boomerang Bill" is being directed by Tom Terriss. The scenario was written by Doty Hobart from a Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Jack Boyle, author of the "Boston Blackie" stories. Others in the cast of "Boomerang Bill" are Grace Bonney, Matthew Betts, Frank Shannon and Miriam Battista.

Press Comments Favorably on Tom Moore

Goldwyn submits excerpts of the New York press criticisms on its latest production starring Tom Moore, "Made in Heaven," from the stage play of the same name by William Hurlbut, which was shown at the Capitol Theatre last week.

The Herald said: "As it is Irish and genial it means that Tom's himself again. . . . The picture, plus Moore, is engaging."

American: "The play is just a pleasing bit of sentiment, devoid of villains and adventuresses. Tom Moore smiles and philanders through smoothly and with finished grace."

Producers Security Has Holman Day Story

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Producers' Security Corporation that the picturization of the well known Holman Day story, "Squire Phin," featuring Maclyn Arbuckle, is now ready for release to territorial distributors.

"Squire Phin" was dramatized for the legitimate stage under the title of "The Circus Man," and was one of the greatest successes of its day.

It is said that the quaint characterization of the Squire by Maclyn Arbuckle is the best work yet accredited to this star.

Cohn Sole Editor of Screen Snapshots

Jack Cohn, producer of Screen Snapshots, states that it has come to his attention that a former employee is writing to and visiting various studios, stars and exchanges throughout the country, representing himself as "former editor and exploitation manager of Screen Snapshots."

Mr. Cohn states that he has personally edited every issue of Screen Snapshots and that he will continue to do so. He announces that anyone else representing himself as present or former editor of Screen Snapshots is telling an untruth and is guilty of misrepresentation of the facts, which is misleading and confusing to exhibitors and producers.

Equity Reports First Sale

"Black Panther's Cub" Bought for New York Territory in Record Time

EQUITY PICTURES this week reports the first sale on their new picture, "The Black Panther's Cub," produced by the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation. This was made on April 19 to Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, for New York and Northern New Jersey, exactly one day after Equity itself had purchased the rights to the picture from Ziegfeld.

Mr. Zierler's salesmen were as enthusiastic as he over the new production. It is believed that "The Black Panther's Cub" will gross as much as "Straight From Paris," the latest Clara Kimball Young production.

The huge sets, showing vast throngs of soldiers, glittering arrays of costumed gentry, and colorful ballet scenes, which characterize "The Black Panther's Cub" rival and outshine some of the foreign importations now current, was the opinion of the Commonwealth president.

"'The Black Panther's Cub,'" he states, "even surpassed other extravagantly staged productions in dramatic interest. It is not merely a dazzling spectacle, but it is a throbbing drama of Parisian life besides. Florence Reed's remarkable performance in a four-part role is admirable and the support of four Broadway celebrities—Norman Trevor, Tyrone Power, Earl Foxe and Mlle. Dazie, the prima donna, made a flawless combination."

The praise showered on "The Black Panther's Cub" by critics of the press and trade papers were found to be justified, after Zierler had seen the Ziegfeld production. Zierler congratulated J. I. Schnitzer, president of Equity on his foresight in buying "The Black Panther's Cub" before any of the national producers had anticipated him.

"The Florence Reed feature is a boon to the independent market," said Zierler "and it will convince the industry that the state right field has as much genuine box office material as any of the big organizations. Speaking for my own territory, I believe 'The Black Panther's Cub' will draw as much business as the biggest hit of any of the program producers."

Catherine Calvert Pictures Arouse Interest

Dominant Pictures, Inc., through its general manager, Jacques Kopfstein, reports that a great deal of interest has been aroused and concretely manifested in the series of Catherine Calvert productions, four in number, originally made for the U. S. Amusement Corp. and now being sold on the open market under the Dominant banner.

Brown Sales Manager of Equity of Canada

EQUITY Pictures Corporation, Ltd., of Montreal, announces that E. A. Brown has been engaged as salesmanager of the firm. Mr. Brown severed his connections as Canadian representative of United Artists and undertook his new duties this week. Mr. Brown is considered one of the best-known salesmen of the Dominion. His career as a salesman dates back to twelve years ago.

Mr. Brown will shortly leave Montreal for a tour of the key cities of Canada where he will call upon the leading exhibitors of each district in his new capacity of sales manager of Equity.

Hallroom Comedies to Be Censor-Proof

According to an announcement just made by Harry Cohn, who is producing Hallroom Boys Comedies for Federated Film Exchanges, Inc., one special point is to be made in the making of every one of these comedies—and that is, that they shall be absolutely clean, and free of vulgarity in every way. Mr. Cohn, who has been in the East for the past three weeks, will return to the Coast shortly, where these two-reel "comedy thrillers" featuring Sid Smith are being made.

The cleanliness of these comedies has always, in Mr. Cohn's own opinion, been responsible in a large measure for the success with which they have met, special emphasis being laid on this since the first production of the series.

With the passing of the censorship bill, however, and the necessity for "censor-proof" pictures, even greater attention will be given to this detail, says Mr. Cohn.

Affiliated to Release Hemmer Series

It became known this week that C. C. Burr, President of Affiliated Distributers, Inc., the formation of which organization was recently announced, has successfully negotiated a long term contract with Edward Hemmer, to direct a series of productions for that organization, the first of which will be released during the coming Autumn.

Involved in the deal which has resulted in bringing Mr. Hemmer to Affiliated, is his newest production, "Sunshine Harbor," now nearing completion.

Kineto Offers Cooperation

Distributors Appreciate Aid Given in Publicizing Subjects

DISTRIBUTORS of the Kineto Reviews are reporting enthusiastically about the co-operation the yare receiving from Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., which publishes the Kineto Reviews and distributes them through the National Exchanges.

Full publicity and exploitation service is being furnished with each release. Each Kineto Review is fully scored for every sort of musical organization to be found in a theatre, from the smallest to the largest. These musical indications, prepared by Charles D. Isaacson, of the New York Globe, are furnished gratis to exhibitors.

There is also an exploitation sheet on every Kineto Review, pointing out to the exhibitor how a short subject can be made a distinct pulling power just as effectually as a feature can. Publicity stories are also furnished, and because of the high quality of the subjects they describe they are welcomed by the dramatic editors.

A constant flow of other material is being sent to the exchanges for distribution — descriptive and exceedingly handsome catalogues with thumbnail sketches of each Kineto Review release, blotters of such fine appearance and quality that they are as welcome as they are useful, and all kinds of other helpful aids.

Letters received in the Kineto office from the various member representatives of the National Exchanges show how much this efficient service on a new short subject is appreciated.

Exchangemen Need Films

Robt. W. Priest, of Film Market, Believes Business Is Improving

"THE motion picture business throughout the United States and Canada is looking up decidedly," states Robert W. Priest, President of the Film Market, Inc.

"The healthiest sign I have seen in many months is the keen interest manifested by staid exchangemen in The Supreme Passion. The most important and substantial exchangement, in practically every territory, have telegraphed or written for information on this production.

"Investigation developed the following facts: First, that practically every exchangeman has exhausted his supply of on-hand or available pictures, and yet finds a healthy demand by exhibitors for good pictures. Secondly, state rights buyers are more confident in the prosperity of the immediate future of the industry than they have been during the past few months. Thirdly, all they require, or ask, is a fair valuation by producers.

"Pictures which are being held at pre-war rentals are frowned on by most exhibitors who prefer to book pictures with lesser stars at rentals they can afford to pay. This condition has opened the golden chest to state rights buyers, who, until necessity opened the eyes of the majority of exhibitors, suffered from neglect or lack of recognition."

Mr. Priest makes a very strong point in justification of his determination to adhere to his original modest schedule of prices for "The Supreme Passion."

Bessie Love Film Offered

"Penny of Tophill Trail" Announced by Federated Film Exchanges

"PENNY OF TOPHILL TRAIL," a five reel feature starring Bessie Love, is announced by the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., as the next picture for release on its program. In her latest vehicle, the dainty star is shown in a Western setting, and takes the oportunity of demonstrating that she can do stunt-riding in real "wild and wooly" style.

The locale of the story is the West of to-day, where airplane and flivers vie with the horse as means of transportation. Miss Love appears as Penny, the girl of mystery, under arrest in a small Western jail thievery.

She is taken in charge by the acting sheriff, and loses no time in making him her prisoner. How she does it, and the manner in which the mystery is cleared up at the end, furnishes a photoplay combining in an unusual blend the elements of whimsical humor, suspense and rapid action. The settings, both interiors and exteriors, are unusually artistic.

A capable cast is seen in support of the star, including Wheeler Oakmen, Raymond Cannon, Harry De Vere, Lizette Thorne, Gloria Holt, George Stone and Herbert Fortier. The story was adapted for the screen by Finis Fox and Beatrice Van.

Chicago Exchange Moves

Another arrival among the large growing colony in "film row," in Chicago, is the firm of Gollos and Gollos, formerly of the Masonic Temple, who have opened offices on the second floor of 806 South Wabash avenue.

--Before the ink was dry on the contract

Before the ink was dry on our contract with Mr. W. K. Ziegfeld for his quarter of a million dollar production, "THE BLACK PANTHER'S CUB," starring Florence Reed,—Mr. Sam Zierler, President of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, had bought the rights for the entire State of New York and northern New Jersey, a transaction which for speed, broke all records of Commonwealth for the purchase of any picture in the history of their Company. In stating the reason for his haste, Mr. Zierler said that "THE BLACK PANTHER'S CUB" was the first independent picture he had ever seen that was big enough to compete with any of the biggest pictures released by the National Distributing Organizations. "It's a stroke of luck," said Zierler, "to get such a picture at such a time and all Independents who can get this production for their territory are in luck for it's a whale for the box office." Nor is Zierler alone in his judgment, for Critics, Press and Public have showered their enthusiasm and unstinted approval on this elaborate picture produced under the direction of Emile Chautard and boasting of one of the most brilliant casts in picture history.

Every Independent Exchange and State Rights Men MUST be interested in this production if money and prestige is their goal. Write or wire for distribution details.

Florence Dixon, who will play leading roles in support of Jimmy Callahan in Callahan comedies

Well Known Beauty Signed

Florence Dixon, "Coco-Cola Girl," to Appear in Callahan Comedies

FLORENCE DIXON, who has been engaged by the Callahan Film Company to support Jimmy Callahan, the screen comedian, in twenty-six two-reel comedies, is known from Coast to Coast as the "Coco-Cola" girl. She is the very beautiful blonde, who posed for all the pictorial advertising issued by this company during the past three years. Her face is also seen everywhere on illuminated painted bulletin boards and in newspapers in connection with advertising.

At Broadway and Forty-second Street she smiles down on the passing crowds, and two blocks below, on Broadway, she adorns a painted bulletin on the roof of a high building. One day recently her face appeared in three different advertisements in New York dailies, referring to articles of merchandise attractive to women. Miss Dixon, during the past four years, has been more in demand for photographic work of this character, it is said, than any other model in New York.

Miss Dixon has appeared in pictures for two years. She played the star role in Robert W. Priest's "The Supreme Passion," and supported Conway Tearle and other stars in notable productions.

Ralph D. Whiting, Mr. Callahan's supervising director, said of her, after seeing the scenes run, "She is a clever comedienne and she photographs splendidly. She has a great future on the screen."

"Lure of the Orient" Wins Big Response

"The Lure of the Orient," the Aywon feature, has already awakened the interest of the state rights men. Several contracts are about to be closed with many more in the process of confirmation. It appears that President Hirsh's early prediction that the entire territorial rights would be quickly sold will be borne out in fact. The picture is said to be one that appeals to showmen, for it has unusual publicity possibilities that the live wire exhibitor will take advantage of and therefore put the feature over to good box office receipts.

In addition to the release of his big feature, "The Lure of the Orient," Mr. Hirsh announces that he now has available for the state rights market a series of six five-reel Western dramas to be known as the "Diamond Dot" Westerns and a series of what Mr. Hirsh believes to be the best two-reel slap-stick comedies ever released through independent exchanges.

Art Bates to Appear in Olympus Comedies

ART BATES, long associated with the old Essanay comedies, in which he appeared with Charlie Chaplin, Max Linder and other fun-makers of that day, has signed a contract with the Mount Olympus Distributing Corporation to appear in their series of "Dizzy Dumbbell" comedies, soon to be released for the state rights field.

Lou Tops, well known in vaudeville for his act, "Tops and His Pets," also has signed for the "Dizzy Dumbbell" series, and will work with Bates.

The Mount Olympus company has established a West Coast branch in the Pacific Finance Building, Los Angeles, with Halsey H. Tower in charge. A Chicago headquarters also has been opened at 122 South Michigan Boulevard. William H. Engelman will manage this branch.

"Shadow" Press Book Ready

J. J. Sameth, of Forward Films, to Have Elaborate Campaign Book

SPEED is the slogan by which plans were consumated for the proper distribution of "The Shadow," by Forward Film Distributors, Inc. Twenty four hours after purchase, J. Joseph Sameth assembled his advertising and publicity experts and the work actually commenced on the campaign book, selection of posters and choice of lobby.

The campaign book is said to be one of the most practical ever issued in the industry. It was made with an eye for service and not for show. It is in two colors and blossoms forth with suggestion that will be helpful to the most prominent as well as the smallest exhibitor. No effort was spared by Geo. L. Fecke who was commissioned by Mr. Sameth to issue a press book of helpful hints. Jack F. Reilley is responsible for the press book on "The Shadow." Tom Monroe furnished the art work.

Special attention was paid by the producers to make certain that "The Shadow" was censor proof. The lavishness of scenes and settings and the novelty of the photography and lighting effects reflect comment which is bound to make "The Shadow" one of the best pictures of the year.

Muriel Ostriche who's work has received favorable comment from producers and exhibitors is surrounded by a cast of rare excellence in her first Salient production. Walter Miller, Harold Foshay, Dorothy Blackburn and Jack Hopkins a quartet of recognized film ability ably assist Miss Ostriche in "The Shadow." Jack W. Brown, who's name has been affiliated with many of the leading film concerns assisted J. Clark Davis 2nd, in the direction.

Abramson Has Novel Stunt

"Mother Eternal" Signs Five Cent Checks; Ten Thousand Are Mailed

A NOVEL exploitation scheme is being tried out in connection with the run of Ivan Abramson's screen drama, "Mother Eternal," at the Casino theatre. It consists in mailing out real checks for five cents each, made payable to the person to whom the letter is addressed and signed "Mother Eternal." Accompanying each check is a letter of explanation.

To date, about ten thousand checks have been mailed. They have gone to individuals in various walks of life. The President and all of the heads of Government departments in Washington have received checks, as have all of New York's City officials, judges, etc. Checks have been mailed to men prominent in the different professions. Even such poor millionaires as J. P. Morgan and John D. Rockerfeller have not been neglected by "Mother Eternal." Later checks will go out to the various Smiths, Browns and Jones, who really make up the bulk of the theatre-going public. Checks are being mailed to every exhibitor in the United States and Canada.

Good Will Shown to Marion Fairfax

TELEGRAMS and messages of confidence in the success of her new undertaking are pouring in upon Marion Fairfax, noted dramatist and author, following the initial announcement concerning the formation of her own company and the production of "The Lying Truth," her first independent offering.

Among those who have sent messages of congratulations are Mayor Meredith P. Snyder, of Los Angeles; Marshall Neilan, William De Mille, S. L. Rothapfel, Frank Costello, Saul S. Harris, Charles C. Burr, B. P. Fineman, Al Christie, Charlie Chaplin and others, including many well known dramatic critics and newspapermen.

Baum Reports Improvement in Field

Louis Baum sales manager of Joan and Equity Pictures, returned this week from a two-month tour of exchange centers as far West as Denver. He stopped at Cleveland, Cincinatti, Chicago, Indianapolis, Detroit, Kansas City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha and Denver. The tour was undertaken with an idea of studying the trend of business conditions in the industry. His aim was to follow up the success of the pictures that exchangemen bought from Baum some months ago, and to assist as far as posible in lending every cooperation to make Joan and Equity pictures profitable.

"Shots" of Noted Stars Create Interest

The offices of Screen Snapshots are being deluged with messages from exchangement and exhibitors throughout the country, requesting prints on the issue of Screen Snapshots including the feature stunt showing Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin together, and the issue following that, released this week, showing Jackie Coogan, "The Kid," in some specially arranged "shots."

To Film "Wandering Jew"

Louis B. Mayer to Make Picture Version of Eugene Sue's Story

THE WANDERING JEW," based upon the story as related in the novel of the same name by Eugene Sue, is shortly to be produced by Louis B. Mayer. It will be the second in the list of specials for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which were provided for under this producer's program of augmented production during the present year.

"King Lear," the first of these special features has already been announced by Mr. Mayer. The Shakespearian production will be directed by John M. Stahl, whose direction of "The Woman in His House" and "Sowing the Wind" for Mr. Mayer, resulted in the formation of a special producing unit for the handling of John M. Stahl productions. Mr. Stahl is just completing the first of the productions by his independent unit, "The Child Thou Gavest Me" and will begin work immediately upon the filming of "King Lear." The story and a great many of the sets are ready awaiting the director.

Preparation of the continuity on "The Wandering Jew" has already been started. Mr. Mayer has not announced his selection of a director for this spectacle, but inasmuch as the actual filming of it probably will be started before "King Lear" is finished it is not likely that Mr. Stahl will be called upon to do it. Mr. Mayer's announcement said that the actual taking of "The Wandering Jew" would be started within a short time and the elaborateness of the production of "King Lear" probably will demand Mr. Stahl's undivided attention for at least two months.

Both features will be released through Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The producer's arrangements with the distributing organization in addition to covering the Anita Stewart productions and the John M. Stahl productions, included provisions for the special spectacle, of which "King Lear" and "The Wandering Jew" are the first two announced.

Affiliated's Big Program

Exchanges to Have Feature Every Eight Weeks Beginning September

WHAT is characterized as being one of the most ambitious independent producing and distributing programs ever designed, is found in the plans of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., the formation of which, together with a brief summary of their aims was recently chronicled by the trade press.

Supplementing the initial announcement, C. C. Burr, president of the new organization, stated this week that franchise negotiations were already in progress with the representative independent exchanges throughout the country and that extremely gratifying results have been achieved. Indications point to the realization of a complete, nation-wide distribution of product far in advance of the release date of the initial production. Beginning next September and thereafter every eight weeks, will be released through exchange franchise holders, one production of a series of six. Of this series, Anthony Paul Kelly's picturization of Edgar Selwyn's story of the oil fields, "Lonely Heart," featuring Kay Laurell and directed by John O'Brien, will be the initial offering. This production has been completed and awaits release date.

The second production will be "Sunshine Harbor," from the story of Jerome N. Wilson, personally directed by Edward Hemmer and featuring Margaret Beecher, the beautiful grand-daughter of Henry Ward Beecher. This production is rapidly nearing completion and is said to be Mr. Hemmer's most auspicious offering to date.

Production will be started on the third picture on or about May 15th, at the Master Films Fifty-fourth Street Studio, and will be personally directed by Mr. Hemmer.

Callahan Off for Atlantic City

Jimmy Callahan, the film comedian, and his supporting company, headed by Florence Dixon and Lottie Kendall, left New York last Sunday morning for Atlantic City in two special cars with a baggage car reserved for their baggage and studio equipment.

Mr. Callahan began the production of three two-reel comedies at the Victor studios in New York to fill the time while his new studio in Atlantic City was being put into working condition. The exteriors and the remaining interiors will be completed in Atlantic City in the next four weeks. The release will be through the Film Market, Inc.

"Straight from Paris" Opens in Boston

Following its world premiere at the Goodwin, Newark, where it packed patrons to the doors all week, "Straight From Paris," the latest Clara Kimball Young production entered the Park theatre, Boston—the largest first—run house of the city last week and held capacity audiences. As decisive as was the success that "Hush" the previous Equity star's vehicle had at the same house, the present offering easily equalled it, states Equity.

The reception of the press was unusually favorable. The Transcript, pronounced "Straight From Paris" as Miss Young's "outstanding masterpiece." "It has no dull moment; it is versatile, gay, and trips along merrily through gorgeous scenes, brilliant costumes and bubbling humor," states that paper.

Arrow Photoplays Have New Seattle Office

J. J. Goodstein, of the Arrow Photoplays Company of Denver, who is on a buying trip to New York City, announces this week that the Arrow Photoplays Company are to open another office at Seattle. While in New York Mr. Goodstein closed with Dr. Shallenberger of Arrow Film Corporation for the series of six Jack Hoxie features for his territories.

Kentucky Dramas for Dominant Pictures

That the wealth of possibilities of the little known and intensely dramatic state of Kentucky has scarcely been utilized for the screen, save in a few scattered instances, is the contention of Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of Dominant Pictures, Inc., who announces the successful negotiation of a contract with a well known producer to provide for Dominant distribution a series of twelve dramas, the locale of which will be in the fastness of the Kentucky mountains.

These productions will be known as Eastern Star Dramas. Production is to begin early in the coming Summer for Autumnal distribution.

THE following sales on the independent market were reported during the week:

"The Black Panther's Cub" (Equity Pictures), to Sam Zierler, of the Commonwealth Film Exchange, of New York, for Greater New York and northern New Jersey.

"She Played and Paid (Joan Film Sales Co.), to C. O. Brokaw, of the Merit Films of Detroit, for Michigan.

Tusan Comedies (Russell-Greiver-Russell), to R. D. Marson Attraction Co., of Boston.

Tusan Comedies to the Crescent Film Co., of Kansas City.

"Witch's Lure" (Russell-Greiver-Russell), to the Producers and Exhibitors' Pictures Co., of Dallas, Texas.

Fritzi Ridgeway series (Russell-Greiver-Russell), to the Crescent Film Co., of Kansas City.

Fritzi Ridgeway series, to the Warner Film Co. of Cleveland.

Fritzi Ridgeway series, to the Greater Production Co., of Des Moines, Iowa.

"Hearts o' the Range" (Forward Film Distributors), to Screen-Art Pictures of Philadelphia for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

Four James Oliver Curwood pictures (Arrow Film Corporation), to Phil Selznick Productions, of Cleveland, for Ohio.

GOLDWYN

Will Roger's next picture will be entitled, "A Poor Relation," and will be adapted from the play by Edward Kidder. Clarence Badger has been assigned to direct. Sylvia Breamer will play the leading female role. Supporting cast includes John Bowers, Sidney Ainsworth, George Williams, Molly Maltne, Robert De Vilbliss, Jealette Trebool, and Walter Perry.

Frank Lloyd is directing "The Grim Comedian," with Cameraman Norbert Brodin. Assistant-Director Harry Weil, and players of "The Grim Comedian" cast, including Phoebe Hunt, Jack Holt, Gloria Hope, and John Herron, are now on their way to New York to make final scenes for the production. Times Square and other locations around New York will be used as the background in these scenes.

Wallace Worsley has finished the last scenes for "Ace of Hearts." The principals are: Beatrice Joy, Lon Chaney, and John Bowers.

Frederick Vroom and Lillian Langdon have been added to the cast of "The Glorious Fool," which is an original screen story by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Mason Hopper is directing this production. The leading roles are being played by Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick.

Reginald Barker is expected to direct Leroy Scott's next original screen story.

Thompson Buchanan's play, "The Bridal Path," filmed by Mason Hopper under the title of "Look Before You Leap," has been given the final title of "All's Fair in Love." This title was suggested by May Collins.

William Duncan is to make a seven-reel subject, adapted from Ralph Cummins' Western mine story, "The Princess of the Desert Dream." This subject will be released under another title. Edith Johnson will play opposite Mr. Duncan in this picture.

"The Secret of the Hills," written by William Garrett, has been sclected as the next starring vehicle for Antonio Moreno. Chester Bennett will direct this production. Lillian Hall has been engaged to play opposite Mr. Moreno.

More than five hundred people took part in the scenes made at Balboa Beach last week for George Randolph Chester's new picture, "Son of Wallingford."

Larry Semon is starting work on "The Fall Guy," an ultra modern Western, in which flivvers supplant the horse.

BRUNTON

Douglas Fairbanks' new production, "The Three Musketeers," promises to be the most expensive picture which the star has yet made, as it requires a reproduction of Calais, France, as it appeared in the seventeenth century, a three-hundred-foot interior of the ballroo in the palace of Louis XIII and numerous other big sets. In addition it will be necessary to build a 150-foot boat, a two-hundred-foot wharf, and many other properties. One hundred and fifty elaborate costumes of the period must also be made for the production. Mary McLaren has been added to the cast to play the role of queen.

Mary Pickford will select remaining members of the cast for "Little Lord Fauntleroy" during the coming week. Actual production work will be started within the next two weeks. Continuity is now being prepared.

J. L. Frothingham is preparing to film "The Passerby," by E. Phillips Oppenheim. Continuity is being written by Frank Howard Clark, direction will be in charge of Edward Sloman. The production will be released by Associated Producers.

T. Hayes Hunter is now editing "The Light in the Clearing" for Dial Film. This picture will be released by Hodkinson.

The Robert Brunton production, "Without Benefit of Clergy," based on Rudyard Kipling's story, has been completed. Joseph Young is in charge of the editing.

HAL ROACH STUDIO

Harold Lloyd is now shooting the last scenes for his current production, "I'll Tell the World," which will consist of three reels. Subject is now being titled by H. N. Walker.

"The Defective Detective" is the title of a new Eddie Boland comedy, now being completed. The next subject to be filmed will be "Framing Up Uncle Ruth."

The cast of the Ruth Roland Serial Company includes Earl Metcalfe in the lead, Virginia Ainsworth, Harry Gerard, Otto Lederer, Frank Lackstein, Robert Rose, Gertrude Douglass, Molly Thompson, and Chick Morrison.

INCE

The complete cast for the "Cup of Life," which is being directed by Rollin W. Lee, under the working title of "Pearls and Pains," includes Hobart Bosworth, Madge Bellamy, Tully Marshall, Niles Welsh, Monte Collins, May Wallace. This is an East Indian pearl-fisher's story with Singapore as the locale. The picture is scheduled for release in June.

Douglas McClean has arrived on the Coast from the East.

"Mother O'Mine" is an adaptation of "Octopus," written by Charles Belmont Davis. It contains court room scenes in which the testimony is indicated by pantomime.

UNIVERSAL

A number of stories have been purchased from H. C. Witwer for Lee Moran. The first to be filmed will be "Robinson's Trousseau." Mr. Whitwer is now on the Coast for the purpose of co-operating in the screen production of his stories.

Edith Roberts' new vehicle will be "Out of the Storm," written by John Hohenwest. Norman Dawn will be the director.

Universal's publicity department on the Coast states that Von Stroheim's "Foolish Wives" will be ready for the screen in another month.

Mary Philbin, the Chicago beauty contest winner, will be the featured player in "The Harbor Road," written by Sara Ware Basset.

"Cyclone Smith's Vow" will be the first short-western subject starring Eddie Polo. This is the first of the new Polo series to be directed by Jacques Jaccord. Kathleen Meyers is to play the leading female role.

Hoot Gibson is starting work on a big feature adapted from Allen Dunn's story, "The Mascot of Three Stars." Gibson's pictures are to take the place of Harry Carey's productions on the Universal schedule. Harry Carey will hereafter appear in Universal-Jewel special productions. Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Sheriff of Cinnebar," has also been purchased for Hoot Gibson.

The following subjects are now being edited: "A Scarlet Shawl" directed by Jack Conway; "My Lady of the Island" featuring Edith Roberts and directed by Norman Dawn; "Christmas Eve at Pilot Butte," a Harry Carey special, directed by Jack Ford; "Whose Wife Is Kate?" featuring Lee Moran; and "The Monkey Movie Star," made by Harry Burns and featuring Joe Martin.

ABOUT PLAYERS

THE original title of the Robertson-Cole current release, "If Women Only Knew," was "Three Women Loved Him," and Robert Gordon played the "him." After being prepared for release, the main title has been changed, but followers of screen plays with Robert Gordon in the leading role, will enjoy the same opportunity of seeing the popular screen actor the object of the affections of three women, the subjects of the story. Robert Gordon is widely and favorably remembered for his characterizations in "Tom Sawyer," "Huck and Tom," "Missing," "Captain Kidd, Jr." and many other successes.

Screen actors, who are available for personal appearances of importance, are finding it hard to keep up with the demands for their services, these days, and among one of the most popularly in demand is Roger Lytton. At a meeting of the Beaux Arts Society, held at the Waldorf-Astoria, Mr. Lytton was guest of honor and warned in advance that he would be called upon for an address. This was the beginning of a busy week. Following was an entertainment under the auspices of the Edgar Allen Poe Society, at the Times Square theatre. Roger Lytton and David Bispham divided honors, Mr. Lytton reciting eight of the Edgar Allan Poe poems, to music, with characteristic delivery. Meantime, he has been rehearsing for the annual entertainment given by and for the benefit of the Actor's Equity Association, of which Mr. Lytton has long been a devoted member and worker.

Madame Olga Petrova, it would seem, will continue to be missing from screen productions yet awhile, since she will sail for Europe on the Nieu Amsterdam, and after spending a few weeks in London, will go to Spain to study conditions in Madrid and Seville. Returning to New York in June, she will commence rehearsing for a new play, under Selwyn managements, the details regarding which are not being published. Recently Madame Petrova appeared at the opening of the New Amsterdam theatre in Dallas, Texas, where many followers of motion pictures and who had seen her only on the screen, sought interviews and personal contact with the heralded star.

George Walsh, in a character-lead, sounds interesting. In "Serenade," his forthcoming picture for First National release, Mr. Walsh will be seen in the role of a young Mexican, the "hero" of his brother's original screen story, which R. A. Walsh is also directing. If we are destined to find favor in a Mexican character, and it is necessary that the unfavored native of Mexico is to have an appeal, it would seem George Walsh is one among only a few who could be cast for the part, opposite Meriam Cooper, but Mr. Walsh, it is predicted, will score in the role.

Maud Hill, besides being a dependable actress, one who will be seen in several pictures awaiting release, is also most ingenious. She will appear in a musical number incidental in the annual entertainment, given by and for the benefit of the Actors' Equity Association, in which white satin slippers with red heels are an important part of the costume. Since it is only one performance, a number of the ladies hesitated to go to the expense of fancy footwear which they might never have occasion to use again. Miss Hill discovered a solution to the problem. She purchased some flaming red isinglass paper, cut it in adjustable strips and with the aid of common muscilage, invented the most attractive red French heels any fastidious woman could ask. Needless to say, she was immediately made the heroine of the ensemble, despite the fact that in her screen work, she is usually cast for a "heavy."

Franklyn Farnum, after having been reported as engaged for a number of film projects, will actually be seen in six features produced by the Westart Corporation, of Tulsa, Okla., where Mr. Farnum has gone for the lengthy engagement negotiated by his manager, Edward Small.

A concrete demonstration of the general drawing power based on screen popularity will be seen in Philadelphia, where Vera Gordon makes a return engagement as a vaudeville headliner. A return engagement within two months is a novelty in the theatrical history of the Quaker City and is undoubtedly due to the great following won by Vera Gordon through her screen performances in "Humoresque," "The North Wind's Malice" and "The Greatest Love."

In the company supporting Miss Gordon, is another popular screen artist, Peggy Shanor, who took up vaudeville following a successful engagement in the George B. Seitz special, "The Sky Rangers," and many previous screen identifications. Nearing the metropolis, it will not be surprising if Miss Shanor is recalled to the celluloid entertainment, of which she has so long been a prominent member.

The authorities of a public school in the city of New York have invented a modern method for rewarding obedient and studious scholars. One hundred and sixty apt pupils were treated to a recreation afternoon for the first time and "treated" to seeing Charles Ray in "The Old Swimmin' Hole," which, the teachers declared, was found a most gratifying way of increasing interest in study. The fortunate children are also permitted to vote for their preference, and the choice is said to have been almost unanimous for Charles Ray, despite the fact that there were several ballots for Theda Bara.

William B. Davidson, recently engaged in playing opposite Elaine Hammerstein, in screen plays, will return to the speaking and singing stage, appearing in the leading role of the new Harbach-Frimil opera, "June Love."

Robert Gordon, object of the affections of three women in the new screen play, "If Women Only Knew" (Robertson-Cole)

ABOUT DIRECTORS

DIRECTOR HUGO BALLIN, the painter-producer, is sending a personal representative abroad, in the person of Norbert Lusk. The errand is one of importance. By appointment Mr. Lusk will meet in Cornwall, an author whose name constitutes an imperishable page in English literature of the last century, and whose books, oddly enough, have never found their way to the screen. This writer, whose identity cannot at the present writing be divulged, has been quietly studying the screen for a year, with the result that he has paid Hugo Ballin the compliment of signifying his willingness to entrust the producer with the translation of his novels to the celluloid, pending agreeable arrangements. For the purpose of concluding negotiations, Mr. Lusk is making the trip and will confer with the novelist in the latter's home. After a month in England, Mr. Lusk will spend the summer on the Continent, returning in September.

Robert Ellis, a director most of the time, but an actor once in a while, when the occasion demands, played a leading role in the coming release, "Ladies Must Live," and before that, according to the publicity department of the Tucker productions, was once a member of a stock company that toured Kentucky and Tennessee. One Sunday Mr. Ellis is said to have taken a tramp up the mountain and stopped at a log cabin for cornbread and coffee. In payment for this he told Zeke Tanner, his host, about the wonders of New York, Chicago and Cincinnati. Zeke considered the remarks of the erstwhile stock actor, for a long time, then, filling his corncob pipe, said, reflectively:

"Stranger, if I knew as much as you and was a little younger, I'd go somewhere's and start a little grocery."

Aland Crosland has already made the judicious selection of Thomas J. Carrigan, to play opposite Constance Binney in the Realart production, "Room and Board," starring Constance Binney, Mr. Carrigan is one of the few leading men of the screen who does not have an opportunity to find time weighing heavily, since it was but recently he completed the fifteen two reel "Nick Carter" detective stories, for the Broadwell Productions.

In filming "To Please One Woman" Lois Weber engaged a boy about fourteen to play a role. When all were ready to take the scene in which he was to play a part the boy was not to be found. Finally in he came, quite out of breath.

"You're late," said W. H. Carr, studio manager. "What was the trouble?"

"I guess I overwashed myself," replied the boy.

George Loane Tucker is said to delight in "picking types" for his photoplays. The memory of his great success "The Miracle Man" proved his "picking ability." In a more recent production, "Ladies Must Live," Mr. Tucker had occasion to seek a vagrant. In Pershing Square, Los Angeles, on a park bench, he found the individual who answered every requirement.

"Out on strike?" inquired the director, by way of approach.

"I sure am," replied Hairy Harry. "Fact, I'm one of the pioneer strikers. Went out twenty-two years ago and ain't never give in yet."

American Legion Gives Annual Benefit

Presented by the S. Rankin Drew Post, of the American Legion, at the New York Hippodrome on May 15, will be a feature in the all star bill of unusual interest. It is the intensely dramatic sketch of a semi-spectacular nature, "A Bit of 18," written by Hugh Stanislaus Stange, playwright, who served as a division observer with the 27th Division. The sketch is a reproduction of an authentic incident which took place in the front lines just before the "smashing of the Hindenburg Line," by the justly famous New York Division. An all star Broadway cast, among whom are many popular screen actors, and all of whom are service men, will appear in the playlet. A large number of wounded soldiers from hospitals in an adjoining New York City, will see the performance, guests of the Post.

Exhibitor Box Office Reports Will Appear in Next Week's News

French Face Tariff Protection Problem

By Francis J. Tuckfield

Paris Correspondent.

THE Tariff-protection problem of which readers of the News were warned in an editorial in the issue of March 12 would arise for the United States has not only made its appearance in France but is being tackled with force and skill. As I have on several occasions pointed out the agitation against the foreign film or rather against the great predominance of the foreign market in France has been steadily growing. The most recent development of this movement is, as I predicted some time ago, an appeal to parliament for legislative action with a view to protecting the home industry by a preferential tariff and inversely by penalizing the foreigner by an additional tax. This is the real object behind the bill which a large and influential group of deputies have just drawn up for presentation before the Chamber although they attempt to take some of the sting out of it by referring to the proposition as one calling for "a modification of the present system of taxation as applied to Moving Picture representations, as a means of saving the industry from the critical situation in which it finds itself at present." In reality the bill calls for an increase of the import duty on foreign films and a new system of internal taxation on producers which will vary in accordance with the percentage of French films included in their programs. That is to say, the producer who exhibits the greatest percentage of French films will be taxed at the minimum rate while the producer exhibiting the greatest percentage of foreign produced films will be taxed at the maximum rate. In other words, the home product is to be protected and nursed while the foreign article which is recognized as being so much more sturdy and flourishing will simply be asked to contribute a little more for the privilege of exhibiting in a foreign market. It is the old principle of family interests first and the outsider last and if it is not ethically just it cannot be denied that it is intensely human and some would add, commercially sound. Without going into the details of the new scheme which will assuredly undergo many modifications before it is finally approved and adopted, it may be interesting for American producers and exhibitors to learn some of the arguments and reasons being put forward by the originators of this intensified system of tariff-protection. France in 1913, it is claimed, led the world in film exportation. Then came the war which paralyzed the industry. During the war period, the United States, who, of course, is designated as the greatest culprit among the foreign competitors in France, saw her stock of foreign films suddenly cut off and in consequence was thrown back upon her own resources. The result was that with the elimination of all foreign competitors, the home industry was left to develop of itself and forged ahead until it was able to meet the demand of its 25,000 screens alone and unaided by outside contributions. Further, American producers were able to cover their costs in the home market and to reach out for additional profits in foreign markets which had become denuded of supplies. Another advantage obtained was that these American producers who were receiving such ample profits from foreign markets were enabled to improve and develop their material with the result that today the superiority of the American film may be judged by the fact that in France alone 85% of imported films come from the United States. It is not necessary to examine the truth of such statements, or even to point out that perhaps American genius and progressiveness may have had some hand in this remarkable development of the film industry. All right-thinking Frenchmen would probably concede that it was something more than the elimination of foreign competition which explained America's rapid strides in recent years. What is worth remembering is that the French film trade, in backing the proposed bill, is shouting for increased protection from foreign competition as the best and surest method of developing the home product. In order to emphasize and prove that the foreign producer is not paying sufficient for the right of exhibiting in France it has been shown that the duty on the prepared celluloid for film manufacture is higher than that imposed on the actual film itself. During eleven months in 1920 the duty from celluloid bands amounted to 678,000 francs while that from films which competed with French produced films was only 118,000 francs. The bill is intended to modify this state of affairs. As regards the internal system of taxation which is regarded as excessive and out of all proportion to the profits of the industry, the authors of the bill complain that although the cinema industry is recognized as of vast educational value and utility, by some strange aberration difficult to explain, the government has taxed it more severely than certain categories of bullfights. This about sums up the situation from the point of view of the producers who want protection from the foreigner and the exhibitors who seek protection from their own government which is burdening them with taxes. There is still another point of view to be taken into consideration, that of the public. It may best be judged from a commentary which was made to me recently by a certain well-known film critic. The idea of protection against the foreign market in France where the national output is so far below, for instance, that of America both in quantity and quality, is hardly likely to swell box-office receipts. The public has voted for Charley Chaplin, Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Griffith and the rest of the luminaries of the screen that it is not likely that it will be satisfied with any of lesser brightness. The agitators for protection in France should remember this.

One of the most intensely palpitating questions in Paris these days is: When is Charley Chaplin going to make his début at the Opéra? Although the connection may not be all at once apparent, the feasibility of the suggestion is nevertheless being admitted and in many minds there is nothing so very incongruous in the idea after all. Of course, we all know that Chaplin is a passably good musician and even though his vocal qualifications have perhaps not yet been demonstrated, no one will deny that he possesses in abundance that elusive almost indefinable characteristic dubbed by the highbrows 'artistic temperament.' And the same could be said of many other film stars. But it is neither for his musical abilities nor his vocal attainments that the master comedian would be permitted to figure on the program of France's great national Temple of music. To be brief, the famous state-supported institution is financially in very low waters in these days of high salaries and high everything. The 800,000 francs annual subvention accorded by the State is not by any means sufficient to balance the yearly receipts with the expenditures. But the Minister of Finance refuses to dig down any further in his pocket especially as he cannot say for certain when he will see the color of that much-discussed and much-coveted German gold which is fast becoming as mythical as the fabled Rhine Gold of German folklore. The directors of the Opéra have therefore to devise other ways and means of equalizing their budget and so saving the great Academy of Music for the people. Among the suggestions made for swelling the receipts have been extra ballets, fairy plays, popular concerts and last but by no means least, moving pictures. The suggestion for Tango Teas and Shimmy Festivals is not to be taken seriously, although it was duly and seriously put forward. At the first intimation that the moving picture was being considered for inclusion in the select and exclusive program of the Opéra a howl of indignation was let loose by the highbrows who saw in the proposition the desecration of the National Shrine of Music if not the rapid disintegration of all that was left of artistic and traditional France. But saner counsels have prevailed and it is reported that the scheme is being seriously considered by the powers that be. After all even art must be financed if it is to thrive. So far only one reservation has been made regarding the plan. It is that the pictures should correspond with the artistic atmosphere and traditions of the house and that suitable and worthy programs should accompany the films. This, of course, may be interpreted very elastically although it is not anticipated that many blood and thunder or Wild West thrillers will be allowed to peneterate the great French musical institution. And if Chaplin doesn't make it first, there should be nothing to prevent Mary Pickford or Pauline Frederick or Sessue Hayakawa or some other of the great film constellation from helping in the good work of preserving from financial shipwreck the French National Opera House.

French educational authorities taking a leaf out of America's book are making a determined effort to introduce the moving picture into all schools as an essential part of their teaching equipment. The struggle is, however, a severe one, because of the lack of funds or the lack of will on the part of the people who manage the funds to allow sufficient for the proper carrying out of the project. The advantages of the film in the scheme of education are not for a moment doubted and to any one not fully conversant with the enormous financial difficulties under which the government is laboring the hesitation in advancing the necessary funds may seem ludicrous and shamelessly lacking in enterprise. While the educational department disposes of less than half a million francs for such a project, several millions are really required. There are 200 projectors at their disposal whereas some 36,000 are needed for the whole of France. In Paris it is said there are many school children who have never seen the sea while even Versailles and Fontainebleau are for many others nothing but a name. What a priceless blessing the Moving Picture must be for such as these! Fortunately their educational welfare is being at least fought for by the supporters of the School Film Project in France.

Film activity in France shows no sign of slackening to judge by the advance notices of pictures completed or nearly completed these days. From one list of some fifty forthcoming pictures a few of the more important may be selected for mention as possessing more than ordinary interest for American producers and exhibitors interested in following the progress made in the motion picture world in France. CONNECTICUT

Two machines and 12 reels or pictures were destroyed by fire in the moving-picture booth of the Middlesex theatre at Middletown, Ct., last week. The flames were confined to the booth, and the operator escaped without injury. The fire occurred after most of the audience had left the theatre.

For the third time within the past 30 days, ownership of the Palace theatre, leading moving picture house at Rockville Ct., has been transferred. It was first sold by the owner, George Arnold, to Thomas Coffey, who managed the house for six years for the Brown and Lewis Theatre Circuit. A week ago it was sold by Coffey to J. F. Lewis, manager of the Brown and Lewis Theatre Circuit. The third transfer is by Lewis to the theatre company. The Brown and Lewis interests had a ten-year lease on the building, made Sept. 1. 1913. Mr. Goffey has signed a five-year contract as manager.

Malcolm J. Mollan, formerly of the staff of the Fox Film Corporation, has left the staff of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram and plans to spend the summer in photoplay writing at his New London, Ct., home.

SAN FRANCISCO

The Pathe is the last large distributing concern to prepare to move from Market street. The other concerns, Goldwyn, Paramount and Metro being the last to move, have all located in the central district. Albert Schroepfer is the architect for the new Pathe headquarters which will be ready for occupancy in September.

Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation, new San Francisco producing concern was officially given the keys to that city when, April 10, thousands gathered at the dedication of the quarters at Tenth and Folsom streets.

The company has already finished a two-reel comedy, "Trouble Brewing," and plans 12 William A. Howell comedies for the ensuing year. Four pictures will also be made for the Arrow Company.

Mayor James Rolph, Jr., was assisted by Marjorie Rambeau, legitimate actress, at the dedication ceremonies.

Decisive defeat was given a proposed cumbersome scheme for motion picture reviews by state commission and providing for a fee to be paid in the state legislature April 14. The vote in the California state Senate against this measure was 26 to 9. The motion picture exhibitors of the state are jubilant.

SOUTHWEST

A wire from El Paso, Tex., states that J. de la C. Alarcon, for four years general manager and one of the big owners in a chain of Mexicon theatres in the border city, has sold out and resigned. Immediately following the sale of theatres, Alarcon announced that he had bought the controlling interest in the International Pictures Company, 112 West San Antonio street. This business is operated as a film exchange. Alarcon is also interested in several City of Mexico amusements.

J. A. Cole, Jr., is opening the American theatre at Belton, Texas, at a cost of $50,000. The American will seat 500 and have a colored balcony. "Kismet" is the opening attraction.

Clark Porter, former owner of the Lally-Light theatre of Wemble, Ark., has purchased the Crystal at Booneville, Ark.

Bill Phillips has purchased the A-Muse-U theatre at Lake Village, Ark., from Milton Cornell, and has changed the name to the Majestic theatre.

Fred Senyard has purchased the old First Methodist church site at Pine Bluff, Ark., and will erect a theatre on the same.

Dalton Hopper has bought the Electric theatre at Rock, Okla., back from W. A. McDonald, whom he had sold to some time ago.

Tom H. Boland, manager of the Empress theatre at Oklahoma City, has let a contract to C. D. Scribner to furnish a six piece orchestra at the theatre.

A. B. Taylor of Wichita Falls, Texas, has purchased the Palace theatre at Cherokee, Okla., and will remodel same.

CANADA

Federal incorporations granted by the Canadian Government, as announced at Ottawa, Ontario, on April 16, included the Equity Pictures Corporation, Limited, with a capitalization of $50,000 and headquarters at Montreal, Quebec, and the Federated Film Exchange, Limited, with a $100,000 capital and head office at Montreal also.

The slogan adopted by Manager H. M. Thomas for the new and magnificent Capitol theatre of Montreal is, "More than a theatre—a National Institution." The Capitol is one of the fine theatres recently opened in Canada by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

A special pre-release presentation of Vitagraph's "Black Beauty" was seen at the Regent theatre, Toronto, Ontario, when Manager Clarence Robson arranged a morning performance for school children on April 16. The feature was the attraction at the theatre during the following week.

Manager Charles Querrie of the Palace theatre, one of Toronto's new suburban amusement palaces, displayed his interest in a team that captured the championship of one of the local hockey leagues last season by entertaining the players at a performance during which he presented them with handsome medals. Querrie is a famous Canadian athlete and was a member of the lacrosse team which toured England a number of years ago.

John A. Wilson, formerly manager of the Universal exchange in Winnipeg, Manitoba, has gone to Vancouver, B. C., where he has become the manager of the Vancouver branch of the Fox Film Corporation. Before leaving for the Coast, Mr. Wilson was tendered an enthusiastic farewell reception by a great many of Winnipeg's film men.

Frank Badgley, formerly associated with D. W. Griffith and other U. S. producers, has become identified with the Exhibits and Publicity Bureau of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa.

Children attending the Catholic schools of Ottawa, Ontario, are now receiving regular instructions in moving picture lectures which are being given by Rev. Father E. Killian, curate of St. Joseph's Church, who bought the moving picture projection machine for the purpose. Scenic, industrial and other pictures are being shown in the classes.

NEW ORLEANS

"Don" Shepard, former projectionist of New York City and later with the New York office of the U. T. E., is supply department manager now of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company's New Orleans office.

In some sections of the New Orleans territory film exchange managers and film salesmen are finding it necessary to lower their prices on films, it was learned by the NEWS correspondent last week, because of the drop in the price of cotton, lumber, rice and sugar. Inhabitants of the smaller towns who are entirely dependent on these industries for their livelihood positively are not spending their money for amusements as they have been doing. This has resulted in the theatre managers demanding a lower rental on pictures so they can pass on a reduction in the form of admission prices.

W. K. Jenkins, special representative out of Atlanta for the Enterprise Distributing Corporation, was a visitor to the New Orleans office last week, his first trip since R. A. Kelly was made manager.

Wiley Pope again is with the New Orleans Goldwyn exchange as manager. Four months ago he was here but became special representative out of Atlanta while Mrs. Anna Sessions was manager. Now they have traded positions.

Paul M. Desbon, who was with Goldwyn in New Orleans six months ago, also is back. He was special representative for Robertson-Cole and had a special exchange in Memphis, since away from the Goldwyn exchange. Now he's assistant manager in New Orleans.

Tom Moore is cast as a fireman in his new Goldwyn feature "Made in Heaven"

CLEVELAND

Sherman Webster is back in town. Webster used to command the local Select forces. He left Cleveland to take over the reins of the Select office in Charlotte, North Carolina. He came back last Monday to assume the management of the Cleveland office of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Company. Webster succeeds Alfred Lebensberger, resigned.

William Shapiro of the Equity Photo play Company, went to New York last week. Which means that Cleveland exhibitors may look for some interesting announcements in the near future.

Phil Selznick, of Phil Selznick Enterprises, also hopped on an east-bound train the other day. Selznick heard ere were some good independent pictures on the market, and he went on to grab 'em while the grabbing was good.

"That Something," Federated picture which was endorsed by the national association of Rotary Clubs, is being used all through the state by the local Rotary Clubs, for special benefit performances. Newark, Ohio, played the feature for three days last week at the Auditorium, and, at last accounts which were not final, 17,500 tickets had been sold at 50 cents apiece. The Kinwanis, Lion Club, American Legion and Chamber of Commerce of Newark all joined in with the Rotarians to put the benefit over. All the proceeds were turned over to the Cripple Children's Home.

The Penn Square theatre, Euclid avenue and East 55th street, has been leased five years by the Penn Square Realty Company to the Euclid theatre Company.

Exhibitor's Poster Service Company has taken over the bookings for synchronized scenario music for Ohio, and thereby offering local exhibtors a brand new sort of service. Its prepared music for all features offers to the small exhibitor the opportunity of giving his patrons a well selected and properly arranged musical accompaniment to his picture.

Aids in Cooling the Theatre

No one can deny that the use of chair covers has improved the appearance of this theatre and made the interior inviting and restful

A theatre may be made cool and inviting by means other than those of the ic-chamber. A good ventilating system that supplies a large volume of outside fresh air together with an auditorium full of neat slip-covered seats and a lighting system that abhors any hint of deep red will give the most temperamental of patrons a feeling of comfort and restfulness.

A Peep Into the Mysteries of Raw-stock Making

Revealed by George B. Ward, Pioneer Film Manufacturer

THE majority of people connected with the motion picture industry hardly know the meaning of "rawstock." They have not even the remotest idea of the trouble, the constant care, the close supervision, the worries and the careful handling necessary to ship out to the trade a product free from imperfection and uniform as to speed in its entirety.

Celluloid, or base, is processed in from 22 inches to a width suitable for the requirements of the respective rawstock manufacturer handling it. Rolls of celluloid, though generally processed in 400-foot lengths, are sometimes shorter or longer, depending upon the manner best adapted to handling in the plant ready to process the succeeding operations.

How is the emulsion stuck on the base of celluloid, or what makes the emulsion stay on? An adequate answer cannot be made in a few words. I shall endeavor to be brief and use nothing but simple and plain words. Rolls of whatever width and length desired by the manufacturer are first put through what is known as "substratum." This is a solution which acts on the dull side of the celluloid, and creates an etching on the part so processed. This etching is essential as the ordinary formula of emulsion will not stick to the celluloid very readily.

Let us take an individual roll of celluloid and follow it along on its journey through the various processes required to turn out the finished product. The roll is first put on a large stand, or cradle, underneath the "sub" machine; threaded up, over and under idler rollers to create tension; then through a slot under another roller so finely adjusted as to be quickly placed in the solution of acetic acid, acetone, ether alcohol and other ingredients which compose the solution. This solution is run from a large container into a pan specially constructed for this work. Containers, tubes, pipes and pans into which the solution runs are controlled with a thermostat, or temperature regulating device, to insure the absolute certainty to a fraction of a degree on the predetermined temperature necessary for the proper functioning of the solution. This control of temperature not only applies to this particular operation but to every room where material entering into the processing is handled.

After the roll has been properly threaded up on the machine and the temperatures of the solution checked, it is sent on its journey with the solution on it. Having received the solution treatment, the roll goes through a specially constructed chamber which is enclosed, and which is also controlled in its temperature with a thermostat at a much higher degree than that of the solution. This is done to insure quick action of the solution combined with rapidity in drying.

The roll now travels for a given number of feet at the pre-determined temperature; leaves this chamber to enter another at a much lower temperature, with openings through which dry air blows across and down the surface treated to further dry the etching thereon, and also to insure a hardening on the coated side. This accomplished, the roll travels to the other end of the machine to be reeled upon spools; then it is put in a special container on a carrier and, through a properly heated passage, conveyed to the room ready to receive it for further treatment. This room has a given temperature which is maintained throughout the entire year. Here the roll is kept for a number of days in order to get the "proper seasoning." And while the film is being seasoned, we shall take up the process of emulsion making.

Geo. B. Ward—at home

Several months ago the ever-increasing business of the Evans Film Manufacturing Co. caused its general manager, Tom Evans, to cast about for an able lieutenant. None but the best would do. Did Mr. Evans get him? The writer of the accompanying article is the answer.

George B. Ward (better known in the trade as as "Bert Ward") ranks high as film manufacturer; in fact many consider him in a class by himself. For the past fifteen years he has actually lived on film. He is a dreamer, a student and a doer. One of his pet hobbies is scientific and research work; another is chemistry. As a chemist he is a veritable wizard. Unlike most laboratory executives, Mr. Ward knows theoretically as well as practically every phase of film manufacture from raw stock to the finished "movie." That he is a film authority of real distinction is attested by the many who frequently consult him on this and that film problem.

Mr. Ward entered the then thin ranks of filmdom early in 1905. He started with the Edison Co. at Orange, N. J. He was associated with Ed Porter in the days when stories were first picturized. He helped in perfecting the Home Kinetoscope and managed this particular branch of Edison's Enterprises until he became technical manager for the British Film Co., Ltd., manufacturers of "Brifco" raw stock. Later, when the Universal Film Mfg. Co. opened its laboratories at Fort Lee, N. J. Mr. Ward was induced to take the assistant superintendentship of the said plant. Years afterwards, owing to his immense knowledge of rawstock manufacture, he was made general manager of the Powers Film Products, Rochester, N. Y. But the lure of New York was too much for him, and for months he has been busy at the Evans Laboratories.

Emulsion must be uniform in its entirety. Gelatine, "the thorn in the side," is one of the most essential parts of emulsion. Of all the ingredients of which emulsion is made, gelatine is the most troublesome. Gelatine is made from bones, treated with acid to remove lime; the residue is boiled with water, then an alkali and finally treated with a steam bath. There are two forms of gelatine, hard and soft. In emulsion making the soft gelatine is used in cold weather, while the hard variety does duty in warm weather, with the general procedure of blending the two forms at all times of the year. All gelatine, before using in the making of emulsion, is tested for acidity, alkalinity, melting point, etc. Many formulas are balanced with the handling governed by the results of gelatine tests. The size of the grain is often dependent upon the proportion of gelatine used and its quality. Too much gelatine renders it difficult to get a proper speed, while not enough of it gives too granular a deposit of the silver salts. Sensitiveness of the emulsion is largely dependent on the size and character of the grains of silver bromide.

The principal ingredients that enter in the making of an ordinary formula for emulsion are gelatine, silver nitrate, ammonia bromide, hydrochloric acid, chrome alum, glycerine, alcohol, hydrobromic acid and water. Personally the proper mixing of the said ingredients has brought me wonderful results.

The gelatine with the chemicals necessary for the first step are mixed in a large container; the contents are heated to a rather high temperature and put in a room fitted with mechanical mixers. The container is placed in a cradle, the mixer lowered and the batch stirred for a period of time determined by previous tests. At the expiration of the time, other portions of the chemicals are added and the mixing continues until the time set has expired. If an ammonia emulsion, the concentrated ammonia is added. The container is now put on a carrier and conveyed to the cooling chamber, which is fitted with innumerable ice coils and has a continuous change of very cold air to insure the changing of the air every so many minutes at the same temperature. The container is kept in the cooling chamber for a number of hours; this is necessary to arrest the speed and cause the emulsion to "jell." The container leaves the cooling chamber to go through a "breaking up" process in order to prepare the film for the next operation called "noodling."

A "noodling machine" quite resembles the colander used for washing vegetables. The broken up emulsion is put in the "noodler," and the machine set in motion. Through the perforations of the "noodler" the emulsion comes out in long strings and falls into a receptacle placed under the machine. The noodled mass is now ready for the washing process. The washing machine is so constructed that the emulsion, during washing, is constantly in motion with a steady flow of water at a very low temperature. This process is necessary to remove traces of ammonia as well as other matter from the emulsion. After the emulsion has been washed for its allotted time, it is heated to a pre-determined temperature to regain speed; more gelatine added, then this is heated again to a much higher temperature, and, after it reaches the required temperature, the batch is taken back to the cooling chamber for another period of setting. Later it is removed from the cooler, raised to a high temperature, more chemicals added in their order and proportion, heated to a pre-determined degree and placed in a carrier for the final journey to the coating room.

Let us now return to the seasoning room for the roll of celluloid we left there for proper "seasoning." The seasoned celluloid is put on a carrier and sent to the coating room, there

Why the Best Theatres Use Westinghouse

A MOTION picture theatre owner needs electrical equipment that will give him the best possible results, because the public pays principally for results produced on the screen.

to become affiliated with the emulsion. We will now follow the union of celluloid and emulsion and their journey to the finish of the sensitized roll.

The roll of "subbed" celluloid is threaded up on the coating machine somewhat in the manner that it was threaded on the substratum machine. The emulsion is dumped in a large container over the coating machine. This container and all tubes and pipes leading from it to the coating machine are controlled by a thermostat arrangement so that an absolute temperature is maintained at all times.

The coating solution is now run into the receptacle best suited to the needs of the plant coating the celluloid, the machine started and the emulsion coated on the roll of "subbed" celluloid. The direction of the roll (immediately after the coating is applied) is upwards for various feet, within which portion a temperature is maintained nearly equal to that of the emulsion at the time of coating to insure even temperature on this particular portion as it passes along. After the roll travels this given distance it changes direction and goes into the chill box, which is an enclosed chamber with a series of ammonia coils running through with an additional blast of cold air so regulated that the temperature of the chill box is constant throughout its use.

The purpose of running the emulsion-coated celluloid through the chill box is to set the emulsion with a little rapidity, as the temperature at which the emulsion is coated is very much higher than the chill box's; in fact as the film leaves the front of the coating machine on its change in direction to enter the chill box it encounters a drop in temperature of around 50 degrees, thus setting the emulsion. The film travels a certain distance in the chill box before taking a downward trip into the coating alley. On reaching the limit of this journey, it is run into and on a machine that has steps across and set a few feet apart. This machine carries the film upwards again to a carrier, or long track, upon which the slats travel. On the peak of the incline, the sticks ride along this track and thus allow the film to hang in loops, which vary in length according to the needs and construction of the plant handling the film demand.

The temperature of this portion of the coating alley is slightly higher than that of the chill box; the purpose of the slight raise being to prepare the film for further raises as it travels down the alley, and for the purpose of allowing the emulsion to set, also to start drying. If the temperature were raised too high or beyond a given point, the emulsion instead of setting properly would run from the celluloid to the floor, and undo the purpose for which the film was put through the chill box.

The film continues on its journey of several hundred feet down the coating alley from the temperature it meets upon entering the coating alley proper to a much higher temperature, half way down the alley, at which point the temperature starts to drop in the same ratio it had increased until it reaches the reeling-up room, where the film is wound up on large spools; the temperature of this room is about the same as that of the starting end of the coating alley.

In this portion of processing the temperature control is highly important. Proper regulation of temperature affects the drying and makes the film pliable, while improper control of temperature affects the ultimate speed of the stock; thus if one portion has one temperature and this either higher or lower several feet later, the speed of the finished product as well as the pliability of the stock will vary in proportion to the variance in temperature

The coated roll, thoroughly reeled up, is put in a special container and sent on a carrier to another seasoning chamber, where it is kept for a period of pre-determined time in preparation for the next process. Proper seasoning over, the roll is ready to be cut in widths suitable for use in the laboratories for which the film is intended.

The cutting, or, as is known in rawstock plants, slitting machine is fitted up with a series of knives, or cutting wheels. The roll is put on the machine and cut into strips; there being a separate rewind for each strip, which is thus wound upon its own spool. The cutting operation over, the rolls are placed in large boxes and taken to the examining room, where careful operators, generally girls, scrutinize each and every roll over a red light set in a special box with rewinds on. Every foot of stock is thoroughly examined for any defects of manufacture; such defects, when found, are marked; then removed, and the perfect rolls are passed along to the packing department for the final journey to the film laboratories.

Substratum rooms and the room where the first mix is made are light, all the others are dark rooms.

Absolute cleanliness is essential in all branches of this very important branch of the motion picture industry. All rooms must be dust sealed. All employees change from their street clothes into uniforms in a room specially fitted for this purpose, as dust picked up on clothes or shoes will, in moving around, become loose and fly about, thus causing no end of trouble. Men with vacuum cleaners are ever on the job, for it is indispensable that every square inch of a rawstock plant be kept wholly free from dirt and dust.

Hoffman-Henon Busy on Many Theatre Plans

According to reports from the head office of Hoffman-Henon Company, architects and engineers, of Philadelphia, that firm is extremely busy on a wide variety of theatre plans. Some of those reported are:

Plainfield, N. J.—Owners are Counihan & Shannon; extensive alterations embracing a new balcony, lobby, rearranging of seats, new front and general decorations; to cost approximately $75,000.

Milford, Del.—Owner is J. E. Lewis, of Middletown, Del. A new theatre, 40 x 175, seating 1200, with a balcony; approximate cost is $100,000; fireproof construction; brick and terra cotta front; it is to be very complete.

Middletown, Pa.—Owner is J. S. Rogers; alterations will consist of new front, lobby, rearrangement of seats, decorating, lighting and ventilation.

Hazelton, Pa.—Owners are Weber & Stauffer; extensive alterations to cost approximately $100,000, embracing new balcony, alterating entire first floor, new lobby, new front, decorations, lighting and ventilation.

Pottstown, Pa.—Owner is Geo. W. Bennethum; lot 60 x 168½ feet; new building three stories; stores under; offices above; theatre to seat 1200, with balcony; fireproof construction; brick and terra cotta; approximate cost $200,000.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Owners are Stanley Co. of America; site of old Bingham House, Eleventh and Market streets; theatre, stores and office building; very elaborate affair; seats 4000, with a balcony; plans not approved as yet to extent of publication of details; approximate dimensions are 156 x 180.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Owners, Stanley Co. of America; site of old Kugler's rtstaurant, 1412 Chestnut street; size of lot 54 x 230; approximate cost $200,000; fireproof construction; approximate seating capacity 2000.

Has Used Only Successive Powers Models

Much interest was aroused among the local exhibitors by the opening on April 8th of the Colonial theatre in Brooklyn by Herman Mayer and Otto Lederer. The Colonial is Brooklyn's newest playhouse for the exclusive exhibition of photoplays.

Mayer & Lederer opened their first picture house about twelve years ago in the neighborhood of their present location, opening another house shortly after. After a time they sold the second one and gave all their attention to the Colonial. These houses were the typical 299-seat store theatres of that period. Exhibitors and others in the motion picture industry know that Messrs. Mayer and Lederer have acquired in the many years they have been in business a large fund of the most practical experience. The motion picture business may look like a gold mine to those who now see it in its present prosperous state, but the man who started with the the 299-seat house and built it up so that today he has a magnificent motion picture palace, seating 2,500 people, has had to overcome a great many obstacles on his way to his present success.

The owners of the Colonial have conducted an airdrome in connection with their indoor enterprise, and the outside show, adjoining their present structure, seats 1,800. The outside equipment is of a substantial nature, as the floor is entirely of concrete and the seats are fastened to this.

Messrs. Mayer and Lederer purchased a Power's No. 5 when they started in business, then got a No. 6 when they came out, and later got 6A's about 1912, and these are still being used in the airdrome. As a further evidence of the confidence these practical exhibitors have in Power's, and as an indication of their progressiveness, they purchased Power's 6B, Type E, for their new structure.

Built on a triangular plot, it emphasizes the economy as well as the convenience and beauty of the fan-shaped auditorium, which insures perfect sight lines and no waste space. Located at the junction of Chauncey Street with Broadway, which meet at an acute angle, it affords direct exits to each street without courts, insuring the absolute safety of the audience. This location also affords an entrance from both streets connected by a long commodious lobby, which is ideal from the business standpoint as well as the artistic.

The interior of the auditorium is decorated in the style of the Italian Rennaissance. The treatment lends itself naturally and well to the fan-shaped auditorium and is most effective. The color scheme is a harmonious blending of warm grays, buffs and old gold, with medallions picked out in color. The draperies and hangings are Mulberry and old gold. Their subdued tones are restful to the eye and are a refreshing change from the glaring red, etc., so often seen.

The house has a small stage for lighting effects, which is large enough for singers and musical acts. In addition to a large orchestra, the management has installed an unusually fine pipe organ which has an exceptionally beautiful tone and includes a number of stops that are innovations in a picture house.

The booth which houses two Power's 6B Type E projectors is located behind the rear wall of the balcony in which is virtually a separate building. It is large and is fitted with every modern convenience.

A large and beautifully decorated foyer is located on the mezzanine floor, which affords ample lounging space for patrons, off of which are located a large smoking room and the usual conveniences for the use of the audience. The success of the building is due in large measure to the architect, Mr. Harrison G. Wiseman, who not only designed the building, but had entire charge of the construction.

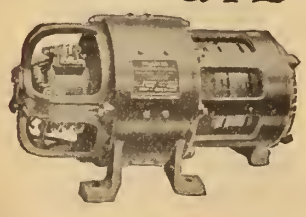
William Widman, projectionist of the Colonial, who is operating Power's Type E, started as a boy with the owners of this theatre, and has operated the various types of Power's used by Messrs. Mayer and Lederer. Mr. Widman, as well as Messrs. Mayer and Lederer, state that the earlier types of Power's could still be used, and in fact the 6A's, as already stated, are still being used in the airdrome, but, of course, the newest machine, 6B, Type E, is preferred by progressive managers and up-to-date projectionists.

Mercer Film Splicer Ready

The Mercer film splicer, sold by Howland & Dewey, of Los Angeles, is now ready for distribution in quantities. This is a brass splicer and extremely econofical due to the fact that it can be used over and over again. It comes bent in an angle of 45° and is slipped into the film by means of the perforations on one side then by bending down flat it slides into the perforations on the opposite side. The splicer is in general use in the laboratories on the Coast.

Monsoon Ventilating System in Baltimore Rivoli

THE Wilson Amusement Company, operators of several houses throughout the country, are the owners of the new Rivoli Theatre, which recently opened in Baltimore, Md. The photographs shown give one only a vague idea of the beauty of this magnificent playhouse, and the manager, Guy L. Wonders, finds constant inspiration in his new surroundings.



The architect was E. G. Blanke, of Baltimore, and to say that he did a good job would be putting it very mildly, as he has been the recipient of countless congratulations on his excellent work. The theatre is tastefully designed and beautifully decorated, white and gold predominating in the main auditorium, with rich draperies of old velour and gold at the boxes. The lobby and foyer is resplendent in a rare mulberry with ivory and gold panels, while the subfoyer is treated in white and gold to correspond with the main auditorium. The act curtain is of gold and a charming Grecian setting completes the picture. The theatre is perfectly appointed and every effort has been made to assure convenience and comfort to the patrons.

The Rivoli theatre boasts of one of the finest heating, ventilating and cooling systems in the country. The installation, made by the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., of New York City, experts in this line, consists of a complete equipment of two No. 6 Duplex Sets, three No. 8 Single Blowers and one No. 5 xhaust Fan.

A No. 6 Duplex Monsoon is installed above the stage and the other on the roof above the balcony, while the three No. 8 Single Blowers, operated by one motor, are placed in the attic space above the proscenium arch. This apparatus will insure a constant supply of 20,000,000 cubic feet of pure, fresh air every hour, no matter how hot the weather. This air supply is recirculated and exhausted partly from under the balcony, partly from the mezzanine and partly from the back of the balcony by the No. 5 Monsoon Exhaust, which is installed in a chamber under the operator's booth.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

General Electric Company Introduces High Intensity Projection Arc

New Lamp Gives Better Light from Standpoints of Quantity and Quality

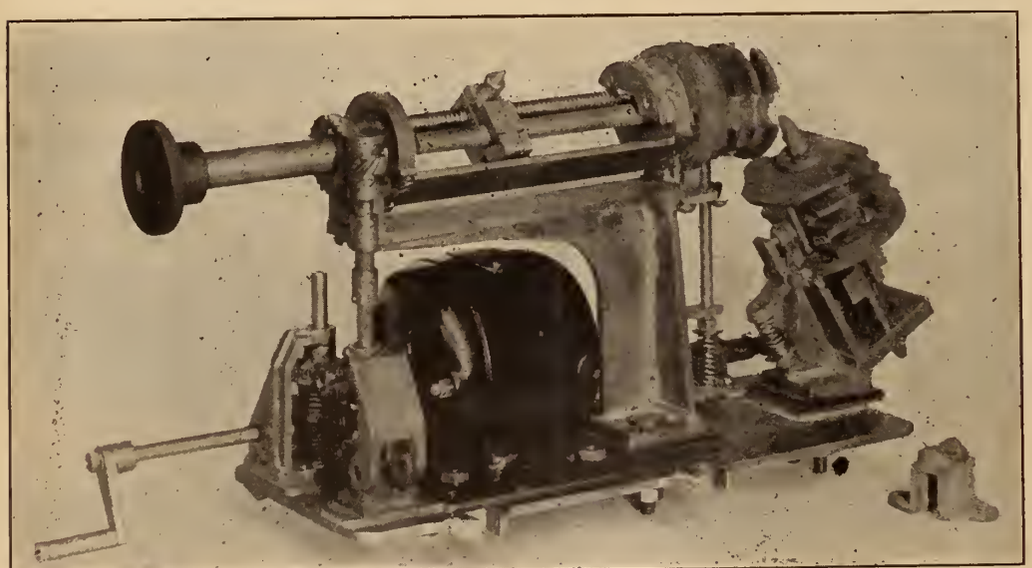
HITHERTO the attention of those engaged in perfecting the various processes employed in the motion picture industry has been devoted largely to the methods of making, rather than of showing, or projecting, the films.

Recent experimentation in this latter field by the General Electric Company has resulted in the development of a new high intensity projection lamp which bids fair to revolutionize the projecting of motion pictures, for these reasons:

It gives twice the illumination on the screen that can be obtained by use of the older styles of low intensity lamps, with no increase in current consumption.

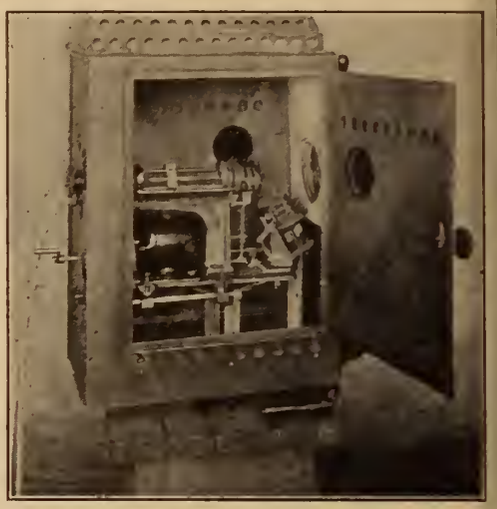
The quality of light, obtained by a special type of carbon, tends to eliminate eye strain.

Its light, as shown by spectrum analysis, is a close approximation of daylight, which means that a much clearer definition is given the pictures and that, in the projection of colored films, the full value of the colors is brought out. This is especially true in the case of blues and greens, which often look muddy in the light of the ordinary arc.



Another important feature is, that with the exception of striking the arc, operation is automatic. In place of five hand adjustments on the ordinary lamp, this lamp has only two. No adjustments of the carbons should, therefore, be necessary during normal operation. The only movement to set the arc at the focus is a longitudinal movement, which, once determined for any particular lens, does not have to be readjusted.

The accompanying illustrations show the lamp and the operating mechanism. The positive carbon is horizontal, projecting through the positive nose, while the negative carbon is at an angle of 60° to the horizontal, and so located that its tip is never between the crater on the positive carbon, and the lens. When it is realized that 90% of the whole illumination given by the arc comes from the deep crater in the positive carbon, the importance of its position relative to the focus of the lens, is apparent. hTe positive carbon is held tightly by a clamp to the feed screw, which, with the carriage, is rotated by a bevel gear and pinion connected to the motor through a worm gear train. A starwheel fastened to the feed screw, and which revolves with the feed screw and clamp around the axis of the carbon, feeds the latter forward by engaging with a detent.



The negative carbon is not rotated, but is fed by means of a clamp on the feed screw, which is rotated by bevel gears. These gears are driven by the motor through a worm gear train and clutch.

Automatic regulation of the arc length, and consequently of the rate at which the carbons are fed is secured by connecting the motor across the arc. Thus the speed of the motor is unaffected by any fluctuations in the power supply, being dependent on the arc voltage. If the carbons approach each other too rapidly, the arc becomes shorter, the arc voltage drops, and the motor slows down. If, on the other hand the carbons become too widely separated, the arc lengthens, the voltage rises, and the motor speeds up until the proper distance between the carbons is obtained.

Little time is required for changing carbons.

New high intensity projection arc

High intensity G-E projection arc installed in a Motiograph De Luxe lamphouse

As the current is carried through the carbons for only a short distance from the arc end, the remainder of the carbons does not become as hot as it would if the current passed through its whole length. Furthermore, when new carbons are inserted, no vertical or horizontal adjustments are necessary to get the crater at the focus of the lens, because the holding mechanism is fixed and cannot be moved out of position.

The entire device is designed with a view to compactness. The lamp is self contained with its regulating mechanism, and requires no arc controls protruding from the back of the lamp house thus adding considerably to the appearance of the projection machine, and the comfort of the booth.

Development of this new type of projection lamp, calls attention to the interesting fact that during the last fifteen years the motion picture industry has made tremendous progress in all but one department. The photography has become an art in itself. Studios rival huge manufacturing plants in size and in equipment. Theatres are more luxurious in appointment than were ever possible with the spoken drama but in all the time, no important improvement had been made in the light source which projects the completed pictures upon the screen.

The first theatres were small and dark. A low powered alternating current arc furnished a flickering source of light at a consumption of about 30 amperes. A change to direct current helped remove the flicker. Then theatres became larger, interior lighting came into vogue and consequently, higher powered arcs were required. The current increased to 50 amperes, then 75 amperes and now 125 and even 150 amperes is required to project a satisfactory picture in our largest theatres.

At this point, further increases in current do not yield proportionate increases in light. Motor generator sets are necessary and it becomes more difficult for the projectionist to control his arc. The expense of operation does not seem to be a limiting factor but it must be considered eventually if this rate of increase is to be maintained. The problem was attacked from two different angles, dividing the field into two classes (1) the smaller theatres where economy is important; (2) the larger theatres where the lighting effect is only to be considered. The Mazda lamp, a development already sufficiently well known is utilized for the first class.

There was found, however, to be a distinct field for a more powerful light source in the remaining theatres.

It is for use in this second classification of theatres requiring a more intense light source having "daylight" color values that the "high intensity" projection arc lamp has been produced.

Albemarle Projection Booth

The entrance to the projection booth is rather spacious and reminds one of a large hallway. This enters directly into the projection booth, which is quite a large room in itself, measuring as it does 16 feet wide by 14 feet deep. It is easily 8 feet over head. In this booth there are locatd two type "S" motor-driven Simplex projectors, equipped with Snaplite lenses.

On the right of the booth, there is located a small room, which has been made sound-proof and it contains the G-E generator. To the left of the operating room is located the rewind room and also a washroom and toilet.

The spotlight which is used is placed outside of the operating room and the operator to reach same has to go through a doorway, which has been placed in the front of the operating booth.

When the spotlight or motion picture projectors are not in use, a curtain is arranged so that the operator can close same, thus concealing any opening in the front of the balcony.

In a talk with the stage electrician, the day the writer had the photographs taken of this theatre, he stated that this operating booth was no doubt quite an innovation, as the patrons seem to be mystified as to where the pictures were being projected from, as you would see them looking around for the machines immediately after the picture had be projected.

He also stated that the owners of the theatre were inclined to think that, owing to the operating room being so close to the stage and being practically in the center of the audience, that the generator would annoy the patrons, but he states that the generator cannot be heard in any part of the house, owing to the fact that it is installed in a sound-proof room.

The projection booth is in charge of Mr. Albert Horowitz.

Colorgraph Laboratories' Equipment to Be Auctioned

On Monday, May 2, 1921, at 2 o'clock in New Rochelle, N. Y., the entire equipment of the Colorgraph Laboratory, used by the late Arturo Hernandez-Mexia, the inventor of the double-coated film for motion pictures in natural colors, will be sold at auction.

The death of the inventor of the double-coated film stock, the rights to the use of which have been threshed out through the courts in a long-fought legal battle by the various companies engaged in making natural color movies, has placed the equipment of this ideal experimental laboratory on the market, there being no logical successor to take up the continued investigation of the problem on which Mr. Hernandez spent the best years of his life.

Not only does the laboratory contain everything necessary for the production of motion pictures in natural colors, including a huge battery of specially built electric lights for reproducing daylight conditions, but there is also a machine shop where all of the experimental cameras, perforators, printers, projectors and coloring machines were built.

The large brick building, familiar to thousands of autoists passing on the Pelham Shore Road, is to be converted into a modern apartment house, and in order to clear the building for the contractors the directors of the Colorgraph Company have decided that the quickest way to dispose of the equipment is to sell it by auction.

It is expected that many representatives of various methods of making color pictures be on hand to pick up bargains in equipm or souvenirs of the pioneer inventor, whose ventions have been followed with interest by of those interested in the color game.

looked hopeless for the home team. They were g played on their feet. The score was six to one, or the rebels. The bleachers sat disconsolate and ived each additional blow with a tremble. Every the little group of visiting rooters sent up their spering shouts, it seemed to blacken the shame of town. The cheerleaders lost all their pep. They ousted. They retired in dismay. The local her couldn't get his arm into condition. The umwas singing a droning monotone of: "ball, ball, " one after the other as the rebels went to bat, there were none of the local fans who had the icity to question the umpire's judgment, which for first time in history seemed to be right, to the rs. However, when the out-of-town pitcher sent n out, the umpire droned "strike-strike-strike," and n the losers had to admit he was right. Point one the credit-side of the Umpire's Ledger.

erriblc. It was the worst licking they had ever wn—it was shameful. Goodbye championship—dbye pennant. If only it would rain, some people ed. But it didn't—and as if in defiance, the sun ie stronger. The particular onlooker I mentioned re appeared to be very nervous, he seemed to be ering his bag excitedly. But nothing happened.

he sixth inning ended as it had begun—six to one. rybody said "No bope." Then word began to abroad, that the home team was shot to pieces—the best support had left—been bought off. The e team would never win again, unless something tic were done. Despite the sunshine it was pretty in Sandusky, Ohio.

eginning of the seventh—visiting team to the bat. went another run. Seven to one. Home team he bat.

urmurs among the visiting aggregation—"Might well go home. This game is over. They've got licked." Dark faces of the home-friends, some zing that they were going back on their own boys. hen up jumped George Wiles, and ran to the h. He made a funny sound, and at the signal, the icular onlooker with the mysterious bag, the pitcher, shortstop and Wiles put their heads together. The e made the crowd twist their necks to see what d be the trouble. At least the action put a bit of excitement into an afternoon that bad n frigid and dull.

ow here I must pause to make my apologies to hose sporting Shakespeares in the country, and to y them most emphatically that I sball secure copyt on this new idea of baseball climax, that I shall right it in all countries including the Scandinavian. ow you are thinking: What did George Wiles do? ell, first I must tell you something about this man is real man, for Wiles is not the creature of the gination but a very lively, active gentleman. Since game of whicb I am now telling you, Wiles bas me the County Treasurer—they call bim Honorable rge Wiles now. In a county always Democratic, be elected on a Republican nomination. George was a clerk in Sandusky—at the very time that this ie took place. But he loved baseball and someg else—and that something else is— That too come out in a moment.

o there was the strange scene I bave just debed—the quartette with their beads together—the teams and onlookers wondering wbat could be matter. The umpire yelled "Play ball."

t tbat instant, the man witb the bag opened it, and out a cornet. This he played upon. A thrill t through the crowd. Now the quartette moved to the homeplate and started to—sing! They had hty good voices and it sounded fine. They cbose their song "Bobbin up and down, bobbin up and n." Lustly they sang. Wiles shouted at the end verse: "Rooters, join in"—and the crowd added r voices. The air just trembled with the music. bbin up and down, bobbin up and down."

The first man went to bat," the Honorable Wiles arks in telling his version of it, "and he batted a safe lead. This was never overtaken. Occasionthrough the game, when we seemed shaky, the singwas reverted to—and I am happy to say, that we ed that game into a victory—but the real bero was any individual but the music."

he home town went mad witb ecstasy. That day for many days tbereafter, everybody was singing bbin up and down."

ow had George Wiles done it?

e tells it modestly enougb. "I bave always been usical enthusiast. My daughter is a pianist. Ever e she was seven she could play nicely. I had a e, and at home we bad good times together. After work at the store, nothing seemed better to me to go bome and listen to my little girl and join with her in the music we loved. Our neighbors ned to make our home a rendezvous for good times. you can have wonderful times witb music. I w. One night at our house, the pitcher and t-stop were visiting and joined in a few songs, they had mighty fine voices I thought. Well, n we began to lose our good men, I had an idea. couldn't we use singing to keep up our courage to hold our folks together. Without seeming to much stock by it, I asked eacb of tbe remaining wbo could sing—there wasn't anybody else. So I t outside and fonnd a mascot. We rehearsed toer and we decided to keep our idea secret—and put it to the test. Well, you see that it won ow, George Wiles had the same inspiration which le Sam had when war broke out. As you probably ember, those of you wbo were in the camps and he other side that wbenever you were feeling blue, those great old "sings" brougbt the spirit back our hearts. I can remember the days in the camps thousand boys in the hut at Camp Dix or Upton Merritt. Fellows from their homes, disconsolate, chy, blue. Then up I would go and try to inject best spirit I had in me—tried to communicate the optimism and good cheer I wished for them.

And we all sang together, good voices, bad voices and my terrible voice. And afterwards, I would introduce to the boys an hour and a half of fine, classical, inspiring music. I would tell them what the music meant and show them how in the sweet notes of a violin solo, that the picture of a loved one would come to mind; how in the agitated measures of a piano solo, the best hopes of America were truly expressed. Then would come out the master Elman with his beautiful violin and the rafters would thunder with applause. Then would come the sweet-voiced Florence Macbeth and Althouse, the tenor, and Hofman, the pianist, and the best artists of the world—with music, to make the men happier. And it worked.

George Wiles struck unconsciously the truth of music—that it bas in it the power to encourage, uplift and energize the weakened spirit. He learned what is coming to the most intelligent employers of labor throughout America—the value of music in industry. For a long time I have preached this thought and demonstrated it. Would you believe that in one factory, a concert of music made men work harder!

It was in the factory of the Gillespie Loading Company in New Jersey—eight thousand men and women making ammunition—shells. They had been taken from many parts of the country—they were rich and poor of all nationalities. And they had never ever gotten together. Until one night I went over there—and we all listened to music of famous, generous artists and we all sang. The next day, the reports of the superintendents of the different units were that for the first time, the men had exceeded their quota. In fact they went ten per cent over—and this meant fifty thousand more shells the day after the music. The executives understood why—the music had made the employees feel better. I could list you a hundred and fifty important concerns wbere music is now part of the daily life—to take the minds of the men off their worries.

George Wiles was a discoverer in his way. The success of the first day with the music was followed up.

"The four of us rehearsed a whole lot," George—I beg your pardon, the Honorable Wiles tells me, "We did a lot of songs. In a very short time we had developed into a fine quartette. Our team commenced to win more consistently. We had less trouble keeping our players. We developed into the crack team of the section. I believe wonders can be accomplished through music and singing. I believe baseball and other games can be won by the team wbich has learned how to sing when luck is going against it."

Since that day when music won the game, Wiles has been going ahead. The quartette joined a lodge and became known as the Sandusky Elks Quartette and became famous througbout the state.

One day Wiles went into politics, and was nominated for County Treasurer but nobody thought he could win. Because the county was Democratic and George was Republican. But what did he do?

He resorted to his old bobby. He didn't make speeches. He went to every meeting with his daugbter and sang. He led crowds in singing. And he became very popular. Once Wiles was on board a boat excursion. Somebody asked him to sing a number with the band. He consented and the band leader was particularly enthusiastic because he said at last his ambition was going to be realized. For twenty years he had been trying to get somebody to sing with his band, and for some inexplicable reason, nobody had ever had tbe courage to make the attempt before. Then and there George Wiles closed the votes of the leader and bis men not to mention how many others on board the boat.

Wiles sang at farmers' meetings, lodge meetings,—even on the street.

He was overwbelmingly elected. Whether he sings every time he bas to pay a bill or receipt a tax certificate I cannot say. But if you will permit me, if you are not too annoyed by the way I described the game, I should like to leave you with two points carefully underlined. For if you will believe me, I had a serious idea also in mind when I sat down to present the tale.

The first point is that musicians and baseball players ought to get together and understand each other. Also baseball players and college professors; also scientists and romantic novelists; also office boys and multimillionaires. Acquaintanceship unlike the popular proverb of familiarity breeding contempt does quite the reverse. It makes for understanding. I know that the artists in their ridiculous ways look down upon others in less academic occupations with disdain, and are snobs and fools therefore. But when musicians, college professors, etc., get acquainted with baseball players they change their disdain into admiration. The other side to the point is that a great many baseball players sneer at artists, professors, etc., and are fools and little upstarts. But sneers turn into respect and respect into admiration, when the two little worlds meet.

There is the second point and then I am done. Most people get so close to their own work, that they forget that anything else matters. I suppose that baseball players are like musicians in that respect. The musicians get to be fanatics on their jobs—they think, talk, live music and are lost whenever everything else comes up. But there is the case of Fritz Kreisler, greatest violinist in the world.

"I spend less time on my violin," he said to me one day with a twinkle in his eye, "I spend less time on my violin than I do on Greek! And I'm not a slave to Greek, either, as you know."

"I am not just a violinist," he shouts, "I am a man."

There is a point on that! I am not just a stenographer, not just an owner of a business, not just a lawyer—I am a buman being.

"I have come upon many artists who are slaves to their art. That is wrong. Such an art which shuts out the artist from tbe wide interests of life is a pigmy expression. Of course we have our violinists who slave from morning to night over their strings—they are great machines and nothing else. But art must explain and illustrate the bigness of the universe. If you do not study tbe many ideas of the day, you are lost.

"You see when I was a boy, I carried off the honors for violin playing and they hung lightly on my sboulders. I studied the violin so hard. I worked like a slave for fair. A great friend of mine would say to me: 'Fritz, you are a fool. You lose everything, but your violin. You have no friends. All you thing about is your violin. You are just a violin. You know nothing, nothing. Forget your violin.'

"Those words impressed me very much. When I went back to Europe, I said to my father, who was a celebrated doctor, 'Dad, I want to learn medicine.' He said, 'Very well,' So I studied, and I am a graduate doctor. But that was not enough. Those caustic words stung me. I said to myself I must know everything (which was equally foolish). I had such ambitions. I would dream of a life like this: In the morning I should arise and write a thesis in Greek; a little later I should deliver a speech; a little later—say just after lunch—I should perform an operation of world-import, revolutionizing the annals of medicine; in the late afternoon I should write a poem, then work on a drama—and at night deliver a concert.

"I studied everything, which was wrong. I didn't give enough time to my violin. Then one day my father suffered financial reverses and I had to go to work. After that I had phenomenal success. I learned that I must work for my art, but not slave for it. My interests are wide, and my music reflects it."

Kreisler is an example for any man in music, business, or profession. Give enough time to your job, but think about something else outside of your job. Be a man. Be like Kreisler—a scholar, a gentleman, and a human being with wide sympathies and understanding. Kreisler could talk with you on your own specialty and never once mention music. Could you talk with him on his specialty witbout once mentioning your daily work?

The other day I was riding in tbe subway, I met a man who asked me where I was going. "To a concert," said I. "I envy you," be replied, "I haven't time for such pleasures. Too busy." "Poor man," I retorted. "You're not very happy. Now, if you would take an evening at a concert it would relieve you and refreshen you tomorrow for your job."

The second point then—is balance up your life—it will help all around—Baseball and Music. Baseball fans and Music fans!

THE NEW MUSIC FORUM

Under this heading the new ideas, queries, suggestions, are gathered. This is where the motion-picture theatres and men get together on music.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

In looking over the cue sheets that are published I notice the name of piece, length of time is given but no publisher. To one who is not acquainted or familiar with tbe pieces he is entirely left in the dark as to how he is to obtain the music.

I feel sure it will be found a great benefit to leaders if those making the cue sheets will kindly add the name of publisber for each selection mentioned.

LESLIE GROSSMITH,
Glencoe Lodge,
Vancouver, B. C., Canada.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have read carefully the proceedings of your fine conference and I can see that there is a big future before such an association and that it can be a vital feature in the musical life of the people at large. I am kept pretty busy turning out fully trained players for motion picture work and all of my pupils have been very successful.

Although I am not directly connected witb theatre work I sincerely hope that you will include me in your membership of the association. If there are any dues please let me know.

WALTER HEATON,
Organist,
Reading, Pa.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I read your article in tbis last week's Billboard and was pleased to see it there. I would like to see an article on "Why Some Managers Insist on Trying to be Leaders," "Why do Managers Engage a Leader, and Then Try to Tell Him What to Do, and Who to Engage, Etc."

I am making a study of picture work in every way I can, always looking for anything that will belp make our programs better, but when a manager insists on keeping some wbo are not able to do the work and then wants to cut out otbers, on the excuse that expenses must be reduced, it is too mucb to expect of any leader to get results.

A New Idea for Round Belting

The Amusement Supply Company, 740-742 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Illinois, are introducing a new spring connector or coupling for round belting. This connector has a great deal of merit, and is recommended for all moving picture machines.

More or less trouble has always occurred with belts being "too tight" or "too loose," or breaking from over strain. As all belting stretches to some extent, it has not been possible to keep an even tension.

The Connector has a spring music wire center, and it will keep the desired tension on round belting at all times, and by not having over tension, the machine runs more easily, and the belt lasts much longer.

This spring device will allow enough slippage for "take up" belts, also has the proper strength for "drive" belts.

This simple, inexpensive Connector or Coupling will supply a long needed want.

Trade Notes

Special bronze frames for posters and photographs were installed in the new Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, by the Newman Manufacturing Company, of that city. In addition to the seven frames this firm also supplied the wire grille work throughout the house, and the brass guards for the ticket windows. Practically all of the fifteen theatres owned by Ascher Brothers have been equipped by the Newman folks.

Other recent Newman installations are: Frames in the Columbia theatre, Coffeyville, Kan.; canopy with electric lights on Paul Krier's Star theatre, Walsenburg, Colo.; frames in the Colonial theatre, Lancaster, Pa.; steel-clad ticket chopper in the Colonial theatre, Rochester, Pa.

Mr. E. C. Newman has just returned from Williamson, W. Va., having been summoned by Mr. A. J. Kiser, of Tazewell, Va., in connection with railings for his new Cinderella theatre in Williamson.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Peck's Bad Boy"

(Five-Reel Comedy with Jackie Coogan Starred—Directed by Sam Wood—Titles by Irwin Cobb—Produced by Irving Lesser—Releasing Corporation Not Announced)

JACKIE COOGAN'S "Peck's Bad Boy" is going to draw like a circus, which is a statement that can be taken two ways, if we are to judge by the audiences which have mobbed the New York Mark Strand theatre, where the feature is playing its premiere.

The picture will attract circus business and a circus crowd—father, mother and all the children. There are more youngsters among the Strand audiences this week than we have ever seen in Broadway treatres all put together, and they all know about Jackie Coogan.

As for the picture, viewed from the way Strand audiences are taking it and not getting fussy about the ancient stories from which it was adapted, it is a hit. People are laughing every chance they get, which is frequent, and sometimes when there isn't a legitimate opportunity.

The star, and he is the star, in spite of the fact that the cast includes such players as Doris May, Wheeler Oakman and Raymond Hatton, demonstrates that his work in "The Kid" was not a flash in the pan or the result of having been cleverly handled. This child prodigy registers every emotion with a finesse that is nothing short of marvelous. Certainly no juvenile player has ever appeared who possessed such inherent talent or so vivid a personality, and there is not the shadow of a doubt but that he has arrived, so far as the fans are concerned.

Aside from the "Kid," a name which is going and should stick to him, most of the acting opportunities go to James Corrigan as "Pa Peck." Doris May doesn't have anything to do, and Wheeler Oakman only figures in the finish in some melodrama, which won't be taken seriously because the bill is "Feck's Bad Boy," and everybody knows what to expect—a bunch of "hokum."

The story which Director Sam Wood has built about the famous "Peck" characters resembles the first of the Baby Marie Osborne pictures in style of construction, a serious plot carried along by grown-ups, with kid tricks sandwiched in between for the entertainment. With an ordinary child actor playing the title role probably a lot of the gags pulled would fall rather flat, especially since Jackie is presented in a role that has been interpreted these many years as a mischievous urchin of some dozen years, and not a handsome little chap of six or seven, which is what Jackie really is. But Jackie is the big bet in the picture, which is as it should be, and audiences aren't going to bother much about anything else, not even Irwin Cobb's titles that are good at times, fair at others and in some cases rather overdrawn.

"Peck's Bad Boy" is a box-office bet that, properly handled, should bring the S. R. O. sign out with regularity. However, we might suggest that you take a tip from our opening sentence. "Bill this like a circus" if you want to do a circus business and get that circus crowd mentioned.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Morocco, the Mysterious"

(Kineto Reviews—Second Series)

FEZ, the capital of Morocco, is featured in this film, and when one considers that up to a few years ago this city was strictly closed to Europeans under penalty of death until its occupation by the French, this city, with its groups of men, women, children and animals passing by as they did in the days of the Old Testament, should attract.

In a most interesting and concise manner the reel jumps hither and thither; now the scenes show the narrow thoroughfares and the dwellings, the women moving about like ghosts lest the men gaze upon them, their eyes only being discerned, and again the scenes showing either the long battlement walls of the capital, the Machouar Gate, a medersa (university) or the brilliant mosaics of the medersa and the striking way they harmonize with the varicolored garments of the visitors.

Among the other interesting moments is the populace of Fez, which is a collection of all the races of Africa gathered together in the favorite meeting place, the M'salla, to hear the praises of Allah and Mohammed sung by public speakers; shoemakers shaping the famous Morosco leather and the hydraulic machine used for raising water for irrigation purposes by means of a water-wheel with revolving buckets, the horse or mule furnishing the power.

If your patrons are interested in educational pictures, this one should interest; if they are not, the picture is a good bet, for it is pleasant amusement.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Peculiar Pets"

(Kineto Reviews—Second Series)

WHEN it comes to making pictures in which animals are the prominent actors, Charles Urban is unbeatable. This does not mean that "Peculiar Pets" is the best animal picture the well-known editor of Popular Classics has made, for it is not.

The reel contains plenty of interest, however, and is amusing. And another interesting point is the way in which the titles blend with the action.

The opening scenes feature the ferret, showing the various ways the "mother" ferret counts its young and carries them to a place of safety. After amusing scenes, the Japanese waltzing mice take their place upon the screen. These mice have certain peculiarities which are always interesting to watch.

Guinea pigs, the smallest pony in the world, the spotted fawn and "Pongo," a mischievous monk, furnish a few delightful moments, and then a playful kitten, which seems to "have lots of fun" doing various stunts with a watering can, the stunts being well worth witnessing, holds the boards for a while.

Scenes showing a playful Dane, who is a very active young fellow, by the way, and who doesn't hesitate to mix everything up or get mixed up himself when opportunity affords him the chance, bring the film to a close. When a mechanical tiger is introduced and wags its head and tail at the dog the latter assumes a rather puzzled expression, but keeps right on in his own playful way.

The picture is amusing and instructive.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Purple Riders"

(Vitagraph Serial—15 Episodes—Starring Joe Ryan)

VITAGRAPH has uncorked an "up and-at-'em-men," blown in the bottle, serial for Joe Ryan, the cowboy star. Staged in the open country with mountains for backgrounds and decorated with effective atmosphere, the picture may be called perfect in regard to its exteriors. The story generates a healthy line of action which revolves around a courageous sheriff and his attempt to bring a group of mounted bandits to cover. These men are known as the Purple Riders because of the color of their robes and masks.

The serial is quite repetitious and goes over the same ground too often. One episode (we have seen four) is considerably like its forerunner. The sheriff or the bandits are outwitted which means that the participants must start all over again. There is a heroine who is written into the plot for romantic purposes. And she must needs have a weakling brother whose place in the story is to provide the conflict of love versus duty in the heart of the sheriff, played by Joe Ryan.

The picture is marked for its hard riding and quick shooting, the players being thoroughly schooled in horsemanship and firearms. It never drags despite its obviousness. The simplicity is noticeable because the usual serial is unduly complicated. "The Purple Riders" is a sturdy serial which will appeal to the red-blooded spectator. It gives evidence before the finish is reached of sending out an assortment of thrills. In the supporting cast is Elinor Fields who plays opposite the star. —LAURENCEREID.

"LAVENDER AND OLD LACE"
(Renco Film—Hodkinson)

Beauty of This Delicate Romance Is Kept Intact

MYRTLE REED'S novels are chiefly atmosphere. They are romances whose main charm is not their twists of plot or new situations, but the fragrance of a simple love story, simply told, laid in languid old New England. "Lavender and Old Lace" is a picture before which the sentimentalists will fall down and adore, and one that should stir up tender feelings in the breasts of even the most materialistic and matter-of-fact persons. In other words it will be as popular as the book.

Filming a story whose main ingredients are lace pinafores, tea in fragile china cups, bundles of sweet-scented love letters, and white haired old ladies, and which is devoid of action in the motion picture sense, may appear to be risky business. And had this picture been enacted by a less capable cast, and especially had the direction been in less able hands than Lloyd Ingraham's, the result might have been in doubt. But Mr. Ingraham not only keeps this simple tale from being tawdry, but he raises it, by clever human touches, and by remarkable perfection of detail, to an intensely appealing romance. He alternates the sequence of the trusting old lady, waiting through thirty years for the return of her lover, with a comedy relief of the love affair of two rustic boobs in excellent fashion. Mr. Ingraham deserves the credit for keeping Myrtle Reed's story just as delicate, sweet, and fragrant as it was on the printed page.

The plot is simply that of a New England woman, whose lover, a sea captain, disappears. For thirty years she watches and waits in her cottage, with the lamp ever burning as the daily train from Boston puffs into the village. Confident of his return she keeps sacred the memories of her one romance, and reads in the tea leaves her fortune which never comes true. Then when she learns that the young man from Boston, who has fallen in love with the niece of her life long friend, is the son of the man who promised to be faithful to her, she hugs the bundle of love letters to her breast, lets the beacon light burn out, and dies. There is a counter romance between the two young people, who are played very capably by Seena Owen and Louis Bennison. This romantic tale is set to a musical score of "Traumeri," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Memories," and others dear to the heart of sentimentalists. Marguerite Snow plays the part of the old lady and brings into it plenty of pathos without overacting. James Corrigan has a small part, which is big enough, however, to show what a sterling actor he is. The two boob parts are played by Zella Ingraham and Victor Potel. They, with the titles, provide high class comedy.

The one fault we find with the picture is that it drags too much after the climax. The old lady takes a considerable time to die. "Lavender and Old Lace" will undoubtedly find its greatest appeal among the ladies, but most humans have enough old-fashioned romance in their make-up to find it entertaining.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A story of love enduring" is the way the producers announce "Lavender and Old Lace," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. As the beloved novel by Myrtle Reed from which this screen romance was adapted proved to be one of the most delightful love stories of the twentieth century, so it is expected that the picture version will be one of the most entertaining offerings of the present day.

It is estimated that thirty million people have read this delightful story of a woman whose love outlasted all time. Although Myrtle Reed's book was published twenty years ago, it is still popular. The wonder pen of this gifted writer has left a story which will never be forgotten and the producers have made an earnest and successful effort to have this story visualized and perpetuated on the screen.

"Lavender and Old Lace" is interpreted on the screen by a highly capable cast, and one which can be honestly called "all-star," for it includes such well known players as Marguerite Snow, Seena Owen, Louis Bennison, and James Corrigan. It was directed by Lloyd Ingraham who shows a remarkable knowledge of life in a small New England town, for it is there that the story is laid.

"Lavender and Old Lace" is recommended to those who wish to see a clean, sweet, fragrant love story. It is one which will bring back memories of romances of the past, or dreams of romances of the future, to all who see it.

PROGRAM READER

It is estimated that thirty million persons have read the novel "Lavender and Old Lace," the masterpiece of the beloved writer, Myrtle Reed, which has been picturized and which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. None of the charm, the delicate fragrance, of this ever-beautiful romance of sleepy old New England has been lost in the screen version. It is on the silversheet what it was on the printed page—a clean, delicate story of a woman's trusting love. As you laughed and cried over the bitter disappointment and quaint humor of Mary Ainslie in the novel, so will you laugh and cry at the motion picture, which brings the characters who lived and loved in that languid New England village, before your eyes on the screen.

"Lavender and Old Lace" is enacted by an all-star cast, which includes Marguerite Snow, Seena Owen, and Louis Bennison. Seena Owen will be remembered from her work in "Intolerance." Louis Bennison has been on the speaking stage for some time as well as on the screen. James Corrigan, who has made such a hit in "Peck's Bad Boy," has also an important role in the picture.

"PENNY OF TOPHILL TRAIL"
(Federated Film Exchanges)

Bessie Love Returns in Worth-While, Romantic Comedy-Drama

THIS is the first of Federated's Bessie Love series, made by Andrew J. Callaghan, which it has been possible for us to see, and should the others keep up to the standard of "Penny," Federated will have a product worthy of a place on the program of high class neighborhood houses.

The story allows the star greater latitude. Miss Love is an ingenue, a bobbed-haired, wide-eyed, little-Miss-Innocence type of ingenue, but there is no reason why she must appear in stories coated thick with sugar. "Penny of Tophill Trail" is not such a story. Neither is Miss Love cast as a slavey. She plays an average American girl in a zestful and charming manner. The story also allows her a number of costumes, varying from evening dress to cow-girl outfit, in all of which she looks equally chic.

The author takes the audience into his confidence by showing them the West as it really is, for the two-gun man and the bandits are gone, but not missed. The action is laid almost entirely in a luxurious Western ranch, and the hero travels in a sporty roadster. At the same time there is a wealth of beautiful scenery for a background. Pictorially the exteriors are a credit to Director Arthur Berthelet.

Briefly the story is that of a young girl who arrives in flight on the California plains. We meet her again in the village jail, listed as suspicious character. The young ranchman in an effort to reform her, and to make her worthy of his pal, who has fallen in love with a girl of that name on his last visit to Chicago, takes her to his home. A good part of what follows is taken up with the girl's winning her way into the heart of the stern, unbending, reforming ranchman, and no one can do this kind of action better than Bessie Love.

The ending is a real surprise, built on a case of mistaken identity. The girl is not a thief, and is not running away from the "master mind" of a gang of criminals. She is a moving picture actress who is trying to hide until her manager's option on her services has expired. We think a little footage could have been spared to explain this more in detail by means of a flash-back. It is rather intricate to be fully comprehended in a few subtitles. Logically there are weak spots, but the producers no doubt considered the punch at the end worth the sacrifice. Certainly the plot allows Miss Love a character that keeps the audience guessing. The sight of a thief going through the harrowing experience of being imprisoned and rescued, in such a facetious manner, piques the interest. The picture is better acted than it is titled, with Wheeler Oakman playing opposite the star in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. Miss Love seems to have been directed by one who appreciated her points of appeal and made the most of them. It can be classed as a delightful comedy-drama, rich in romance and absolutely censor-proof.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature picture at the ———— theatre for ———— has the distinction of being a really novel attraction. In these days when producers are grinding out films by the hundreds, it is exceptional for a picture to be original in story, setting or development, but "Penny of Tophill Trail" has all of this and a whole lot more.

Bessie Love is the star of this attraction. It is some time since this dainty screen actress has been seen on the screen, but she will be remembered from her work in a series of Vitagraph features. Miss Love is the kind of a girl young and old, male and female, will like to see. Petite and dainty, with a winning smile and a charming personality, she is typical of the straight-forward, sport-loving sincere American girl.

Miss Love in "Penny of Tophill Trail" plays the part of a little Chicago girl who arrives on a mysterious mission at a California ranch. She is taken to the house of a wealthy rancher and at the very end it develops that she is not quite the character she has pretended to be.

Supporting Miss Love is Wheeler Oakman, a popular leading man, who played the principal male role in "The Virgin of Stamboul." Others in the cast are Raymond Cannon, Patricia Palmer and Harry De Vere. The story is the work of Belle Danaris Maniates, and Arthur Berthelet directed.

PROGRAM READER

Bessie Love has returned to the screen and will be seen on ———— at this theatre in her latest screen offering, "Penny of Tophill Trail." This dainty and attractive star won for herself a great many admirers when she appeared in a series of features under the Vitagraph banner and "Penny of Tophill Trail" is pretty sure to increase the number considerably. The story is laid in the West, but the picture is not what is generally known on the screen as "Western." It shows the West as it really is. There are no cowboys shooting each other at sight; no "bad men" or crooked gamblers, and no Indians riding in circles around the fighting pioneers. But the West always has been and always will be, the land of romance. And it is a sweet and human love story that Bessie Love, most charming of stars, portrays on the screen in "Penny," aided by Wheeler Oakman, one of the most popular of leading men.

"Penny of Tophill Trail" will have a ———— day run at the ———— beginning ————.

"THE TRAVELING SALESMAN"
(Paramount)

Fatty Arbuckle Has an Interesting Picture Here

FATTY ARBUCKLE in his latest picture, "The Traveling Salesman," seems to have caught his stride again after a dismal effort in "The Dollar a Year Man." His newest release like "Brewster's Millions," is an adaptation of a successful play, both of which have been picturized before. The picture, insofar as its characterization is concerned, is ideally suited to Arbuckle's personality, although some will say it is not entirely sure-fire because he is expected to furnish exaggerated hokum. The new screen version will undoubtedly be looked upon as better entertainment than the offering in which Frank McIntyre starred. In the first place it is a finer adaptation and the comedy points have been emphasized to better advantage. If it is disappointing to some this will be on account of developing it in a legitimate fashion instead of presenting it as a hokum comedy.

The sponsors have taken some liberties with the original which are noticeable in planting the characters and staging the picture with as many exteriors as possible. The action gets off to a good start with some train incident which places the traveling salesman in his true colors. The director deserves praise for presenting this train as realistic as a studio can make it. There is no rocking back and forth—a fault usually found. For the introductory reels, the rotund star manages to score with some individual touches which certainly get over. There is no striving to put over the comedy. Those who remember "Brewster's Millions" may have some grievance in the fact that there are no moments of broad slapstick. Perhaps had the star exaggerated his efforts it would hit a higher mark. What Arbuckle does here can be duplicated by any heavyweight actor. So it might have been better had he supplied his own brand of comedy—a brand which cannot be imitated.

The picture is taken out of its humorous development in the latter reels, relying a good deal on romance and intrigue. That it falters occasionally cannot be denied, yet somehow manages to pick up after each lapse. The poker game is a good episode and the rural incident is in the right place. The title writer committed an error, however, in stating that a heavy storm caused a "wash-out" at the crossing, with the succeeding scene showing an auto raising the dust on a country road. The star has a great time in the hand-car and manages to keep thoroughly in character. "The Traveling Salesman" affords good entertainment, is capably interpreted and directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle's latest picture is "The Traveling Salesman," adapted from James Forbes' amusing comedy in which Frank McIntyre starred and in which he appeared in a screen version a few years ago. It is considered a most excellent vehicle for Mr. Arbuckle, and one which affords him unlimited opportunities to put over the delightful comedy which has made him a general favorite. The story concerns a good-natured traveling salesman who stops over at a small town, where he meets the girl, who is about to be swindled out of a valuable piece of property, champions her cause, and cleverly saves the day.

The star depicts to perfection the generous-hearted, likeable drummer who scoffs at romance, but capitulates to the charms of the heroine—a heroine admirably played by Betty Ross Clarke. There is an abundance of atmosphere and the comedian goes strong as a laugh-provoker. One of the funniest spots is a poker game which proved that there is virtue in gambling at times. The picture is as humorous as "Brewster's Millions." In the supporting cast are Frank Holland, Lucille Ward Wilton Taylor, Richard Wayne, George Pearce and others. The direction was Joseph Henebery, and Walter Woods wrote the scenario.

PROGRAM READER

James Forbes' famous play, "The Traveling Salesman," has been transferred to the screen with Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in the starring role. It will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. The play was highly successful on the stage with Frank McIntyre as the star. Mr. McIntyre also played the star role in the first screen version of the play, which was produced some years ago. It is considered a most excellent vehicle for Fatty Arbuckle, and one which affords him unlimited opportunities to put over his delightful comedy. Nobody loves a fat man is an old saying, but it is disproved here when the rotund star finds romance. The picture is of the same high calibre as "Brewster's Millions." In the cast are Betty Ross Clark and others.

CATCH LINES

Fatty Arbuckle is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— with a brand new line of tricks. He is "The Traveling Salesman" in the picture of that name. Sixty minutes of great fun.

Come and see Fatty Arbuckle in his cleverest comedy, "The Traveling Salesman." The big star in a big comedy.

"I AM GUILTY!"
(Associated Producers—J. Parker Read, Jr.)

Mystery Story Carries a Trick Finish and Much Melodrama

PICTUREGOERS may rest assured that Louise Glaum has decorative titles for her productions. "I Am Guilty!" is certain to attract the eye as quickly as "Sex," or "Love Madness." Once in their seats the patrons will be placed in a suspensive frame of mind due to the dominant element of mystery based upon vengeance and crook melodrama. Since it is the object of the sponsors of this type of photoplay to keep the spectator guessing one may say that they have accomplished it here with good results. The picture does not ring true. In fact it is greatly farfetched in incident and there are a number of gaps which defy logic. The subject matter has been tried on several occasions even to the same development of plot and characterization.

That one is looking at familiar material will be realized in the planting of the neglected wife who takes advantage of her husband's absence to play with fire. He is an attorney thoroughly engrossed with his profession. When he returns home he is surprised to find his spouse acting suspiciously. She has acted in self-defense—to protect herself against a moral leper. A shot is fired after she burns her shoulder and thinking herself guilty she goes to extremes to protect the innocent victim accused of the crime. The ramifications of the plot are threaded with crisp action and startling mystery. It is a dramatic touch when a burglar hiding behind portieres places a gun in the heroine's hands without disclosing his presence. The lawyer returns home and takes up the defense of the criminal. He knows for certain that his client is innocent through the benefaction of the real culprit. Yet he cannot trace the evidence until his child exclaims that the mother has a "pretty butterfly" on her shoulder. This is the scar of the burn and links his wife as the guilty person.

The indicted person has said "find the woman with the scar and you find the real criminal!" Here is where the trick climax is employed. The husband leaves home and hobnobs with the underworld and finds the real culprit at the psychological moment, his wife indicts herself in a crowded courtroom. A former mistress of the philanderer had fired the shot out of vengeance. His wife's gun shows every cartridge in place. This is the tremendous gap in the story. Surely she must have known that some other person fired the shot, yet she allows herself to suffer untold anguish and despair. This bit rather insults the intelligence, although it has its place in piling up the mystery and building a trick finish. The picture is staged quite as sumptuously as "Sex" and exudes considerable exotic atmosphere. Some touches seem out of place and may invite criticism because of their crudities. There is a healthy punch to the picture and it is capably acted by the star and a clever company.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An absorbing mystery story, lavishly produced, with a star whose forte is emotional characterization—this is "I Am Guilty!" starring Louise Glaum. The picture will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The star plays the part of a neglected wife who accepts the invitation of a friend from the days of the chorus to take a last fling at pleasure. Following the party, the host meets death in a mysterious manner and as a result the wife is drawn in the web which is built around the tragedy. A burn on the shoulder, caused by a struggle with the host caused the guilt to be placed against the neglected spouse.

The situation proves to be exceptionally dramatic. Her husband returns and is employed as the attorney of the defense. Circumstances bring him into accusing his own wife of the crime. It looks hopeless and the husband gives up the case. To relate any more would be giving the picture away to the spectator. But "I Am Guilty!" is dramatic, carries the utmost in mystery and suspense, and is finely acted by Miss Glaum and a cast that includes Mahlon Hamilton, Joseph Kilgour and Ruth Stonehouse. The picture is handsomely staged. Jack Nelson directed from a story by Bradley King.

PROGRAM READER

She had been neglected by her husband. Driven to extremes she sought companionship away from home. Then she found herself involved in crime. Was she guilty of murder? She suffered untold anguish and despair. What if her husband found out. Did he find out? What of her child? Could she have an easy conscience? And what of the innocent victim who was indicted for murder? Did she go to his rescue? These questions are answered in a most dramatic fashion in the Louise Glaum picture, "I Am Guilty!" which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. There is no need of stating that it is one of the best mystery offerings ever presented. It is handsomely staged and acted by a cast that includes Mahlon Hamilton, Joseph Kilgour and other sterling players.

"THE MAGIC CUP"
(Realart)

Pleasant Little Picture Starring Constance Binney

WHILE this picture by E. Lloyd Sheldon does not measure up to some of the dramatic offerings of the past in which the Realart star has scored, nevertheless it carries moments of appeal in its Cinderella and Prince Charming characterization. It is all very much like a fairy tale and should not be taken too seriously. If one will just take its romance and its melodramatic counterplot as something to entertain for an hour then one will not be disappointed. The star plays a pathetic scullery maid who is employed as a dishwasher in an apartment hotel. The early sequences are given up to a Christmas celebration in which she along with several other employees is made the recipient of a handsome reward. Straightway, she buys presents for the poor, being accompanied on the journey by the hero, a newspaper reporter.

The melodramatic trend of plot shows itself when the girl takes a highly valued cup to the pawnbroker. Realizing its worth the latter with his crooked companions concoct a plot to become wealthy. The oldest figure represents himself as her long lost grandfather, an Irish nobleman. A country home is established, the girl is bedecked in the latest modes, some secret paneling is installed in the house and the gullible jewelers are invited out to display their wares. The "grandfather" exchanges a string of pearls for the paste variety and the crooked work is on. Meanwhile the girl has regenerated a feeling of conscience among the crooks—one of whom is arbitrarily introduced as her own father—a man formerly a derelict. The reporter has looked up the "grandfather's" name in "Who's Who" and discovered him to be very much alive in Ireland. This seems like the baldest kind of coincidence. So the nobleman arrives in America and claims his heiress. And this girl, true to her generous nature, saves her crook family from going to jail.

There is a bid for pathos in the concluding scene which shows the girl's father dying without making his identity known. "The Magic Cup" is a new twist of Cinderella. Instead of the golden slipper it is a silver cup which lifts the scullery maid to the heights. John Robertson has made the most of the story in his direction. He has managed to keep the interest at attention through a compact arrangement of scenes. If there is any criticism to be made of his work it can be found in the manner in which he lines up the figures in opposite positions from one another. The picture is adequately staged and capably acted. There is no doubt but what it will please the average picturegoer.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Constance Binney is the star of "The Magic Cup," the Realart picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. This is a John S. Robertson production, which means it is directed by the same man who produced "Sentimental Tommy," and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" for Paramount. "The Magic Cup" gives to Miss Binney an opportunity to display her charming personality to its best advantage. As Mary Molley she contributes a most fascinating portrayal of the scullery maid who longed for happiness and found it by merely wishing hard enough. No matter how many clouds appeared during the day, Mary always found time to radiate cheer.

She possessed a silver cup which became a magic cup because it brought her riches, a home and romance. Mary was adopted by a pseudo grandfather—all on account of the cup. Then her Prince Charming rescued her from the clutches of the crooks. It wasn't long before she found harmony everywhere. Miss Binney is supported by Vincent Coleman, Blanche Craig, J. H. Gilmour, Malcolm Bradley and other talented players. "The Magic Cup" is charged with pretty sentiment and heart interest.

PROGRAM READER

She was a scullery maid but no matter how drab and monotonous her daily life she always managed to radiate good cheer and happiness. She possessed a silver cup which eventually brought her riches and romance. She took it to a pawnbroker in order to raise money to feed the poor. And she found herself the figure of adoption. The cup had belonged to a nobleman and was handed down to his daughter, our heroine's mother. So the pawnbroker and his evil friends saw a chance to gain a snug fortune by hoodwinking gullible merchants. How they did it—how the girl found a way out of her difficulties—how she found romance—how she found her rightful grandfather—these are a few of the details of this most fascinating romance, "The Magic Cup," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Constance Binney.

SUGGESTIONS

While this is nothing new to the screen and suggests the ancient and honorable Cinderella and Prince Charming tales, nevertheless it scores because of its surface touches. Play up its new dressing of Cinderella. Play up that it is an excellent study in the art of finding happiness. Make a play for the young and old and tell that the world is as full of romance and adventure as this sweet picture. Play up the title. Ask your patrons if they have magic cups which might lead them to untold wealth. Play up the star and tell that she is gaining a healthy following. Emphasize what the director is doing. He is considered one of the best on the screen since producing "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and "Sentimental Tommy." Exploit it as a novel romance which radiates happiness and good cheer.

CATCH LINES

See Constance Binney in "The Magic Cup," a picture of happiness and sunshine.

"SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK"
(Robertson-Cole)

Unquestionably Linder's Best Picture to Date

"SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK" is unadulterated farce of a quality that seldom reaches the screen in more than two-reel lengths and presents Max Linder in a role eminently suited for his talents. In fact the famous French comedian has never appeared to as good advantage. An artist at pantomime always, he has succeeded in eliminating almost entirely the foreign mannerisms that characterized some of his old pictures and gives a performance that has never been excelled by any farceur.

However, it is the incident and "gags" which make "Seven Years Bad Luck" such unusual entertainment. There isn't much of a story, the whole production being a series of episodes hung together with good titles, but no story is needed. We have a sneaking suspicion that the first couple of reels is an adaptation of one of Linder's old French comedies, Americanized and modernized, but this in no way detracts from the sequences as entertainment. It is new stuff to any American audience and perfectly done. Toward the end of the picture some "lion stuff" is used that is sure fire. Linder wrastles with an honest-to-goodness lioness as a child would with a pet collie and if the sequence contains any double photography it is so good that no living person will be able to spot it.

Some people who can't take their pictures any way but seriously may think that the feature is "much ado about nothing," but for those who like Lloyd, Johnny Hines, etc., this should go over as a hit. It is possible that the production might be improved by trimming some of the individual scenes a bit. There seems to be a tendency to overplay some of the gags which results in getting the laugh and letting it die down before beginning another scene.

"Seven Years Bad Luck" was written and directed by Mr. Linder. His leading woman is Alta Allen, who makes an ideal ingenue foil for the star.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Seven Years' Bad Luck," a comedy featuring the famous French comedian, Max Linder. The offering is written and directed by the star, who is supported by an excellent cast that comprises Thelma Percy, Alta Allen, Betty Petersen and other well known players. For atmosphere there are a group of lions, tigers, railroad trains, country estates, beautiful women, good-looking men and a dog and monkey. The latter is none other than the famous Joe Martin.

As may well be imagined, the picture carries a story which has to do with superstition. The comedian breaks a mirror by crashing a shoe through it. Immediately he is beset by all the goblins, hoodoos and other mediums through which bad luck is wont to make a demonstration. His sweetheart breaks an engagement and Max is advised to go to another clime, warmer or colder, to rest up, and regain his balance. Max goes and his adventures and return present a series of mirth provoking episodes. The picture carries rich incident which is as original as it is amusing. The star plays his part with finesse.

PROGRAM READER

It is hard to realize just how big a jinx a broken mirror wishes on a fellow. Max Linder not only loses his sweetheart immediately but falls heir to all the misfortune ever recorded as having been visited upon one poor innocent individual. The situations are screamingly funny. Poor Max gets in deeper at every turn and in playing his role, introduces a series of new comedy tricks never before shown on the screen. He does this by keeping away from slapstick. He wrestles with lions and does other amazing stunts. The picture is "Seven Years' Bad Luck," written and directed by the star, himself. The offering will be at the ———— theatre next ————. Come and see one of the cleverest comedies of the year.

SUGGESTIONS

There are several angles to exploit here in putting this picture over with the public. The nature of the story can be made the most of in snappy advertising lines. Advising your patrons to look out for broken mirrors and other superstitious mediums can work up a lot of interest. You can play up Linder and explain that he has the cleverest comedy in which he has ever appeared. Even the title can be exploited for its novelty. For a prologue you can put over a Hawaiian dance number which would be linking up with one of the scenes of the picture. Your lobby can be exploited through superstitious mediums, putting up broken mirrors and snappy catch lines beneath them. Exploit the thrilling lion episodes. Describe it as sixty minutes of solid laughter.

CATCH LINES

Come and laugh over "Seven Years' Bad Luck," starring Max Linder. The cleverest comedy of the year.

Are you superstitious? Do you avoid walking under a ladder? Did you ever break a mirror? Come and see how misfortune fell upon Max Linder in "Seven Years' Bad Luck."

Does seven years bad luck follow the breaking of a mirror? Come and find out when you see Max Linder in the cleverest comedy of the season.

"THE BLAZING TRAIL"
(Universal)

Some Moments of Interest in Mayo's Latest

UNIVERSAL is still keeping Frank Mayo in the big outdoors, although "The Blazing Trail" does not measure up to "The Magnificent Brute" in point of entertainment. In the first place it lacks the picturesque backgrounds, although "them thar hills" lend a certain ruggedness to the story. The offering is based upon a Cumberland romance with the characterization revolving around some primitive natives and a city-bred hero who has taken up his abode in the big outdoors for the sake of the simple life. While he is a noted physician he hides his identity, being content to keep close to the soil. The story is arbitrarily developed and the sequences are mostly episodic.

The forepart of the action has to do with a mild conflict centering upon the antagonism of the natives for an education. A sweet wildflower in the person of a native daughter brings moments of heart interest in her search for expression with the doctor. His response is more sympathetic than it is romantic and it isn't until a school teacher arrives that the love interest is developed. So episodic are several scenes that the story never reaches its climaxes. A scene is shown and the action continues to the next without explanations. The hero's identity is established in due time and he is represented as being entirely successful in his experiments with a serum for blood poisoning. The big punch arrives when the heroine is made the victim of an accident at the hands of an arbitrarily introduced villain. This fellow's place in the action seems really unnecessary. When the wild mountain girl stays away from home too long, her relatives summon the midnight riders to seek vengeance. Their efforts to punish the doctor do not ring true since his conduct has been above reproach. A clansman blows a horn and the riders appear from all sides.

One might imagine there are several hundred, yet when they are seen collectively, the troupe contains no more than a dozen. It is midnight but the California sun casts a strong shadow over them. The lighting is ineffective here because a succeeding shot shows the scene tinted to the right color. The riders capture the hero but he escapes and reaches the bedside of the heroine in time to save her life with his precious serum. Another faulty touch shows a juvenile hero avenging the crime of the villain which is an attempt to dishonor her. He shoots from the rear, yet the victim is wounded in the forearm! The player enacting this role wears a trick moustache which doesn't like to behave. The star gives a rugged performance and his support includes a promising ingenue in the charming personality of Mary Philbin.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A romance of the Cumberland mountains which presents a group of primitive natives, a physician who has ostracized himself from society, and a charming school teacher is offered in "The Blazing Trail," starring Frank Mayo. This Universal picture is a fitting successor to "The Magnificent Brute" in which the star appeared recently. It carries a wealth of action, a pleasing romance, moments of heart interest and picturesque backgrounds which have been caught with remarkable color and atmosphere. The offering comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

The romance revolves around a young physician who, after experimenting successfully with a serum for blood poisoning, has found refuge in the Cumberland mountains where he resides with his real identity unrevealed. A mountain girl becomes attracted to him but he fails to respond to romance until a charming school teacher takes up residence there. He is instrumental in rescuing her from an adventurer and becomes involved in mountain vengeance. Suspicion rests against him but he is able to absolve himself from blame. The picture is well acted and permits the star to offer dramatic moments.

PROGRAM READER

Suppose you were highly respected in the community in which you reside and then suddenly discovered that you were suspected of crime what would you do? Suppose you found yourself confronted by night riders who were determined to punish you for a crime of which you were innocent? Would you fight? That is the situation which confronts Frank Mayo in "The Blazing Trail," the Universal picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a production of the big outdoors, possessing marvelous scenery, vital action, a pleasing romance and considerable dash and adventure. Come and be royally entertained by this man's man of actors. See Frank Mayo.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been meeting with success in playing the Frank Mayo pictures there is no reason why you cannot clean up with "The Blazing Trail." It is a crisp picture, one filled with good action, suspense, romance, pathos, heart interest and other dramatic element. So play up these points. Play up Mayo too. Tell that he has a fitting companion picture to "The Magnificent Brute." Use stills of the exteriors. Have an artist draw a likeness of the outdoor scenes for your lobby frames. Bill it as a dramatic romance of the Cumberland mountains. Use catch lines. Stage a prologue in harmony with the scenery. Some types could be employed for atmosphere. Exploit it as a stirring romance of the big outdoors.

CATCH LINES

Did you see Frank Mayo in "The Magnificent Brute?" Well this popular Universal star has another winner in "The Blazing Trail." Come and be royally entertained.

See "The Blazing Trail," a fascinating romance of the Cumberland mountains with Frank Mayo as the star.

"Don't Leave Your Husband"
(Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc.)

THIS is an intimate society drama taking as its theme woman's overwhelming desire for luxury, even to the extent of leaving her home and her husband and risking her honor in an effort to obtain it. The former name of the picture was "Dangerous Toys," and it is adapted from the story by Edmund Goulding. Samnel R. Bradley directed, and the cast includes William Desmond, Margaret Clayton, Marion Elmore and Frank Losee.

While this is a story of married life, it does not attempt to be satirical after the manner of some DeMille pictures, but is out and out drama. A young wife, unsatisfied with her humble home, obtains a position as a model in a fashionable dress shop to add to the family income. There she meets her husband's employer, a roue. He, because of a series of misfortunes, is extremely cynical of woman kind. In an effort to prove to the young husband that no wife prefers love to luxury, he offers to keep the girl for three weeks and then let her make her choice. The girl finally returns to her husband, who has forgiven her, and to the simple life. The roue is convinced that true love does exist and is reunited to his wife.

The whole story, as can be seen from the above, is built up about a delicate situation. The sub-titles, of course, never make any blunt statement which would be offensive, but they are extremely suggestive. They talk, for instance, about apartments maintained by a certain class of men which "are not exactly their homes" and keeping the girl "under certain conditions." Virtue, of course, is triumphant, and the moral lesson is taught, even if the text is quite frank. It does not belong to the "family" type of picture.

The cast is capable and the interest holds up. Length, 6,200 feet.—MATTHEW T. TAYLOR.

"Dummy Love"
(Gayety Comedy-Educational)

A PRETTY little farce comedy with two pretty girls playing the leading roles and a few good comedians indulging in antics to keep up the interest.

Although the story is weak as to plot or whatever one might call it, the continuity is even and the action is kept in the right key throughout.

This together with pleasing direction and the selection of good exteriors and interiors gives the comedy its appealing value.

A young town chap, much in love with a vivacious young woman, finds on entering her home that she is making love to another man, whose arm is swung around her neck. The love making takes place near an open window and the jealous lover eyes with envy the scene which is taking place.

When he enters the house and in jealous hatred searches for his rival, the scenes run along at a rapid pace until the mistaken identity idea is introduced, and the wrong man accused of the "loving." It is all for naught, however, for the young man in the window was only a dummy and had been used by the young girl to excite her sweetheart's jealousy.

The comedy has a pleasing finish and should interest.—FRANK LEONARD.

"An Eskimotion Picture"
(Hudson's Bay One Reeler—Educational)

THIS is another one of the Hudson's Bay releases through Educational describing in story form the life of the Eskimo. Whether it is through the influences of this company that the natives willingly act the roles describing their lives on the screen or whether they are natural actors, we do not know but there really is something worth while seeing in these one reelers.

In "An Eskimotion Picture" the daily life of the native is strongly played up from the beginning to the end, the cameraman taking us into the homes, where the women indulge in the making of many household articles, out on the trail with the dogs during the first snow storm, and to the Sunday school where one of the most unique scenes ever witnessed is shown to the spectator.

This does not mean that a picture of an Eskimo Sunday school in full working order has not been flashed upon the screen before but that the natural acting of the natives is convincing as they sit or listen to the preacher or say their prayers upon the benches.

And then a real Eskimo marriage is performed before the camera, the participants being a little awkward in the beginning but plucking up courage towards the finish.

by

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

PHOTOPLAYS, exactly like magazines, books, newspapers, and other publications and productions which appeal to public appreciation and satisfy public taste, are built upon a careful study of the public's requirements, and a persistent effort to supply those needs through the medium of the highest talent in every step and stage of development.

Achievement is not haphazard; an individual accomplishment may be, but continued accomplishment always is and always will be the result of careful and competent organization, system and management.

The plain facts seem fully to justify the assertion that Cosmopolitan Productions have scored more successful pictures than any other producing organization in the moving picture business—possibly more than all the other moving picture organizations combined—during the brief period of a little over a year in which Cosmopolitan Productions has been operating as a moving picture making company.

Chance might have made one "Humoresque," but chance would not have followed it with a "World and His Wife," a "Restless Sex," a "Heliotrope," an "Inside Of The Cup," a "Buried Treasure," and a "Straight Is The Way."

Nor would chance produce the "Proxies," "The Wild Goose," "The Woman God Changed," "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," "The Bride's Play," and other productions to be seen this fall—other masterpieces of the moving picture art which are already created and on their way to successful release.

This brief article is to present to moving picture exhibitors and to the public the system and organization by which these great successes have been made and by which even greater successes will surely and continuously be made and presented for the edification and enjoyment of the public.

The system is simple. Get the best in moving picture material, in direction, in photography, in scenes and sets, in everything from the initial story through the scenario treatment, the staging, acting and production, down to the ultimate cutting, titling and editing.

In every department of activity in the world there are many that are good but only one that is best. The sincere and unceasing effort of Cosmopolitan Productions has been to associate those that are best in every phase of moving picture making in the creation of its photoplays.

Undoubtedly and undeniably the best authors in the world write for the Cosmopolitan Magazine and its associated magazines.

In the United States, in England, and in all the European countries, the fiction market is combed and practically controlled to furnish the highest quality of entertaining fiction for this group of magazines.

This entertaining and educational material—for it is instructive in the highest degree in its literary quality and in its ethical purpose—is turned over to Cosmopolitan Productions to be translated into moving pictures.

Here directors of the highest reputation, of acknowledged genius and established excellence are employed to superintend and direct the film production.

The writer of many successful plays and a man who was lately the Editor of one of America's greatest weeklies, is in charge of the Scenario Department.

One of the greatest scenic directors and scenic designers in the world devotes all his time to the general conception and detailed execution of the Cosmopolitan Productions.

And so through every department and every detail of every department, to a degree that it would only weary you to recite, super-excellence prevails; and it can only maintain its place by constantly surpassing its super-excellence.

No one individual is responsible for the perfection of Cosmopolitan Productions; but all heads of all departments contribute their full share —from the able editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine all the way through to the administrative head, who employs the vast publicity of the Hearst publications for the promotion of the finished picture, and its introduction in the most effective way to the attention of the whole American public from Massachusetts to Georgia and from New York to California.

Everywhere power and agency work hand in hand for the highest success in production and exploitation.

And there are no engines in the United States or in the world more powerful and more far-reaching than the engines of collection, construction and distribution which the Cosmopolitan Productions control.

To phrase it in terms of trade, the raw material in fiction form is gathered from all quarters of the earth, is manufactured with the highest art and skill, and is advertised and exploited by the greatest agencies of publicity which exist today.

All this makes for success. It means success. It compels success.

And as the various cogs of the great machine come to run more and more smoothly through practice and closer contact, it will mean still greater success—a success which we trust you will share and enjoy.

No picture before ever received such unqualified praise as the critics, newspaper and trade paper, lavished on this Barrie masterpiece.

The Motion Picture News said: "A milestone in screen production."

Wid's Daily: "One of the year's best pictures. Every exhibitor will want to secure it for an extended run."

The Most Costly Made-In-America Two-Reel Comedy

Christie's "Sneakers" cost more to produce than many features.

SNEAKERS

IN "Sneakers" Christie adds a pretentious production to his long list of side-splitting comedies.

In "Sneakers" Neal Burns and Dorothy Devore play husband and wife who both sneak out for an evening at "Canfield's," one to enjoy a game, the other to see what such a place is like. Each believes the other at home. Baby is watched over by their faithful collie. Naturally "the house is pinched." The gambling house sets are sumptuous, the complications with the cops are superb, the climax a scream.

Amid gorgeous surroundings the action is helter-skelter, pell-mell, fast, frenzied and furious. Anywhere anybody turns, there is a cop. It's a nightmare of shields, nightsticks and brass buttons.

Never was faster, funnier action shown on the screen. And it is all clean, wholesome comedy.

RUN your eyes over the gallery of distinguished people on these two pages who have been assembled to produce Realart's Birthday Production.

They have been chosen because of their exact fitness for the parts assigned them in this powerful story of an American household which is saved from ruin by a young girl's devotion.

HECTOR TURNBULL, author of the Realart Birthday Production, is no novice of the screen. It will be a long time before you will forget his picture "The Cheat", which brought you big money. Not only has Mr. Turnbull written the story, but he is watching every angle of its preparation, and will cut and title the finished product.

CHESTER FRANKLIN, director of the Birthday Picture, during his ten years of consistent success in picture production, has established success as a Franklin habit. He was the director of Bebe Daniels' first Realart picture "You Never Can Tell."

MAY McAVOY, starring in the Realart Birthday Production, after having played as leading woman and co-star in several successful pictures, achieved perhaps the greatest screen triumph of the year as Grizel in "Sentimental Tommy." She brings to the heroine role of this picture an interpretation that is marvelous for its sympathy, charm and emotional fire.

"TWO WEEKS WITH PAY"

Adaped from the Saturday Evening Post story by Nina Wilcox Putnam - Directed by Maurice Campbell - Scenario by Douglas Bronston

It was some splash

Pansy O'Donnell began her "two weeks with pay" (which is another way of saying vacation) very auspiciously by dropping into a wayside puddle at the same time as a good-looking young millionaire. And when she reached the Fairview Hotel she was at once hailed as the famous Marie La Tour, "mermaid of the screen," incognito.

It would have flabbergasted anyone except Pansy, but after the first gasp she was right at home in the role—until it came to high diving, Marie's high card.

The complications which ensued and the inimitable manner in which the "good little bad girl" overcomes them makes this, beyond all doubt, the best comedy Bebe Daniels has yet produced.

June 5, 1921

Exhibitors everywhere will be delighted to learn that Thomas H. Ince has completed what will undoubtedly prove to be his greatest production when it is released on June fifth, next. Those who enjoyed the privilege of exhibiting "Lying Lips," the second Ince release through "A. P.," will probably be surprised when we state that "MOTHER O' MINE" is, in the opinion of those who have pre-viewed it, an even greater picture in every respect than this big special. The production combines every element that made "Lying Lips" so successful and in addition has a stronger and more gripping theme — mother love!

We urgently appeal to all discriminating and progressive exhibitors to make application to view "Mother O' Mine" at their nearest "A. P." exchange just as soon as prints are received by our branches. We want our many exhibitor-friends to share in the huge profits which we predict will result from the exhibition of the Ince super-special.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

April 25, 1921

Mr. Robert E. Sherwood,
Motion Picture Editor,
Life,
17 West 31st Street,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Sherwood:

Your letter opens up a most interesting problem; a big one, too.

I could fill, I believe, the pages of Life with my reply. My own life has lost several pages by virtue of this very stiff and many-sided problem of what constitutes an efficient review.

You are unfair in your criticism of our reviews.

The reviewers on MOTION PICTURE NEWS might do their work in Kamchatka so far as any contact at any time with the business end of this paper is concerned. Any of our reviewers past or present, any advertiser -- and I believe any exhibitor reader -- will tell you that the advertising carried, or the advertiser himself, doesn't influence MOTION PICTURE NEWS reviews one iota.

These reviews are 100% honest; checking them against our exhibitors' box office reports we find them over 90% correct. I give you facts.

But we welcome Life's reviews. I read them every week. They are intelligent, sincere and fair. They are backed by the highest reputation in the publishing field for dramatic criticism and independence. I'll say this: if Life spoke well of my picture I would -- as producer or exhibitor -- advertise its opinion in big black type.

In particular the industry appreciates your serious recognition of the photoplay.

That is the trouble with the daily papers.

There are only two newspapers in New York and one in Chicago whose picture reviews are worth a continental. Some are just incompetent; others are captious. And I prefer the sloppy review to the obvious effort to be smart.

It's the audience viewpoint that counts, not the reviewer's taste, temper and literary ambition. Is not this true; and don't you always face this danger?

Sincerely yours,

W. A. Johnston

WAJ:ED

President.

VOL. XXIII MAY 14, 1921 No. XXI

Fight—And No Quarter!

A HOUSTON, TEXAS, newspaper prints at length, omitting no details, the story of a picture which the local censors excluded altogether from the picture theatres of the city.

The picture, says the newspaper, is a powerful preachment of a moral that should be told. But that is not the point. We could give a thousand examples equally pertinent.

The point is that the law permits a story to be told in type and not in pictures.

And we cite this instance simply because it goes to the root of the matter and slaps us in the face with the bare and intently abhorrent fact of censorship.

The makers of newspapers, magazines, books, plays, posters, etc., are accepted by society as amenable to the law.

Under censorship the maker of motion pictures is rejected by the law, made a social pariah adjudged uncontrollable by the penal code of the Federal Government and the police powers of the community and state; he is deprived of what we style the inalienable right of citizenship, namely his right to defend himself before a jury of twelve of his peers.

That's censorship!

That is its vile indictment. That is the bare truth about it; and nothing more need be said.

Who in this industry wants to acknowledge this brand upon his forehead? Who will?

It is high time, it seems to me, to arise as American citizens, if as motion picture people we feel—for some reason—no such urge; if, as business men, we feel no shame over what is nothing more or less than a broad and continuous stigma of criminality.

Are we engaged in a business so obnoxious that the laws and courts of the United States are ineffectual against us with all their long established machinery for the protection of the public welfare?

Are we engaged in that sort of business?

But above all, are we that kind of American citizens?

Of course, we know that the thing is grotesquely ridiculous.

We know that censorship is being advocated by a handful of people everywhere who don't know what censorship is.

We know that the public doesn't know what censorship means, doesn't ask for censorship though this same public has arisen en masse and demands that the makers of motion pictures realize their huge responsibility or else be properly regulated.

We know that existing State censorship laws have never been truly tested even as to their constitutionality.

But that doesn't mitigate the bald truths—first that censorship is aimed at us everywhere; and secondly that censorship is something no man in this business can bear and yet consider himself a decent citizen of this country.

We've got to fight censorship—FIGHT it.

Not with bird-shot; but with high explosives.

We've got to uproot it, destroy it stem and branch.

There's no compromise; not with censorship.

But to do this we must get out of our shells; stop defending ourselves, stop forbearing, stop everything save the fixed principle that censorship is something no free man will bear.

We've got to fight and give no quarter.

And two ways are immediately open to us.

One is to attack—with the right preparation—the constitutionality of censorship statutes of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kansas and Maryland.

The other is to tell the public just what a monstrosity censorship is.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Announce Robertson-Cole Plans for Future

IN view of the various reports which have appeared in different motion picture magazines and newspapers in connection with the suspending of production at the Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., R. S. Cole, of the Robertson-Cole Company, to correct these erroneous reports, has issued the following announcement regarding the plans of his company for the future.

"It is quite true that production at the Studios was discontinued April 9th, in view of the fact that by day and night "shooting" they were able to complete in a very short period of time productions starring Pauline Frederick and Sessue Hayakawa, and Directors' Productions directed by William Christy Cabanne and L. J. Gasnier.

"With these productions their entire releasing schedule up to September 1st, the beginning of the fall season, has been completed, thus making it possible to curtail on productions, with the saving resultant therefrom, and to devote the following weeks in the completion of their plans for the productions to be released and offered to exhibitors for the season of 1921 and 1922.

"The Studios will resume producing between May 15th and June 1st, when Pauline Frederick, William Christy Cabanne, L. J. Gasnier and Henry King will commence their work on new productions. It will be impossible to resume with Sessue Hayakawa until about July 1st, owing to his very serious illness, from which he is now recovering.

"With an idea of better serving the exhibitors throughout the United States, various changes have been made in the personnel of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, both at the General Offices and throughout the various Branches.

"In addition to the stars and directors now under contract and option, Robertson-Cole Company are negotiating with two or three ingenues, with the expectation of gradually developing them into Stars with big box-office values, and will from time to time make further announcements as to their plan of producing for the coming year."

Walker to Take M.P.T.O. Message across Nation

Senator James J. Walker of New York, national counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was scheduled to address the exhibitors of Southern California and Arizona at a mammoth mass meeting held in Walker Auditorium in Los Angeles, Friday, May 6.

This meeting is the first of a series to be held during Senator Walker's trip through the country to start an intensive campaign to offset the present blue law agitation. The senator will also report to exhibitors everywhere the activities and accomplishments of the organization since the convention held in Cleveland last June, and lay plans for the preparation of a legislative campaign to be launched in Washington during the present session of Congress.

The officers and executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will meet in Washington D. C., May 17, at the Hotel Washington. At this meeting will be discussed the problems now confronting the exhibitors and full and complete plans made for the national convention in Minneapolis early in July.

Lasky Makes Announcement on Arrival in East

Jesse L. Lasky on his return to New York from the Coast this week announced that John S. Robertson, the director, and Josephine Lovett, continuity writer, will sail for London this week for the purpose of conferring with Sir James Barrie in the matter of filming his play, "Peter Pan." Mr. Lasky also announced that Wallace Reid will arrive in New York about May 16th to co-star with Elsie Ferguson in "Peter Ibbetson" under the direction of George Fitzmaurice. In speaking of Cecil DeMille's "The Affairs of Anatol," now being titled, Mr. Lasky stated that he considers this subject "the biggest thing we have ever done."

New York Incorporations Reach High Figures

Motion picture companies incorporating in New York state last week passed the million dollar mark in capitalization, the nineteen companies representing a total capitalization of $1,356,000, the individual companies ranging all the way from as low was $1,000 to as high as $600,000, the greater number, however, being between $25,000 and $100,000. Kohn Loses Suit Against National Film Corp.

According to court decision, there is no first-class or standard quality to a motion picture comedy. This ruling was given by Judge J. P. Woods of the Superior Court of Los Angeles, following the hearing of the damage suit of Marion Kohn versus The National Film Corporation of America for $112,000 damages for an alleged breach of contract.

Kohn made a contract with the National for the production of a series of comedies, and after several were produced he brought suit for the amount and set an attachment for the full amount of damages as asked. That was in July 1920. The contract set forth the pictures were to be "first class, standard, saleable comedies." In instructing the jury, Judge Woods stated the defendant had proved the comedies were saleable and that Kohn and his attorneys had failed to prove they were not first class or standard.

In commenting on the decision, an officer of the National stated they would now bring suit for damages for $100,000 against Kohn for attachment on their property finances in banks, which attachment, they claim, was injurious to their welfare for a period of several weeks.

Changes Among Goldwyn Branch Managers

Goldwyn announces three changes in the personnel of its branch exchange managers which have already gone into effect.

J. A. Koerpel, the efficient and enterprising manager of the Seattle branch exchange, has assumed charge of the Boston exchange, succeeding D. J. Horgan, resigned.

W. E. Banford, formerly manager of the Salt Lake City office, where he made an excellent record, has been placed in charge of the Seattle office, succeeding Frank Bernardo, acting manager.

C. Knickerbocker, formerly a member of the sales staff in the Goldwyn Chicago exchange, has been promoted to the management of the Salt Lake City branch.

Richrath to Be Secretary of F. B. Warren Corp.

Paul J. Richrath, who for five years has been associated in motion picture enterprises with F. B. Warren, has resigned as purchasing agent of Associated Producers, Inc., to become secretary of the new F. B. Warren Corporation. In his new post, Mr. Richrath will perform the duties of a purchasing agent as well as those of corporation secretary.

Mr. Richrath was purchasing agent for the Goldwyn organization when Mr. Warren was vice-president in charge of sales. When Mr. Warren left to become a vice-president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Richrath went along to take charge of that company's traffic detail.

Flag Must Be Displayed in Pennsylvania Theatres

Governor Sproul, of Pennsylvania, on April 30, attached his signature to the newly enacted bill that requires that the American flag must be displayed on all theatres and other places of public entertainment or gathering, except churches, during the period when such gatherings are being held.

Under the terms of this bill, which is now on the statute books of the state, no public meeting of any kind can beheld on the street corners or in a theatre unless the national colors are displayed.

The responsibility rests with the owners, lessees or managers, in the case of theatres.

The new law even goes so far as to specify that the flag to be displayed may be no smaller than 52 by 66 inches and the penalty for violation of the law is a fine of not more than $100.

Coast Showmen Fight for Standing Room Nights

Vigorous opposition by California exhibitors is being given to a proposed law introduced in the California legislature and which has already passed the lower house of that body which would prohibit theatres from selling admission unless seats are provided. This would mean that theatres would no longer be permitted to allow those who wish, stand to see a picture or even stand for a time waiting for a seat.

Representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Northern California division, the Allied Amusement Industries of Northern California and other interests are endeavoring to press their claim of the injustice of such a measure before the legislators at the state capitol in Sacramento. All proposed censorship measures have been definitely killed.

Nixon-Nirdlinger Refit Milford, Del., Theatre

Announcement is made from the offices of the Nixon Nirdlinger Circuit of the improvement and alteration of their new Nixon Palace theatre, Milford, Del. The house will be elaborately refitted with ornate decorations, a Kimball organ, and will hereafter be known as the Nixon theatre, operated in conjunction with Nixon's Opera house, Dover, Del., and the other theatres of the Nixon Nirdlinger Circuit.

"Birth of a Nation" to Run Two Weeks at Capitol

For the second time in the history of the Capitol Theatre, N. Y., popular demand has compelled S. L. Rothafel to hold the current presentation over for another week's run. In this instance it is Griffith's American classic "The Birth of a Nation" which was first introduced to the public six years ago.

A Deserved Tribute

PRISCILLA DEAN deserves much more than passing credit for her fine dramatic work in "Reputation." It is not too much to say that in point of emotional effect her work in this picture has not been exceeded by that of any other screen actress. A new type of story has evidently brought forth in her a new and wide scope of talent. In "Reputation" a powerful screen story has been developed with skill and sureness of direction. The casting is excellent and there are some fine bits of character work, and some telling effects. "Reputation," with its wide audience appeal, should prove one of the strongest pictures of the season.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

New Orleans Shows Latin-America Trade Growth

Reports from New Orleans indicate that that city is rapidly building up a large export trade with Central and South America. The Fox Exchange recently received an order from the China-Japan-American Trading Co., of Nicaragua for forty-eight reels a month, and the local branch of the Williamson Co. is making a number of Central American scenic films, and have camera men in Yucatan and Honduras. They report a big export business in small features and comedies made over with Spanish titles.

This company in March finished and shipped 222,000 feet of short subjects, 104,000 of which went to Argentine, and the balance to Mexico and Central America.

No. Carolina Raises Hoover Fund $2,692 More

In North Carolina, the motion picture theatres raised $3,709.24 for the Hoover Fund. In the original statement of returns from various states, the theatres of North Carolina were credited with $1,016.50. The additional amount of $2,692.74 has been reported to Charles C. Pettijohn, acting chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Hoover Relief Campaign. The report came from H. B. Varner, of the Lyric theatre, Lexington, N. C., who was regional chairman for North Carolina in the recent Hoover drive.

The motion picture industry's contribution to the Hoover Fund has now passed the $2,700,000 mark. Mr. Pettijohn says there is reason to believe that it will exceed $2,800,000 before all the belated returns have been received.

Appreciation of Sympathy

Mrs. D. J. Grauman, widow of the late theatrical magnate, and her son, Sid Grauman, wish to express through this publication their appreciation for the beautiful floral tributes, and the hundreds of letters and telegrams which they received during their recent bereavement.

Samuel Goldwyn Against Import Restrictions

Returning from a three months' tour of England, France, Germany and Italy, Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, declares there is no need to check the importation of motion picture productions.

"Producers of other nations have made pictures for an appeal only on their own soil," he stated, "but the American industry has become prosperous because it made pictures for the world. Restrict America's pictures to our own country and you put us in the same isolated position as those countries which have not yet learned to make productions of universal interest."

"There is no sound argument, economic, artistic or otherwise which favors a restrictive movement against films made abroad. We have nothing to fear from Europe in the matter of competition. We have already seen the cream of the German product in American theatres. The average standard of European pictures is far below ours. And even if Europe is to produce great photoplays, America wants to see them and to benefit by them. No matter what countries in Europe exercise a restriction, we should keep our barriers down. We do not restrict books, plays, operas or paintings from Europe, and there is less reason for us to restrict motion pictures. Perhaps on motion pictures depends a greater world understanding.

"As for Germany, it is no exaggeration to say that less than two per cent of the German pictures will be fit for presentation here. Italy is the leading producer in Europe."

Saxe Brothers Plan New Milwaukee Theatre

Another new down town Saxe house will soon be erected in Milwaukee, according to an announcement made by the Saxe Brothers this week. They contemplate the erection of a 2,000-seat house and an arcade building 150 by 200 feet at the corner of Sixth street and Grand Avenue. When completed this will give Saxe Brothers six down town Milwaukee theatres and fourteen theatres in Milwaukee and the state. It is expected that the new house will be completed within the year.

CLARA SMITH HAMON has arrived in Los Angeles and announces her determination to make a picture of her sensational career in the face of the opposition of the picture industry.

She will probably change her mind. The public doesn't want such a picture and the public through its police powers alone, has ample means of protection whenever or however such a picture may attempt a showing.

So far as the picture industry is concerned, no exchange and no theatre will lend itself to the exhibition of the proposed picture, unless such an exchange and such a theatre is willing for the sake of a single sensational picture, to make itself a renegade in the eyes of the industry at large and alienate itself from any co-operative relations with the industry at large.

Censorship Has Been Defeated in Thirty-One States

New York Bill Still Pending; Anti-Blue Law Victory in Wisconsin

A SURVEY of legislative activities during the season now coming to a close discloses the fact that censorship legislation has been defeated in thirty-one states. The states most recently repudiating legalized censorship are Rhode Island, Michigan, Wisconsin and California. In Ohio, a measure further controlling the exhibition of pictures was defeated. Other states which have rejected proposed censorship measures during the closing legislative season are: Colorado, Delaware, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington and Wyoming. Censorship was also defeated in the District of Columbia.

In New York the Lusk-Clayton measure is still awaiting action by Governor Nathan Miller. Judge Almet F. Jenks has been busy during the past week preparing a brief attacking the constitutionality of this measure, which was recently passed by the New York legislature. Judge Jenks' brief was to be filed with the Governor on Wednesday of this week. An alternative proposal has been submitted to Governor Miller by the leading producing and distributing companies which proposes his appointment of a commission for the purpose of investigating the entire censorship situation before the adoption of censorial regulation by the state.

In Ohio, a measure known as the McCoy bill sought to prohibit the showing of all pictures depicting crime in any of its phases. This legislation, had it become a law, would have paralyzed the picture industry in the state.

In Wisconsin, the senate committee on public welfare recommended unanimously the proposed censorship measure, known as the Bennett bill, be indefinitely postponed. At the senate hearing held last week a strong opposition developed against the measure which had but meagre support. Robert Hess, of the Milwaukee Film Exchange, read a letter from District Attorney Zabel, of Milwaukee.

"If it be said," wrote Zabel, "movies contribute to crime and create criminals, then I desire to say that as district attorney of the most densely populated county in Wisconsin, that I have never had brought to my attention a single criminal case in the vast number of cases I have prosecuted each year, where the committing of the crime or the beginning of a criminal career of the offender was due to motion pictures.

"I have never yet had brought to my attention in this county a single moving picture which was in the least suggestive or immoral.

"I do not believe there is a single member of the legislature who would be willing to permit some reformer at Pumpkin Center to sit as a censor and regulate the amusement which the rest of the state is to enjoy."

Others who appeared against the bill at Madison are: Dr. Samuel Atkinson, National Association of Motion Picture Interests; Robert Hess, Milwaukee Film Exchange; M. J. Quigley, New York, publisher of the Exhibitors' Herald; Joseph Harris, Milwaukee, an operator; and Henry Ohl, Jr., State Federation of Labor.

The action of the senate committee on public welfare in recommending the bill for indefinite postponement has resulted in its death as far as the present legislature is concerned.

The Wisconsin Assembly has also voted to indefinitely postpone action on a bill (243A) to prohibit the showing of any picture or theatrical act which, "shall injuriously reflect upon the proper and rightful progress, status, attainment, or endeavor of any race or class of citizens, calculated to result in arousing the prejudice in or feeling of one race or class of citizens against any other race or class of citizens."

Two other bills affecting motion picture theatres have been introduced in the Wisconsin Assembly. One would prohibit the price of a first balcony seat to be greater than 75 per cent. of the price charged for a main-floor seat; nor the price of a second balcony seat to be greater than 62½ per cent of the price charged for a main-floor seat; nor the price of a third balcony seat to be greater than 50 per cent. of the price charged for a main-floor seat. The other measure introduced, known as the Higgin's bill, provides that no theatre shall sell tickets unless a seat is available at that time.

At the same time that the anti-censorship forces were busy at Madison, Wis., opposing any adoption of state censorship, blue-law advocates were sustaining a striking defeat in the case of B. C. Brown, proprietor of a motion picture theatre at Viroqua, Wis., who was arrested on a charge of violating the old state blue law by keeping his theatre open on Sunday. The jury before whom Mr. Brown was tried brought in a verdict of not guilty.

The victory scored by Manager Brown, of Viroqua, was probably the greatest ever won in Wisconsin by the motion picture men. Mr. Brown was arrested on a complaint based on a petition circulated by the W. C. T. U. and it was signed by about two hundred persons. This petition stated that the movie theatre was not a necessity and therefore was operated on Sunday in violation of an old law dated back in the 60's, which seeks to regulate the activities of people and business on Sundays, and which states what enterprises may or may not operate on Sundays.

The defense attorneys argued that Brown in running his theatre on Sunday was merely doing so in the pursuit of liberty and happiness, and that the majority of the people really desired this theatre open on Sunday. The verdict of the jury in this case is hailed by all the liberals as demonstrating conclusively that the people as a whole do not want the blue laws enforced in Wisconsin.

In Michigan, following a bitter fight, the senate refused to take the bill from committee, thus putting a quietus upon the censorship agitators there for at least another year.

Victory has crowned the banners of the motion picture industry in Pennsylvania in the fight against all the burdensome tax measures proposed in the 1921 session of the legislature.

That body adjourned on Thursday, April 28, without having enacted a single one of these menacing tax bills, which, had they all been enacted, would have squeezed all the profit out of the picture business in the Keystone state.

As the legislature cannot meet again for two years, unless in special session, the industry is freed from the handicap of throttling taxation that had threatened it since the lawmakers first assembled last January.

Nat'l Ass'n Thanked for Aid in Censor Fight

F. H. ELLIOTT, secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has received the following letter from the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association, in which the National Association is thanked for its aid in the recent censorship fight:

"Dear Mr. Elliott:

"As president of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association permit me to express to your organization the grateful appreciation for the co-operation in our fight against censorship of motion pictures in Wisconsin.

"You of course have already been advised of the result, the Committee of State Affairs unanimously recommending an indefinite postponement on the bill.

"Mr. Atkinson who spoke in behalf of your organization made a splendid address and an effective one.

"Let me again express our gratefulness for your co-operation.

"Sincerely yours,

"Wisconsin Exhibitors Association
(Signed) Joseph G. Rhode, president.

The two most forceful factors that brought about this happy ending to the fears of Pennsylvania picture interests, were, first, the persistent efforts of the representatives of the industry, in large measure through the instrumentality of the newly formed state branch of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in opposing the objectionable bills at committee hearing and in other ways at the capital; and secondly, the factional fight that sprung up within the Republican party in the closing hours of the legislature. This fight resulted in the ousting of Robert Spangler as Speaker of the House, and the election in his stead of Samuel Whitaker, as speaker. This caused such a congestion of bills on the calendars toward the close of the session that, at the very wind-up it was possible, within the allotted time, to put through only those bills that were of most political importance to the victorious administration faction.

Fortunately for the motion picture industry the bills it opposed were practically all among those that were not reached in time to be reported out on the floor of the legislature, and consequently they died in various committees of the House and Senate.

In fact the only bills relating to the motion picture industry that were enacted were the McConnell bill, more than doubling the annual payroll of the State Board of Censors and its employes; the general appropriation bill with its clause providing $174,520 to pay the salaries and operating expenses of the censorship board for the next two years, as compared with $133,000 in the last two; and the bill which requires all theatres to display the American flag at all times during performances.

Great Increase in Imports Statistics Show

THAT the American motion picture producer is meeting with real opposition by foreign competition is indicated by an analysis of the imports and exports that has just been made by the Washington Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The figures were obtained from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

For eight months ending February of this year, the total footage of positive film imported was 3,137,422. During the same period in 1920, the amount was 1,649,085. From these figures it shows that the imports were nearly doubled during the past eight months. The amount of negative film imported has also been more than doubled during the same period. For eight months ending February, 1921, the United States imported 1,372,842 feet, while in the same period there was imported 665,669 feet.

Our exports during the same period shows a decrease this year over last. We exported during eight months ending February, 1921, a total of 108,825,976 feet of positive film, while during the same period in 1920 we exported 112,591,288.

The United Kingdom is still our best customer, with Canada second, Australia third, and France fourth.

Kansas Governor Sees Eventually Death of All Official Censorship

HENRY J. ALLEN, governor of Kansas, is another of the country's leaders who is an ardent film fan. Governor Allen also believes that the public is more demonstrating its ability to be its own censor. "There probably will be," said the Governor, "more official censorship before there is less, but ultimately the people at large will be recognized as competent to decide what they shall and shall not see. Then all the picture men will give their patrons what they want, which is clean and wholesome, but entertaining films. The trend to-day is in that direction undeniably and it will continue."

Governor Allen, however, does not believe that the time has come when censorship should be abolished utterly, but he is willing to admit that censors often make mistakes. He believes that official boards often fall into the errors of believing that every picture should be educational.

Speaking of adopting names of sub-titles which work an injustice to the picture, the Governor said that producers are gradually learning that the public is neither illiterate nor vicious, and that, far from proving of box-office value, suggestive misnomers actually keep people away from the theatres.

The Governor's favorite star is Charles Ray. He believes that this star's productions are invariably entertaining and artistic and that he is at once a real man and a genius.

Dr. Crafts Willing to Co-operate with Industry

Further communication between Benjamin B. Hampton and Rev. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts has arisen following the recent sermon delivered by Dr. Crafts at the Immanuel Presbyterian Church in Los Angeles.

Mr. Hampton stated that there was some misunderstanding following the publication of the sermon in the press. He again urged that the producers and Dr. Crafts' organization, The International Reform Bureau, co-operate, and suggested that the first step in this direction would be the preparation of a memorandum in which Dr. Crafts' position would be stated clearly.

Dr. Crafts in his answer stated that he wished to co-operate with the industry and believed that the thirteen standards agreed upon by the National Association were sincerely adopted. The problem, he said, was to impose these standards upon all producers. Dr. Crafts explained that he published his Federal Commission plan, not as something to be introduced in Congress, but merely for the consideration of the public, reformers and producers.

He also stated that he favored censorship only as a little better than nothing until some other more efficient method of improving the motion pictures can be put into operation.

Suitable Studio Gowns Offered at Thrift Sale

At Everybody's Thrift Shop, 114 East 59th Street there is being offered for sale slightly used clothing, and household articles of all sorts. Many gowns suitable for studio use are being offered.

The profits are devoted entirely to welfare work.

Brilliant Publicity Chief of Ass'd Producers

Al Lichtman, general manager of Associated Producers, Inc., announces that he has appointed Arthur M. Brilliant to be director of publicity and exploitation for that company.

Propose Change in Kansas City Censor Ordinance

An amendment to the Kansas City censorship ordinance, drawn by motion picture producers, exhibitors and a joint committee of citizens, was introduced in the upper house of the city council last Tuesday night. It was referred to a committee.

The amendment provides that any twenty or more resident adults of Kansas City who have witnessed the entire picture or particular serial episode, which has been deemed objectionable, may appeal from any action of the city censor in passing the picture, or parts thereof, by filing a written application for an appeal.

The amendment is the outcome of a previous amendment which motion picture exhibitors recently were successful in getting past both houses of the council, but which was vetoed by Mayor Cowgill when about 20,000 club women brought their political influence to bear upon the matter.

Restrict German Imports Says Jos. M. Schenck

Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge and the Constance Talmadge Film Companies, and producer of many feature and special productions, takes a very firm stand on the question of the importation of German films into America, and allies himself with those who believe in making every effort to abolish the German made picture. He says:

"I have three reasons for my decided prejudice against German pictures. First of all, an influx of such films in the United States would throw thousands of our own picture players, directors, technical experts, property men, stenographers, bookkeepers, secretaries, and executives connected with film companies out of work, because it would be absolutely impossible for the American producers to compete with the German producers.

"My second reason for not favoring the German picture is because of the present restriction on the importation of American made pictures into Germany."

Parent Teachers Ass'n Favors Cooperation

National Convention Declares Against Legalized Censorship; Brady Addresses Body

THE National Congress of Mothers and Parent Teachers' Association at the final session of their annual meeting, held in Washington, D. C., unanimously adopted a resolution advocating closer cooperation between their organization and the producers and exhibitors of motion pictures. This, in their opinion, rather than state censorship, is the solution of the means to bring about a better class of motion pictures. This action was the result of the activity of the delegates from Ohio and Pennsylvania who declared that legalized censorship in those states has been a complete failure and that the results could only be obtained by close cooperation between the organization and the picture industry.

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, addressed the Congress. Mr. Brady quoted President Harding's view of the influences of motion pictures:

"I do not in any way minimize my high regard for the great art involved in the splendid work of the silent drama or the musical stage, but the coming of the silent drama has revealed to us an agency for education which no human being could reasonably conceive a quarter of a century ago. We have no single avenue for the dissemination of information equal to that of the motion picture. I do not know that anyone now has an approximate measure of the possibilities which may come. Pictures are very convincing things. I confess that sometimes the camera fools us more or less, but, as a general proposition, it is a very dependable agency of the truth, and it has the facility for conveying essential educational truths to the remotest parts of the world.

"Nothing is more remarkable than the enlarged enjoyment of the drama through picture distribution. It is only a few years ago that the rural community saw very little of the drama, and much of what it saw was not to be taken as a very creditable example of the best in dramatic art."—President-elect Harding, speaking at Marion on August 24, 1920.

Mr. Brady declared that the motion picture was the greatest single force for good in the country today and that it was fast supplanting the printed word. He gave a history of the industry and of the great things that it was accomplishing.

"More than seven thousand schools and colleges to-day are teaching their scholars by the aid of the motion picture machine and I predict that within five years that there will be a motion picture projection machine in every school room in this country," he said, "The text book will continue but it will fast be supplanted by the influence of the motion picture. More than five thousand churchs to-day have realized the tremendous power of the motion picture and have installed projection machines in their churches."

Mr. Brady criticized the professional reformers during the past year and declared that they were "profiteers in morality." He declared that the motion picture industry welcomed the cooperation of the Congress of Mothers and Parent Teachers' Association because, he declared, that the whole future of the industry rested with the mothers of the country. He told of the plan of the producers to eliminate the objectionable pictures from the screen and of the thirteen points that had been agreed upon by the producers which were now being carried out. Mr. Brady was questioned at some length by speakers from all sections of the country.

Mr. James Maddox of Columbus, Ohio, President of the Ohio Exhibitors' League was the next speaker. Besides being an exhibitor, Mr. Maddox was a representative of the Parent Teachers' Association from that state. Mr. Maddox proposed that the Congress appoint a committee to cooperate with the exhibitors and producers and that this committee meet at an early date in New York to formulate their plan of cooperation. He declared that a state and county committee should be appointed and they in turn should report to the national committee.

Following the three committee meetings at which Mr. Brady spoke, resolutions were unanimously adopted condemning politically appointed censor boards and recommended the adoption of the new set of standards proposed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The only sentiment for legalized censorship came from a small group of women from states which have had no experiences with censorship boards.

Meeting of Universal Managers in Chicago

President Laemmle to Formulate Fall Policy After Conferring with Branch Chiefs

THE biggest gathering of Universal officials held in many months will take place Sunday and Monday, May 7 and 8, at the Chicago offices of the Universal Film Exchanges, when Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, will confer with his district and branch chiefs from all over the country regarding Universal 1921 Fall policy.

Mr. Laemmle, who now is in New York, will be accompanied to Chicago by Harry M. Berman, General Manager of Exchanges for Universal; P. D. Cochrane, Exploitation Director, and other officials. Among the high Universal sales officials who will await him in Chicago are Herman Stern, district manager for Canada; E. J. Smith, district manager for the Atlantic Division; Art Schmidt, district manager for the middle West, and other district managers.

Many innovations in Universal release schedules are promised for next season as a result of the forthcoming conference. It is reported that Universal plans radical changes in the handling of its short subjects, and that an adjustment in its feature and super-production releases is contemplated. Mr. Laemmle, it is understood, intends to question his sales chiefs thoroughly on these changes before actually making any sudden shift in Universal's present release methods.

The main attraction of the convention will be devoted to Universal's promised Jewel productions. There are now four super-productions under way at Universal City, at least two of which will be ready for early fall release. They are "Foolish Wives," the von Stroheim spectacle of Monte Carlo, which is in its last month of actual production work, and "Fanny Herself," the new Tod Browning Production, being filmed from Edna Ferber's story of that name. Two Universal-Jewels are just being put into production. One is Priscilla Dean's new special, "Conflict," adapted from Clarence Buddington Kelland's novel of that name, and the other is Harry Carey's first Universal-Jewel production, yet unnamed. The release date of "Conflict" and the Carey picture are said to be problematical at this time, since actual production on them may last well into the fall.

Mr. Cochrane, Universal's exploitation expert, will spend considerable time during the Chicago convention, furthering the exploitation of Universal's latest Universal-Jewel release, "Reputation," starring Priscilla Dean.

He will outline plans to the assembled exchange managers by which they are to exploit the picture in their territories and tie-up with individual exhibitors in the proper presentation of the Dean special.

Mr. Laemmle recently returned from Universal City, where he personally supervised the production work at the West Coast studios for several months. He will discuss with his sales managers the merits of the Universal pictures he has seen in the making, and will solicit their advice as to the needs of exhibitors who favor Universal pictures.

HARRY REICHENBACH has landed again—this time by re-making the map of New York so that the official city signs read "43rd Street Dream Street." Dream Street trolley cars and a flag-bedecked street were other features of the exploitation. Matinee receipts to the Starving China Fund aided in greasing the wheels.

Mailing List an Asset

How Montana Exhibitor Booms Light Business by Use of a Mailing List

WHEN endeavoring to work out methods which will bring the days of the week, which are ordinarily poor from a business standpoint, the earlier days of the week particularly, up to the standard more nearly equal to the Saturday and Sunday business, many exhibitors overlook the fact that they only need a few stunts which will work regularly. After they have several such exploitation stunts worked out, it is a comparatively simple matter to pull one stunt each week, and Monday and Tuesday crowds are assured. But, of course, it is no cinch to hit upon exploitation stunts which are capable of being worked with assured success at regular intervals.

Albert Nadeau, manager of the Bluebird theatre in Anaconda, Montana, Associated First National sub-franchise holder, believes that a mailing list is one of the most potent means of getting extra business on light days, when used in the right way. He has found that his mailing list is a sure fire stuff once every two or three weeks to build up his early week audiences. After some experiences with them, and after discussing the mailing list as a business builder with many theatre managers (a great portion of whom declared it was a failure), he delved into the possibilities of the use of mailing cards in an effort to discover what was wrong when the mailing list would not work and applied his discoveries to getting up and using such a list at the Bluebird.

One source often used to obtain a mailing list in a small town is the telephone directory. Another is to get a list of the memberships of various local lodges and fraternal orders. Nadeau knew of these and realized the advantage of the wide scope of both, but decided there was too great a waste in broadcasting cards and letters to poker hounds, rummy experts, bridge fiends, three-cushion billiard players, diddle and cootie crawl stars and others who have as much interest in the movies as they have in whether Ibsen is appreciated by the King of Hades.

In order to get a list of residents who attended the theatre, he stationed a girl at the door, who asked patrons for their names and addresses. It took the girl six weeks to get a one thousand two hundred list of names, but every one of those one thousand two hundred names represents a family of movie fans who are really interested in knowing what is going to be shown at the Bluebird, and it eliminates a great deal of the "waste circulation" of the average mailing list. The list is small but the theatre is also small and the town itself has a population of but seven thousand six hundred.

After getting the names he had addressographed stencils made in order to facilitate the sending out of cards and letters.

After that he says it was a matter of "shooting square" with his patrons. It took nearly three months to work up a mailing list audience.

The first time the list was circularized the response was not noticeable in the Monday and Tuesday audiences. The second time was but little better. The third time its effect became noticeable and after that each time it was used added materially to the attendance until now all that is necessary to assure him excellent audiences for the first two days of the week is a card, telling his patrons that a film which he thinks they will like will be shown at the Bluebird on those nights.

Nadeau attributes the success of his use of the mailing list to three things.

First, he does not overwork it.

Once every two or three weeks and sometimes at longer intervals is all that he uses it. It avoids the "daily card from the movie" becoming so stereotyped that it will be thrown into the waste basket without being read.

Second, he "shoots square" with the patrons on his mailing list (and with all other patrons for that matter), and has never tried to make a "killing" on a picture that was not of excellent quality.

He sees every picture on which he uses the mailing list before sending out the cards and never sends them out on an inferior play. The people have come to recognize that they can trust him and believe that when he recommends a play that it will be well worth seeing and consequently they come.

"Sellingout" the mailing list on one inferior picture, he declares, would ruin its value. Now when a card comes from Bluebird, his patrons read it because they are sure the show will be good, but if he were to use it on a picture which was not up to standard, those who saw the film would be mighty doubtful of his recommendations ever after.

Third, he selects pictures on which he uses a mailing list for their general appeal.

Naturally, in a mailing list of this sort, it is impossible to select the particular star or kind of play certain patrons are interested in, whether they would rather see Flossie Florence, the Swaybacked Swede, or Cecile Scissorbill or which one likes to see a custard pie decorating the countenance of a fat man, Wild Bill holding up Bill Cody's stage with seventeen miles of cayuse chases following, or whether they prefer Shapely Susie's legs.

So he picks pictures which will have some appeal to the various patrons who like all these variations. It must be one with a strong plot, good acting, considerable comedy and a few thrills. While this just about describes the "ideal" film there are quite a number, Nadeau finds, which qualify for the classification. "Class" pictures using the adjective "class" in the sense that they appeal to one element only, he uses for midweek stuff, for the 'dyed-in-the-wool' fans who follow the fortunes and the pictures of some actors, such as Charles Ray and Constance Talmadge, who with good advertising are always sure to pull the crowds during the middle of the week.

Marshall Neilan's "Go and Get It" was one of the best for this general appeal and incidently one of those which helped in building up the mailing list business. The card was not arranged as well as it might have been but it pulled the crowds, they went away satisfied and when they got the next card, read it and came to see the show.

Nadeau's card had across the top in a twenty-four point DeVinne caps type in two lines: "The City Editor said to the Young Reporter," below this in ten point light face, ulc., "Three nights ago Dr. Ord, the famous surgeon, was found dead in his laboratory with his back broken and not a mark on his body. The next night night the District Attorney suffered a similar fate. Last night the same thing happened to one of the most prominent judges in the country. The city is panic-stricken. Thousands of people are fleeing. We must have that story 'Go and Get It.'" Then in twelve point blackface, lowercase "Marshall Neilan's" below this in ten point light again "Wonder Story of Newspaper Life" and "Go and Get It" in twenty-four point DeVinne capitals; "Opens tonight for two days only (Friday and Saturday")) in ten point light face and "Bluebird" in thirty-six point DeVinne capitals at the bottom.

The card was not flashy or striking, but it got the business—which is all that can be asked of any exploitation stunt. The film satisfied them and of course they came back when he next sent out a card.

This is in keeping with Nadeau's avowed purpose of catering to "constructive business." "Trust 'em so well this time they will come back next time," is his method. He has a reputation among the film salesmen of being the keenest buyer for a small theatre in the Northwest, but when he does occasionally pick a lemon he "pipes down on the advertising, takes his loss and takes a little more care next time he buys a film.

A card which followed was far better. He had a girl address all the cards and then write a little note just the size of a postcard.

"Dear Friend: Just a word to give you a friendly tip. I was in Spokane last week and saw a picture that made me hold my breath and that thrilled me all over. I'd hate for you to miss it. The picture is called 'Rider's of the Dawn.' It's taken from the Zane Grey story The Desert of Wheat and is splendid. I'm told this play is to be shown at the Bluebird theatre today and tomorrow. I know you enjoy a thrill so see it." It was signed with the initials M. P. F.

He had a photoengraver make a plate from this note and asked the printer to match with the ink used in printing as nearly as possible the ink used in writing the addresses.

The printer did an excellent job and it was difficult to determine whether the card was printed or really written. As a matter of fact, Nadeau had to settle several bets as to whether the card was written with a pen or printed. But it got over big.

With this method of handling his mailing list he has built up this class of business to such an extent that his Mondays and Tuesdays every two or three weeks are assured by one stunt, and by the use of others he keeps the early days of the in-between weeks up to a comparatively good standard.

Coast Players Merge with Actors' Equity

Meet in Los Angeles to Celebrate Amalgamation Coast Membership of 1,800

PLAYERS of the West Coast film colony auspiciously celebrated the merger of all the principal actors' associations with the Actors' Equity Association of New York at a meeting held in the ballroom of the Ambassador Hotel on April 23, Shakespeare's birthday anniversary.

For several months plans for the formation of the three associations and a merger with Equity have been under way, and the movement became successful when, by a vote of the members of the three different bodies recently, a joint meeting was held and resolutions adopting the merger were unanimously carried. Officers for the conduct of affairs of the West Coast unit of the Actors' Equity were selected to serve from May of this year until May, 1922. The merger becomes effective May 1.

The officers for the year are Dewitt Jennings, chairman; E. C. Joy, business manager and secretary, and the members of the Advisory Board are W. H. Crane, Richard Bennett and William Courtleigh. The organization also has a board of eleven directors.

The organizations merged were the Actors' Association, Photoplayers Equity Association and the Screen Players Association, which gives the West Coast unit of the Equity a membership of about eighteen hundred.

Frazier Shaw is acting as West Coast field representative of the Equity. At the invitation of the West Coast unit Secretary Frank Gilmore of the Equity Association of New York came to Los Angeles and was the principal speaker at the Ambassador Hotel meeting. Chairman Dewitt Jennings called the meeting of about fifteen hundred to order and after briefly stating that the purpose of the meeting was for all of the film colony, including writers, cameramen, directors, and producers to learn the purpose of the Actors' Equity, he introduced William Courtleigh as chairman of the meeting. Mr. Courtleigh in turn introduced Frank Gilmore, W. H. Crane, Bert Lytell, Fred Niblo, Lawrence Grant, Lillian Gilbert Parker, Samuel Merwin, Frank Keenan, Charlie Murray, and other speakers.

The address by Gilmore briefly summed up the work of organizing the Equity and its growth to a membership of 15,000, the activities of the association with respect to anything detrimental to the film industry, the organization's attempts to prevent the passage of censorship in New York, and he was most complimentary to the players of the West Coast Film Colony for the aid given the association in the past and several times referred to the association as being "One For All and All For One."

"Most of our members of the West Coast are engaged in work for the screen and a danger confronts them today of far more importance to them than censorship or Blue Laws," Mr. Gilmore said. "Over in Europe the wage scale is much lower in all lines than in America, and I am told they can make films in interior Europe for about one-fifth the cost of the American producer because of the low wage scale. American distributors have been to Germany and purchased films and they are now being shown to the American people. The distributors will reap a great harvest on the pictures that have been brought here, and so inviting is the field for big money-making that American distributors, we are given to understand, have contracted for many more films to be brought to America from our former enemies' lands. The bringing of these films will create another condition of overproduction and the actors of America will suffer unless some step is taken by the American Government to prevent free entry of these films in this country. I am glad to say the Equity Association officers are doing everything possible to protect the American actors' conditions and we now have in Washington men who are working on laws that will protect the American screen artist, if passed."

Mr. Gilmore remained in Los Angeles until Wednesday when he left for Washington and the East, after meeting all of the officers and many of the members of the newly formed West Coast unit of the Equity.

Dutch Film Magnate in This Country

Louis C. Barnstyn, president and managing director of the Wederlandshe Bioscoop Trust of Holland, commonly referred to as the Dutch Film Trust, has arrived in this country for a brief visit. Mr. Barnstyn was accompanied from Holland by his brother, J. C. Barnstyn, of the British and Continental Trading Co., at whose offices he will make his New York headquarters during his short stay in this country.

Mr. Louis Barnstyn's journey to this country is primarily to acquire additional product for the Nederlandshe Bioscoop Trust for physical distribution throughout Holland. He will also devote a good portion of his time here to the study of American methods of photoplay presentation.

A chain of fifty theatres' modernly constructed and equipped, to be erected at vantage points throughout the length and breadth of Holland, and to be completed and ready for operation by 1922 is one of the gigantic projects of the Dutch Film Trust. The present theatres in the chain of playhouses owned and operated by the Nederlandshe Bioscoop Trust amount to fifteen; and Mr. Barnstyn states that this number will be enlarged to fifty by the latter part of 1922.

Censor Bill Introduced in Florida Legislature

A bill for the regulation and censorship of motion pictures in the State of Florida, has just been introduced in the House of representatives at Tallahassee, Florida.

Upon word of the bill being introduced, C. D. Cooley, president of the Exhibitors League of Florida, at once got busy with wires to exhibitors all over the State, and they will fight the measure to the best of their ability.

Carr and Schad of Reading Hold Annual Dinner

The annual dinner and entertainment given by the directors of the Carr and Shad theatre-circuit of Reading, Pa., to their employees was held last week in the Reading Odd Fellows' Hall. More than 125 covers were placed for the occasion, and an elaborate entertainment program added to the zest of the banquet. H. J. Schad, president of the organization, was the toast-master. John H. Cook and Paul E. Glass were in charge of the banquet and entertainment details. During the dinner the Dixie Serenaders, with Elmer Dusenberry leading, furnished quartet numbers. A number of surprise acts by members of the Carr and Schad organization were staged after the banquet, including a double quartet comprising Messrs. Stimel, Hendricks, Haines, Heinly, Cook, Glase, Clay and Henke.

"Cincy" Operators Renew

Following a series of conferences between members of the Greater Cincinnati Exhibitors' League and the Moving Picture Operators' Union, an agreement was reached whereby the operators continued in effect the wage contracts which expired May 1. The operators' decision was the result of the action of high union officials in advising that the agreements be renewed without the 10 per cent increase which had been demanded. It was understood present agreements will continue in effect until September 1, and that the union will sign up for that period without increases in pay.

I. W. McMahen, president of the Greater Cincinnati Exhibitors' League, stated that about twenty exhibitors, controlling most of the houses in Cincinnati and neighboring cities, are affected by the agreement.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Max Goldstine, who will offer a spring and summer season of motion pictures at Orchestra Hall, starting with "Passion" on May 9th, plans to make the music setting for these pictures notable. He has engaged Walter Blaufus to take charge of the music and the celebrated violinist, George Bass, will be first violin in the orchestra of symphony soloists. Negotiations are pending with a famous organist to take charge of the organ during the picture season at Orchestra Hall.

Neal Hart, popular star of Pinnacle Productions' Western features, was in Chicago last week for several days and from here went to Indianapolis to attend a meeting of the officers and stockholders of Pinnacle Productions. He reports that he regards "Black Sheep" as the best picture of his career and states that the plans of Director Hurst assure that the forthcoming Pinnacle releases will be splendid pictures. Mr. Hart is returning to the coast at once to resume production.

Charlie H. Christie, en route back to the coast, paid Watterson R. Rothacker a visit at the Chicago Rothacker Laboratories. He told of big plans he and his brother Al E. Christie have for future Christie Comedies. While at the Rothacker plant he viewed tests which were made of several of the girls in the Chicago Journal's beauty contest by which some Chicago girl will get a job in Christie Comedies. He waxed enthusiastic over the several examples of the Windy City pulchritude. To Mr. Rothacker, who will be one of the contest judges, he outlined his idea of the type of girl who would make the ideal Christie comedienne.

The big new moving picture house which is to be erected on Lincoln, near Belmont avenue, is to be a Lubliner & Trinz theatre. This is the theatre project that was conceived and the ground bought by Emil Stern, general manager of Lubliner & Trinz, and the entire leasehold and ground has just been purchased by Lubliner & Trinz from Mr. Stern at what is reported to be a handsome advance.

Douglas D. Rothacker has returned from a tour of Southern Illinois and Missouri, where he was working on an industrial. Edward O. Blackburn, director of Rothacker industrial pictures, is in New York City this week. Ricardo Bidelo, representative of the Argentine Railroad, was at Rothacker's Chicago laboratories editing a film portraying the industries and resources of this South American country, which he will exhibit at American colleges.

Sidney J. Goldman, who recently resigned as Chicago manager for Associated Producers, Incorporated, has been elected a vice-president of the F. B. Warren Corporation which has been organized to enter the national distributing field. Mr. Goldman will be in charge of the central section of the United States, where he is widely and favorably known, for the new company. Before taking up his new duties he will spend a month in California.

The Interstate Film Service, which has been located at 63 E. Adams street, has moved into its new office located at 730 S. Wabash avenue, where they will have improved facilities for handling their business.

Exhibitors Poster Service Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, have taken over the Southern Ohio territory for the distribution of Synchronized Scenario Music Company scores and Strand Features, Incorporated, of Detroit, have contracted for the Michigan and Toledo territories.

Pathe to Distribute Reel Showing Dempsey's Training

EXCLUSIVE rights to the only motion picture that will be made of Jack Dempsey in actual training for his coming epochal fight in defense of his heavyweight crown against Georges Carpentier, have just been obtained by Pathe Exchange, according to the latter's announcement.

Acting for Jack Kearns, manager of Dempsey, and the heavyweight champion himself, Fred C. Quimby assigned to Paul Brunet for Pathe, the distribution rights to a one-reel subject entitled "A Day with Jack Dempsey." The reel will show Dempsey's training routine from the time he arises in the morning until he retires in the evening.

Under the terms of the contract, Dempsey will not pose during his training for the fight for any motion picture organization or individual up to the day of his fight with Carpentier.

"A Day with Jack Dempsey" was made under the supervision of Jack Kearns, Dempsey's mentor, and Mr. Quimby, who directed the actual photographing of the production. In order that the picture might be absolutely correct in every detail of the training, Mr. Kearns personally supervised the work of Dempsey and his sparring partners. The pictures were made at Dempsey's training quarters in New Jersey.

Pathe will begin the distribution of "A Day with Jack Dempsey" as soon as prints can be rushed from its Bound Brook factory.

In order that the widest distribution might be obtained on the subject, and that every exhibitor will have an opportunity to profit from this very timely topic, Pathe will issue 200 prints.

It is considered a picture that will advertise itself, and in many respects is regarded by Pathe as the greatest single reel attraction it has ever handled.

Exhibitors who desire to play "A Day with Jack Dempsey" will have to get their requests in early, for Pathe expects a record-breaking demand between now and the day of the fight, July 2nd.

"Deception" Starts Run in Boston

"DECEPTION," Paramount's big European production, which not only established a new record for a week at the New York Rivoli but has the distinction of being the first picture ever to play three weeks at that theatre, opened an indefinite engagement at the Colonial theatre, Boston, Tuesday evening, May 3. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, went to Boston to supervise the presentation on the opening night.

The entire presentation, exactly as it was given at the Rivoli, including prologue, settings and orchestral accompaniment, has been duplicated for the Boston theatre.

One of the most successful runs in the history of Boston is predicted for "Deception," for it has been favorably passed upon for Sunday presentation by the Department of Public Safety, being one of the very few non-religious pictures so favored.

Increasing Demand for Speedco Arc Control

For the purpose of analyzing the arc control situation in Chicago, the E. E. Fulton Company, manufacturers of the Speedco Arc Control, recently made an incomplete survey of the city for the purpose of completing their records on Speedco installations. The results are interesting.

The first installation of any size was found to have been in 1916 when twelve Speedco Arc Controls were installed in the Jones-Linick & Schaefer circuit. At about the same time a battery of two Speedcos were installed in the Jackson Park theatre. Investigation showed all fourteen to be operating in 1921 as efficiently as in 1916 after practically constant use for five years.

During the war Speedco manufacture was practically at a standstill but recently a revival in production has enabled the Fulco Sales Company of Chicago, as distributors in the home territory, to complete the following installations since January, 1921: Three Speedcos in the Kedzie Annex theatre, followed by two in the Kedzie (vaudeville and pictures); two in the Elmo theatre, two in the Garfield theatre, two in the Oakley, and two in the Dearborn theatre.

Business Booming for Bartola Music Co.

Mr. Dan Barton, of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, who has recently returned to Chicago headquarters after a trip through the Central West, reports that the organ business is booming, despite the dullness in other lines, and that his company is working overtime to supply the demand for its instruments.

The Hostettler Circuit with a chain of houses throughout the states of Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, are equipping their theatres with Bartola Musical Instruments and instruments now are being installed for the Hostettler Circuit in Hastings, Nebraska, Grand Island, Nebraska, and Shenandoah, Iowa.

E. C. Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield Circuit with a string of houses through Michigan and Ohio, has closed contracts with the Bartola Musical Instrument Company for instruments in Bay City, Michigan, and Battle Creek.

"The Lotus Blossom" for National Exchange

From the offices of National Exchanges, Inc., comes the announcement that it is to release "The Lotus Blossom," a feature picture now in the course of preparation, in which Lady Tsen Mei, a Chinese film actress, is to be starred.

Music and the Picture

Why Managers Should Not Try to Become Conductors

By Charles D. Isaacson

IF a manager is a musician that is one thing; but if he happens to be a manager with a good musical director at his right hand, then what I have to say today may be of some value.

I have learned many things since taking hold of this department of music for the pictures, and one of them is that over-zealous managers may reduce highly trained musicians to the state of defeated servants. Without question I could cite ten cases of theatres, where the musical director, entering the service, fresh, buoyant, enthusiastic, full of ideas, was met with opposition, arbitrary methods, and was turned into a weak, servile, order-follower.....In a fairly large theatre here in the East, I was the witness of just such a condition. The conductor, at the head of a large orchestra is unquestionably one of the best musicians in the service. He had certain fine ideals, planned his entire season with a sense of proportion, unity, development. He understood the scoring of films, knew how to augment and reduce his orchestra for all occasions, had an unusual method of interpolating singing and dancing numbers. Everything was going beautifully until the manager one day became intensely interested in the music. It was alright for him to be interested in the results of the musical fork, but now he began to put his hands into the making of the music. He was not a musician, and moreover he didn't know one note from another; one composer from another. He was a good film man, he had come from one of the smaller cities where he had made good. Inspired no doubt by the Musicialities of Rothafel, Riesenfeld et al, ths manager now began to assume musical airs too. Into the program crept the line: "All music selected under personal supervision of....." (mentioning the manager's name). The manager switched the engaging of soloists from the musical director's office to his own, and the programs began to suffer. Pretty but voiceless singers were engaged; artful but inartistic dancers were billed. Then the music came to the manager's desk. In several months, the manager had been studyng his tradepapers, had been following regularly his more successful rivals and had digested inefficiently a great deal of musical talk. The things he started to shoot at his poor conductor, were stupid and hurtful to business..... At first, the conductor stood his ground, argued, tried to persuade his manager of the fallacy of his attitude, but finally gave up. The fight was too strenuous, he was in the minority, his was the lesser voice—so he swallowed his wrath, waited upon the manager for orders and kept his ideas to himself, while he followed directions, with a half-sneer on his lips, which communicated itself to the musicians and their playing.....Bad, very, very bad!

Now not for one moment would I have it thought that I advocate a differentiation between musician and manager. I think that the musician who simply goes ahead irrespective of his manager and the house policies, is unworthy. Conferences, discussions, unanimity of opinion are necessary at all times. House policies must be determined which cover the type and character of music desired, the standards to be sought. I have seen the pendulum swing the other way. I will agree that the manager is more likely than the musician to have his job at heart, that there are many players of instruments who think only of their violins, organs, etc., without having a general spirit of the whole ensemble of the film, music and box office in mind. I have observed musicians in theatres who would have been fired by me instanter! They were almost as bad as the musician in the theatre who was proud, who had taken a job in pictures because he was in bad circumstances, but who was dadblamed if he'd prostitute is intellect by looking at the screen. The musician who is doing the film industry a favor by "accepting" employment won't be with us very much longer. The musician who cannot realize that he is as much at home and in dignified surroundings—as dignified as any in the whole musical world, doesn't belong. He doesn't belong. Rauss mit him!

Nevertheless I would bear down on the point I seek to impress. Give the musical leader a fair chance—give him a liberal free hand. Allow him to exercise his judgment, his musical experience. Permit him to call upon his memory, his acquaintanceship with musical masterpieces past and present. If he is worthy of his place, he is worthy of being responsible for the music. Hold him strictly responsible for it. That attitude will put him on his mettle.

After all when you come right down to it, who is better equipped to suggest the music and the musicians, and the soloists and the programs than the man who has given his life to it?

I am reminded of the story of the advertising writer. It seems that everybody knows more about writing advertisements than the man who has devoted himself to the study of such matters. Anybody who can string words together imagines he can set up an advertisement and anybody who can read feels himself capable of cutting, trimming, revising and generally mutilating a perfectly good piece of selling copy... I remember some years ago when "The Exploits of Elaine" was the sensation of serial filmdom, that Arthur Brisbane wrote some advertisements. Now it must be admitted that Mr. Brisbane with his seventy-five thousand dollars a year salary (or it is one hundred thousand now?) can write editorials. But after William Randolph Hearsf had compared Mr. Brisbane's advertising copy with the kind submitted by his then advertising copy-writer (salary one hundred simoleons only per week), W. R. H. turned to Arthur Brisbane and said, mischievously, "I think you and I, Arthur, had better attend to our own business and leave ad-writers to take care of their own salvation. You can't write ads, Arthur, and neither can I. But this boy can.....Go ahead, young man, with your series".....Pass to the advertising copy department.....—No thanks, that's aldight, gentleman, no thanks. I was the said hundred dollar advertising copy-writer and I've been waiting all these years to get the story into print!

Everybody who can whistle a note, who knows the difference between Yankee Doodle and the Funeral March of Chopin, believes himself capable of deciding the destinies of music for the film. Now I will change that statement. Not everybody. Because I've seen many managers who are ideal executives and inspirations for their musical conductors. I will tell you what they do—what is their procedure.

As soon as a feature picture is signed, a memorandum goes to the musician's office. The conductor keeps over his desk a large sheet which bears the current week's program, the coming week's, and the next and as far as he can go—sometimes four weeks ahead. The feature is written into its place, the comedy and the educational and any other subject that is scheduled. Provided with this information the conductor seeks to unify his entire program with the proper atmosphere of music. He picks his overture, suggests his interpolated solo numbers, dance and song divertisements, etc., and confers with the manager. He tells what added musicians he will need, if any, what soloists, what special drops, suggestion for the prologue, etc. Oftentimes, the manager can't agree with the suggested program—it's too similar to the preceding week, or it overbalances, or it doesn't seem to have the strength, or it is too high-brow, or something of the kind. Generally the musical ideas are O.K.'d at once. There is no friction. The musician is open to suggestions and criticisms. The manager doesn't lose control. He is a real executive and he compliments the conductor and sends him off on air, each time.

I will tell you something, managers, about musicians. They are the most sensitive creatures on earth. From the greatest prima donna down to the youngest second violin, the susceptibility to praise is primeval and unbelievable. A kind word, a statement of praise, is worth more to the musician almost than his salary. Oh, I

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Love Special—

Great picture that played to big business. (South.)

Fair picture; fair receipts. (East.)

The Easy Road—

Thomas Meighan always a big favorite at this house. Business good, despite first warm spring weather. (East.)

Thomas Meighan. Despite poor picture, attendance was on an average. (East.)

The Witching Hour—

A very fine version of a very fine play. Splendid acting throughout. Good business in a week of general poor business. (East.)

Sacred and Profane Love—

Here's a picture the men liked better than the women. Very good business. Production and cast of highest. (Middle West.)

Straight Is the Way—

Slow, dull, tiresome. Business ditto. It was a very ordinary "crook story," with the usual sweet-faced, fair-haired mother as the "reforming influence"—and it just didn't go over; that's all! (South.)

The Gilded Lily—

Big every day and they all liked it. (West.)

Exceptional fine settings and surprise features of story appealed strongly to our audiences, and we did good business with this picture. (Middle West.)

Beau Revel—

Great story. Story good; closely knit—but Lewis Stone and Florence Vidor gripped the attention from start to finish. Stone's work immense. (South.)

What Every Woman Knows—

Went over fair to fair attendance. (West.)

Proxies—

Forbidden Fruit—

Started out big, but did not stand up. (West.)

The Kentuckians—

Just average for us at the box office, but Monte Blue made many new friends and the picture was well liked by those who saw it. (West.)

The Dollar a Year Man—

This picture was not particularly good and box office returns on it were only fair. (East.)

Sentimental Tommy—

An excellent production in every way. Box office figures very satisfactory. (East.)

The City of Silent Men—

An out of the ordinary picture; had to keep it over a second week. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Sowing the Wind—

Inconsistent in spots and about an average picture, but it surely gave us chances to advertise and our business was splendid. (Middle West.)

Only fair for both box office and as to pleasing qualifications. (West.)

This is awful. Five reels would have been plenty for the plot; instead they've used eight. The only thing that saves it is Miss Stewart, who is as appealing as ever. (Middle West.)

Mama's Affair—

Surprised Connie's friends, and, while it was entirely different, they liked it. Went over big. (South.)

One of the best vehicles Constance Talmadge has ever had. It is something more than pure farce, having a logical idea behind it. An excellent box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Scrambled Wives—

Marguerite Clark is below her standard in this picture, but she is always a good drawing card here. Packed houses all week, due largely to Bryant Washburn's personal appearance at each performance.

The Kid—

Well received. Chaplin's vulgarity deplored, but that trait of his appears to be overshadowed by his acting. (East.)

My Lady's Latchkey—

Made a nice hit and fine attendances reported throughout. Was combined here with Sennett's Love, Honor and Behave, which went good. (East.)

Bob Hampton of Placer—

Played to a capacity house all week, aided by some unique exploitation. Eight Blackfeet Indians, first time off the reservation, a cowboy

Disappointing. Not as clever as quartet, and the name Wesley Barry all served to attract much interest. (Middle West.)

The Oath—

Held up consistently all week. Audiences liked it. A good box office attraction. (East.)

Trust Your Wife—

Went over good and drew satisfactory crowds. (West.)

The Passion Flower—

A second run, helped considerably by the fact that the play of the same name was in town too. The tragic ending spoiled it for many fans, but business was brisk all week. (East.)

Jim, the Penman—

Lionel Barrymore is through so far as we are concerned. Splendid actor, but plays are too heavy. Terrible receipts. (Middle West.)

REALART

The Little Clown—

Fair production that brought fair returns. (West.)

A gem of a picture. Played to exceptionally big matinees. (East.)

The Plaything of Broadway—

Nothing great about the picture, but it is a creator of public interest and filled my house all week. Offers a good field for exploitation. (Middle West.)

Ducks and Drakes—

A good picture. They liked this one and went away and told their friends about it. Business was good. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Prisoners of Love—

Pleased our patrons and drew good business. (West.)

Attracted in a pleasing manner and netted quite pleasingly. (East.)

Going Some—

A sure bet for a week's run—snappy; full of life and interesting. A good house all week. (Middle West.)

The Branding Iron—

This pleased pretty nearly everyone and brought excellent returns. (East.)

Boys Will Be Boys—

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

A Small Town Idol—

Held it over for a second week to box office returns almost as much as the first week. If it had not been for two days of hot weather we would have beaten the first week. Picture, curiously enough, appealed here mostly to men. (Middle West.)

Well liked, drew fine and receipts pleasing. (East.)

I Am Guilty—

Timely title these days, and attracted a curious crowd. Picture sufficiently strong to stand on its own merits after getting the people in. (East.)

A Perfect Crime—

Originally booked for week, but pulled on Wednesday, warm weather partly to blame for unsatisfactory business. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Outside the Law—

A bit improbable in spots, but on the whole a good picture. Priscilla Dean is up to her usual standard. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

The Pleasure Seekers—

Mediocre as an attraction. Business fair. (East.)

A Chicken in the Case—

Fine picture. Brought us good business. (West.)

VITAGRAPH

Black Beauty—

Excellent production. Made special play to the kiddies and cleaned up. (South.)

A very good picture, but it didn't draw any too well. Business was only fair. (East.)

HODKINSON

The Leopard Woman—

Good box office bet that pleased a little better than average. (West.)

East Lynne—

We were disappointed. Less than usual matinee and night crowds. (Middle West.)

METRO

A Message from Mars—

Very good picture which the popularity of Bert Lytell helped to put over big at this house. Played to exceptionally good business for week. (Middle West.)

PATHE

What Women Will Do—

A well told story—a good drawing card—large house all week. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Straight from Paris—

"Hush" and story old and hackneyed. Miss Young's beauty and gowns the only redeeming feature. (South.)

Kazan—

Great picture that did a fine business. (West.)

The Light Woman—

Fair picture that did only fair business. (East.)

When Dawn Came—

A picture that pleased all and did very good business. Lends itself to possible exploitation. (East.)

A self explanatory exploitation stunt for "The Smart Sex" pulled by the Frolic theatre

Pocket Edition Chaplins Parade in Harrisburg

No matter where one looked in Harrisburg, Pa., during the week of April 4, they were almost certain to be confronted with the sight of a "pocket edition" of Charley Chaplin strutting along the street.

The people of Harrisburg were not long in finding out the meaning of this enormous crowd of little Chaplins for everybody was handed a card on which bore the inscription, "Meet me at the Victoria theatre, week of April 4, and see 'The Kid.'"

A week previous to the opening performance of "The Kid," Hopkins placed lines in his regular advertising asking for 500 "kids" who desired to become Charley Chaplins. In order to stimulate the youngsters to action, Manager Hopkins offered rewards for the best make ups and agreed to furnish the moustache but not the costumes. So rapid did the response come in that on the Saturday previous to the Monday opening, it was found that over 500 youngsters, and not all of them boys either, had responded to the advertisement and signified their entry for the prize.

It is needless to say that lessons were cast aside for the afternoon school hours, at any rate as they were not allowed to appear after 7 o'clock in the evening.

Neat Lobby Display Idea for "Prisoners of Love"

The manager of the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, Texas, put up a very effective theatre front display for the showing of "Prisoners of Love." The front of the theatre was made to resemble the walls of a prison by means of four strips of beaverboard about ten feet high by three wide, painted to represent stone walls. These four strips were placed at equal distances apart across the entrance arch, leaving three open spaces, two leading to the entrance doors, and the middle opening to the ticket booth.

Near the top of each strip of beaverboard a window, in the shape of a heart, was cut out, with three perpendicular bars across each. Behind the bars was the head of Betty Compson printed in colors on the "Prisoners of Love" broadside sent out by Goldwyn.

Above the doors opening into the orchestra were placed two shields with a heart outlined upon each. Above the entrance, through the prison wall, to the ticket booth was a large cut-out heart with the title of the play painted upon it. On each side of this heart, supporting it, were cut-out figures of Cupid. At the base of three of the beaverboard strips were potted plants upon little tables.

This theatre front display was so effective that crowds gathered in front of it, a large proportion of which bought tickets to see the picture. Only the customary billing and newspaper advertising was done, but the photoplay did an excellent business for the entire showing.

Sigma Theatre Lobby Display Very Pleasing

Simple, inexpensive, but eloquent was the lobby display arranged by Manager C. C. Deardourff, during his recent engagement of "Without Limit" at the Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio. Knowing that almost everyone has some spirit of gambling in his make-up, Deardourff played the gambling instinct in his display. Large playing cards dangled from the electrically lighted marquee. Over the marquee was built a roulette table, a cut-out scene from the picture, flanked by a deck of playing cards. It was all in bright colors, and could be seen way down the street. Note the absence of cut-outs in the lobby. Deardourff didn't want to divide the public attention between a series of cut-outs and his big cut-out display, so he had only enough to indicate the type of picture shown and left it to the cards and to the marquee display to tell the story.

A cut showing the lobby display appears on the opening page of Service Bureau section.

Showing how the Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal., exploited its recent showing of "The County Fair"

Stage setting and characters taking part in the original prologue presented for "Peck's Bad Boy," playing a world premiere last week at the New York Mark Strand theatre

Plunkett's "Peck's Bad Boy" Prologue

A very effective prologue was staged by Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the New York Mark Strand theatre, for the world premiere of "Peck's Bad Boy." The stage setting used, as shown by the accompanying cut, depicted an alley scene.

As the curtains opened, the stage was entirely black with the exception of an orange and deep blue calcium light. Blue border lights dimmed barely brought the Strand quartette into view.

With the stage too dark to get an idea of the setting or the singers, the quartette sang "Shandon Bells," without an orchestral accompaniment and only the sound of the chimes striking at intervals.

As the quartette sang the last few notes of "Shandon Bells" the lights were raised, revealing an alley scene, and the singers in ordinary working clothes. A second's pause and then a pane of glass was crashed. Another second, and another pane of glass in one of the windows was seen to fall to the stage floor. A policeman rushes into the scene, and the singers shout:

"There he goes," and point down the alley. As the singers shout, they swing into the chorus of the song "Peck's Bad Boy," written by Paul M. Sarzan, and which Mr. Plunkett has introduced. This song will be published and put at the disposal of all exhibitors. The song is cued into the score of the picture.

As the quartette finishes the chorus of "Peck's Bad Boy," the singers fold their hands in church-like fashion and sing very hymn-like "Heaven bless our little lamb," at which the curtains draw together and the picture fades into view.

Old Time Exploitation Stunt Rejuvenated

The good old exploitation friend of the tank town one nighter, the herald that advertised the show only when it was held to the light so that parts of the letters printed on both sides of the paper appeared, has been revived by Max R. Doolittle Paramount exploitation man at Des Moines.

When "The Gilded Lily" was playing E. H. Helmt's Rialto, Doolittle drew a design for a hand bill that when held to the light as was stated in plain United States in a subhead, made a complete announcement of the picture's run in Des Moines.

Doolittle improved somewhat on the old way of doing the trick. His design merely cut portions of the printed matter out of the announcement. Not a letter nor a cut was left complete. When the light shone through the complete announcement was readable.

Spectacular Exploitation Put Over at Indianapolis

The most spectacular exploitation campaign ever seen in Indianapolis in connection with a motion picture was staged when "Bob Hampton of Placer," was played at the Circle theatre last week.

In addition to the innumerable exploitation angles offered by the picture itself, a troupe of Blackfoot Indians who are playing in conjunction with the production in a number of the larger cities, provided still a greater opportunity for spectacular advertising.

The Indians arrived in Indianapolis three days ahead of the initial showing of the picture and were given a rousing welcome at the station. Following a dinner and other entertainment they were taken to the theatre where they thanked the audience for the welcome given.

The next day was started off with a parade through all the principal streets of the city, headed by the Indianapolis Military Band and in which scores of automobiles took part, each machine bearing huge banners reading; "welcome Blackfoot Indians."

This was followed by a reception at the City Hall, in which Mayor Charles W. Jewett took part. The Indians, after making the mayor an honorary member of the Blackfoot tribe, gave him a war dance, which resulted in considerable favorable newspaper publicity.

That evening a banquet was given for newspaper men and city officials, which also received considerable publicity.

Among the other stunts used both in advance and after the picture started, were: A bow and arrow contest in the University park; a one day's camp at the park, where the general public was permitted to take pictures of the Indians; riding the Indians through the city on horseback; a sightseeing tour of the city; lectures at the Indianapolis high schools; lectures at the Rotary Club, the Kiwanis Club and the Indianapolis Athletic club.

And of course the fact that the Indians were always about the city helped in a great way to arouse interest.

These full blooded Blackfeet Indians were used to exploit "Bob Hampton of Placer" during the picture's premiere at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., last week

Amateur Musicians Get Inning at Newark

In securing novelties for its program the Rialto theatre in Newark, N. J., has always been a leader for its distinctive ideas and novel methods of securing soloists for its prologue features and for concert singing.

The old stunt of using local talent was tried, but with new variations; namely, holding voice trials for amateur singers, and retaining the best of them for appearance on the Rialto stage.

This time a new scheme was tried. The Rialto declared its intention of holding a composers contest, in which the best compositions turned in would be played by the Rialto Orchestra. Much valuable publicity was secured in the newspapers as the story made excellent news. The musical critic for the Newark Morning Ledger was invited to write an overture, and after it was completed, consented to conduct the orchestra during the rendition of his piece.

All this led to results that were tremendous, not only in replies on the contest, but in money returns as the local composer was well known throughout the city, and many were eager to hear the overture.

Small Maine City Presents "Kismet" Prologue

Another of the exhibitors to present a "harem" prologue in conjunction with the showing of "Kismet" is W. J. Clifford of the Colonial theatre, Belfast, Me.

Using one of the house interiors for a setting, Mr. Clifford provided an Oriental lounge, and potted palms and dressed up a quintet of local girls in the usual "harem" costumes.

Four of the girls reclined on and about the lounge and the fifth rendered an atmospheric dance.

The number went over for a hit and once again demonstrates that the smallest town may occasionally stage presentation numbers in city style without breaking the local bank or the importing professional talent.

Inexpensive stage setting for prologue which was originated for the showing of "The Testing Block" at the Liberty theatre, Roswell, N. M.

Grauman Presents Portion of Shakespeare Play

The anniversary of the birth of Shakespeare was observed befittingly at Grauman Cinema Temple the week ending April 23, when, in connection with the varied program, Sid Grauman introduced a bit of Shakespearian drama as a prologue to "The Witching Hour," which was the feature of the bill. The final act of Shakespeare's "A Mid-Summer Night's Dream" was enacted by a cast of thirty players with the same style settings, properties and costumes used in England when the play was first produced.

So far as is known by the writer this is the first time that Shakespearian in drama has been introduced into a motion picture theatre in connection with a film play and Grauman took full advantage of his opportunity to use this as an added attraction that would bring people interested in Shakesperian plays to the theatre. Special invitations were sent to dramatic clubs, Shakesperian classes and schools and colleges, and these invitations greatly aided in increasing the business.

Small Towner Builds Lobby Display for "Earthbound"

Manager Musselman, of the Grand theatre, Corsicana, Texas, has recently given "Earthbound" a lobby display that does credit for a city twice the size of Corsicana.

Above is shown a cut of the lobby decorations originated by Mr. Musselman. The oval shown above the banner was made of cloth with the representation of the earth, showing the continents, painted on it by a local artist.

Below were paintings of the heads of three of the central figures in the story, with the title of the photoplay in white letters underneath the heads.

The lobby ceiling was festooned with blue cloth draping from the center of which depended an imitation globe, four feet in diameter, with the title of the picture printed across it in black type.

What Paint and Beaverboard Accomplished in Texas

An attractive and inexpensive theatre front decoration for the showing of "Prisoners of Love," was prepared by the manager of the Lyric theatre, Burkburnette, Texas. Beaverboard, paint brush and a little energy were all that was necessary to turn the front of the house in to an imitation prison wall. The ticket booth stands in the center of the Lyric's lobby; a square large enough to permit patrons to get to the box office window to buy seats was cut out of the beaverboard. Just above the opening a small horizontal window was cut, with the title of the play painted in large type on a cross-piece between the two openings.

Two doors were cut through the beaverboard into the lobby. Near the outer walls of the theatre large openings, in the shape of hearts, were cut, with the names of the star of "Prisoners of Love" and of the leading man, Roy Stewart, who is very popular with the patrons of the Lyric theatre, painted above the hearts in large type.

This theatre front display attracted great attention in Burkburnette and prove a fine exploitation stunt.

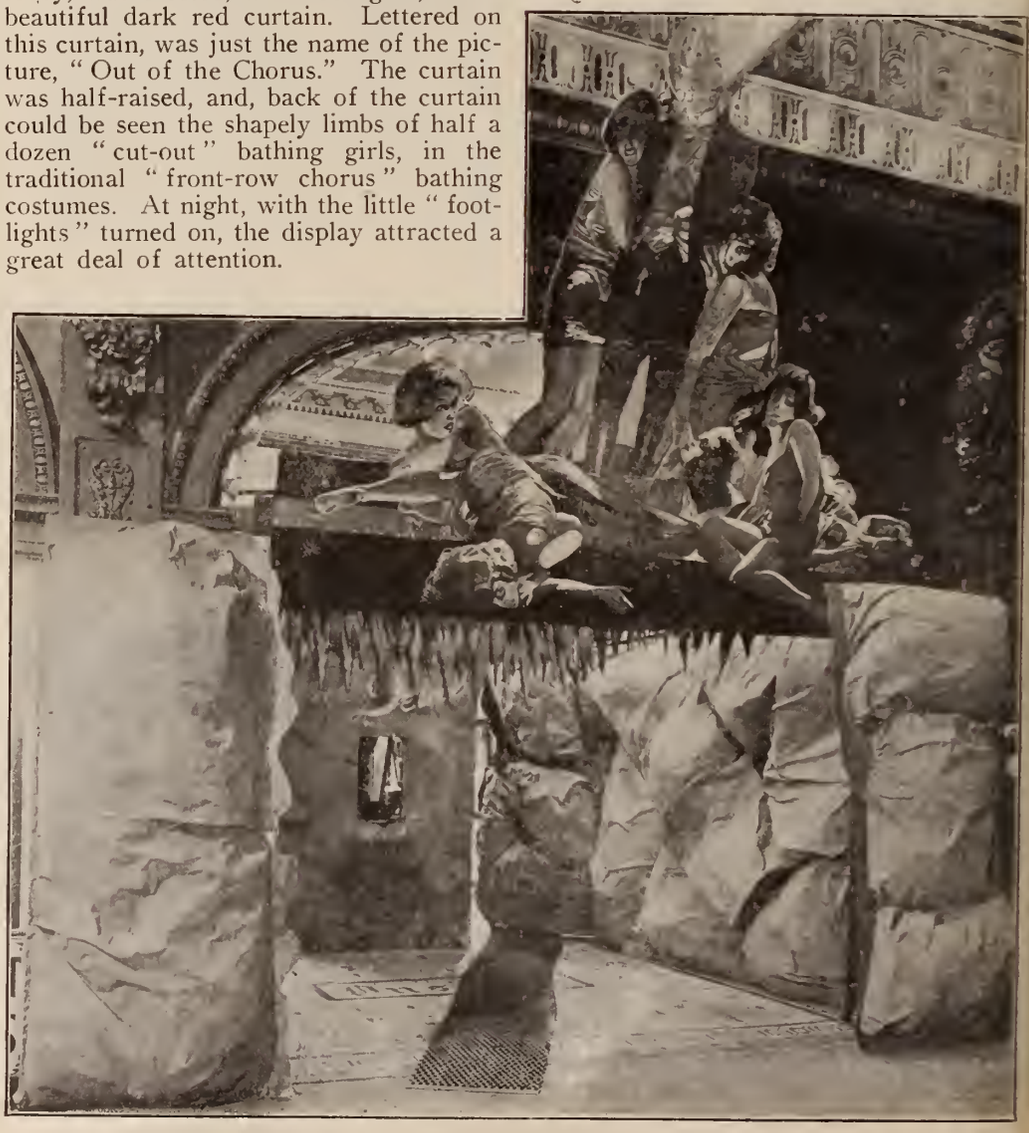
Schmidt Strong for Lobby Displays

Manager George Schmidt of the Alamo No. 2 theatre, Atlanta, is one of the live wire showmen who knows the value of lobby displays.

Recently, he booked "Out of the Chorus," and, instead of playing it up big in newspaper advertising, built a lobby that created considerable talk.

A miniature stage, almost filling the lobby, was erected, with footlights, and a beautiful dark red curtain. Lettered on this curtain, was just the name of the picture, "Out of the Chorus." The curtain was half-raised, and, back of the curtain could be seen the shapely limbs of half a dozen "cut-out" bathing girls, in the traditional "front-row chorus" bathing costumes. At night, with the little "footlights" turned on, the display attracted a great deal of attention.

Wood Gives Serial Good Send Off



Serial exploitation is not neglected by A. J. Wood, manager of the Grand Opera House, Brunswick, Ga. In fact, Mr. Wood spends more money on the first episode of his serial attractions than he does on the average features, if we are to judge by the campaign recently put over for "King of the Circus."

"Eddie Polo balloons" were selected as an exploitation medium for "King of the Circus," but instead of giving the balloons away at the entrance of the theatre or some ordinary way, Mr. Wood planned to make the incident into an event. The balloons were released from the third story of the theatre building several days before the first episode was scheduled to run, and on a Saturday, so that all the school children could be on hand. To one hundred balloons were attached free passes to the show. All that was properly announced, and when the stunt was pulled the streets were blocked with excited youngsters, all set to get a balloon and if possible one of the passes.

The result of Mr. Wood's exploitation was capacity business for the serial's opening and many friends made for the offering.

Sororio Does Things for "County Fair"

Lowell, Mass., Manager Makes Hit With Hokum Exploitation Campaign

The exploitation trail of "The County Fair" goes on and on. Among the latest campaigns put over is that of Thomas D. Sororio, managing director of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass. Here is the way he put over "The County Fair":

"First, we decorated the lobby of the theatre with all kinds of cut-outs of animals and poultry, and incidental novelties, together with the usual number of streamers, and enough rustic atmosphere to emphasize the spirit of the film without cluttering up the foyer with too much farm truck. This was done about a week before the picture was to be presented.

"Then we flooded the town with one, six and twenty-four sheets. We also distributed 10,000 circus heralds from house to house, and this, together with a thousand horseshoe stickers which were pasted on poles, windows and any other available place within the law, gave the film extensive advertising and created, a desire to see the picture. Teaser ads were run extensively in the newspapers a week ahead of the presentation of the picture at the Strand. In connection with this, we used our screen freely to advertise the picture.

"On the opening day we had the Middlesex County Training School Band of twenty-five pieces play in the lobby. We obtained the band with the understanding that the boys were to be my guests for the day. We made arrangements with the street railway company to provide cars to convey them to and from the theatre. The youngsters were a feature in themselves, and attracted as much attention as any of the incidental novelties. Just before the theatre opened on Monday we released 1,000 toy ballooons, on which were attached coupons which could be redeemed for prizes and passes.

We had previously made arrangements with the local high school for the use of their orchestra in a prologue on the stage. These pupils were dressed as Rubes, of course, and lent considerable atmosphere to the prologue.

Inexpensive window display, less than $5.00 in cost, for "The Love Light," originated by Maxwell M. Chatkin of the Electra theatre, Brooklyn

"Incidentally, I obtained the services of Pete Murray, who played the Rube comedian in one of the touring companies of 'The County Fair.' He, of course, took part in the prologue, which lasted thirty minutes. Murray also did 'sandwich' work in front of the theatre throughout the presentation of the picture.

"The Mayor of the city was invited to see the picture and liked the features, particularly the prologue, so well that he suggested that we invite the children from the orphan asylums of the city to see the picture Saturday morning. These 2,500 youngsters had the time of their young lives, and the little extra expense which enabled them to see the picture was negligible.

"Perhaps all this may be construed as small-town stuff, and maybe it is in some instances, but much of the material used in connection with 'The County Fair' could be admirably applied to the largest city in the country. The very rustic nature of the picture would preclude the charge of provincialism in the use of the Rube band, decorated foyer, toy balloons, etc. But most significant of all is the economy of these features. It cost me nothing for the band or the orchestra because these people were willing to co-operate after they had been tactfully approached.

"I might mention here that several of the newspapers in this city ran full-page ads of 'The County Fair' during the week it was at the Strand. These ads, I believe, came in matrix form. The page of ads was divided off into four two-column ads, two deep, with a big streamer in the center, 'The County Fair,' and telling where it is beneath. The ads were illustrated, and contained such as 'Wesley Barry's squeaking shoes almost caused a riot in church. This could have been prevented had they been purchased at ————.'

Saratoga Now on the Exploitation Map

All merchants of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., are falling in line. Since Harry C. Swift, exploiteer for the Albany Paramount Exchange, broke the ice several weeks ago with a tie-up with the town's most fashionable ladies' shop, other windows have become available. With Mr. Swift's co-operation the Congress theatre recently tied up with the town's largest hardware store. The exploiter convinced them that "Behold My Wife" had an apt title to link up with a display of kitchen utensils and other household goods.

Tome's window display consisted of their line of goods, window cards hand-drawn, cut-outs from stock Paramount posters, a one-sheet and stills. Nobody passes a window tie-up in Saratoga. The stunt is too recent, and when a person passes the familiar window and sees an unusual display he stands there a while and takes it all in. Tome's want to tie up in the future, and the Congress theatre is so pleased with results that it plans to bring all the merchants around before long.

From Scrub Lady to Scenic Artist

John W. Schatt, proprietor of the Gowanda opera house, Gowanda, N. Y., whose exploitation deeds, along with those of his efficient manager, Mrs. Marie Cummings, have been told in the NEWS from time to time, is finding new ways of making money out of his theatrical venture, originally intended as a hobby.

Mrs. Cummings has made three canvas signs three by ten feet on which she puts a flat coat of alabastine, over which is painted in water color the name of the current feature with a little amateur scenery added to make the sign attractive. Mrs. Cummings' talent with a paint brush is also put to good and practical use in other directions. She takes the clean side of old one-sheets and pastes cut-out heads of stars playing the opera house upon them and then with water color makes artistic new one-sheets, a very nice imitation of complete original paintings.

The hand painted posters are placed in lobby frames purchased for the purpose. Mrs. Cummings also paints her own slides producing novelties that are way ahead of the purchased article.

And all this by a woman who a few years ago was scrub lady for the theatre.

Hopkins Pulls "Freckles" Stunt for "Dinty"

The now justly famous "freckle stunt" for putting over "Dinty" was used with the usual fine results by Floyd Hopkins, manager of the Colonial theatre, Harrisburg, Pa.

Mr. Hopkins offered a prize for the local boy who had the greatest number of freckles. The winner turned up with 213 bonafide spots to his credit and it was a small face at that.

The usual newspaper publicity and word of mouth advertising resulted from Mr. Hopkins' stunt.

Hill Makes Good Use of Bebe's Misfortune

Manager Hill of the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal., made good use, in the way of publicity, of the incarceration of Miss Bebe Daniels in the Orange county jail as the result of a show of undue speed on a California highway. Mr. Hill was showing "Ducks and Drakes," featuring Miss Daniels, and he sent her a wire of condolence relative to her imprisonment. Miss Daniels replied with a message of greeting to her San Diego friends, and this Manager Hill played up well in his newspaper advertising.

Booker Uses Bag Stunt with Fine Results

The good old "Grocery Bag" stunt that the writer used way back in General Film days has been found productive of good results by G. C. Brooker, manager of the opera house, Neepawa, Manitoba, Can., in exploiting "Down on the Farm."

Just what the arrangements were by the bags were furnished to Neepawa grocers is not known, but anyway all the grocers used them.

Illustrating George W. Lederer's exploitation of "Partners of the Tide" playing recently at the Rialto theatre, Passaic, N. J., as told in the story appearing below

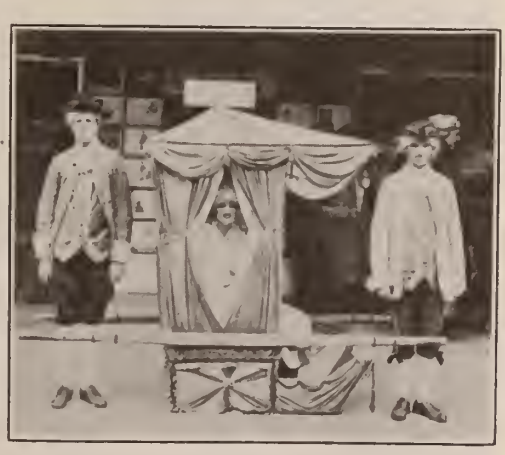
Lederer's Teaser Campaign

Passaic Exhibitor Uses News Ads. on "Partners of the Tide" in Local Papers

If this story does nothing else it will confound the wiseacres who have frowned on exploitation because "exploitation never got a picture nothin' in this town."

Passaic, N. J. has been a city where zealous advocates of exploitation have been met with the equivalent of the above quotation and it has remained for George W. Lederer of the Rialto theatre, to prove that Passaic like any other community will react favorably to live wire showmanship.

Mr. Lederer booked "Partners of the Tide" and it was this picture that he chose for his first venture into the problem of upsetting hide bound tradition.



Mr. Lederer liked the original "eight punch" teaser campaign conducted by Professor Willat in the advertising section of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to attract exhibitor attention to his film. The NEWS teasers mystified Lederer and he felt that if they had this effect upon him, they should arouse curiosity among even the stolid Passaicites.

He took the producers' eight teasers out of the NEWS without change and inserted them in the local newspapers, one per day, beginning eight days in advance of the opening of the picture. That is surely a new thing in advance advertising in Passaic. Then he had a man walk the streets in a diver's costume. The next smash at precedent was the billboarded automobile illustrated herewith.

Now, for three days preceding the opening of the picture the diver carried no clue to his identity. On the opening day of the film and for three days following he carried a "Partners of the Tide" window card. The mystery idea was kept up until the very opening day; scenic artists got busy in the lobby the night before the opening, but a sheet of canvas was stretched across the front of it and not until next morning did the fruits of their night toil become visible.

Passaicites found that the lobby had been transformed into the suggestion of an interior of a ship. The outer lobby doors had the legend "Cabin" painted across them and the inner ones were labeled "Grand Salon." The box office window was marked "Pursers Office." The spread that day in the papers was five columns wide by eleven inches deep, unprecedented nwspaper space for Passaic. Manager Lederer persuaded one of the editors to use a three-column scene cut on the amusements news page—this size cut had never been seen by Passaic newspaper readers excpt in amusement advertisemnts.

Th Rialto Theatre also made a concerted drive at the schools, inviting the attendance of principals and teachers to see "a thrilling but clean sea story by a representative American author, Joseph C. Lincoln."

Newark Theatre Stages Tread Mill Horse Race

Sid Lawrence and H. A. Finter of the Newark theatre, Newark, N. J., have recently given "A Small Town Idol" a presentation that acted both as exploitation and atmosphere.

An accompanying cut will show the ballyhoo especially the horses that worked both outside and in the theatre.

The stage number was a horse race in which the usual tread bills were used in good old hippodrome style.

The number went over for one of the biggest hits ever pulled in Newark.

Palmer Builds Inexpensive Window Display

Here is a window display stunt put over by Harry M. Palmer, manager of the Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind., for "Madonnas and Men."

The arch and wall figures were cut from lithographs on the production. The lion cage was made of one-half-inch round wood bars painted black. The walls and arch were grey. A red electric bulb concealed back of the arch lighted the display at night.

Mr. Palmer reports that the display got a lot of attention from his townspeople and that many extra dollars were coaxed into the box office as a result of his efforts.

Self explanatory "Black Beauty" exploitation stunt put over by the Sigma theatre, Lima, O.

Deardourff and Boy Scouts Advertise "Black Beauty"

C. C. Deardourff, manager of the Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio, is making good use of what he learned about exploitation while representing Goldwyn in the Ohio territory.

Hardly a week goes by but what Deardourff puts over some stunt that gets the money for the Sigma.

One of Deardourff's latest campaigns has been on "Black Beauty." Lima Boy Scouts were corralled for a special showing of the picture and with due eclat, big banner and all marched all about town before ending up at the Sigma.

In addition to the Boy Scouts, Deardourff used every avenue of advertising known. He billboarded the city and all the surrounding towns. He used teaser ads preceding the large newspaper notices that ran several days prior to the opening of the picture. He also had a lady riding through town on a black horse, well placarded with the words "Black Beauty" and a specially made float, which carried big cutouts of scenes from "Black Beauty." His marquee was a symbol of good luck, with horseshoes dangling in the breezes, and a big picture of "Black Beauty."

Schmidt Has New "Ducks and Drakes" Stunt

When Manager George Schmidt, of the Alamo No. 2 Theatre, Atlanta, "Ducks and Drakes," he started to have a bunch of ducks and drakes in the lobby, but he decided that was too obvious. So he hung his lobby display on the idea displayed by the picture—the foolish little "duckling" and her telephone conversations with strange men.

On a little platform, that brought the display up to the proper height for display, he had a small stage built up. On this stage, two telephone poles, one at either end, and about the size of a fat drawing pencil, were set up, and the lines strung, out of copper wire. At the foot of the little pole on the left was a wee Kewpie doll, in bridal finery, complete even to the tiny "shower bouquet" of bride's roses and lilies-of-the-valley. The little bride held a wee glass telephone, the sort that candy stores sell, filled with pink and white candies for children. The phone was fastened to the little bride in such a way that she seemed to be enjoying the raciest of conversations.

At the other end of the wire, four full-sized Kewpie dolls in evening clothes occupied the stage. Three of the dolls were clustered about a second telephone, which was held, apparently, by a droll-looking white-wigged Kewpie, and the others were "listening in." The fourth full-sized doll reposed snugly in a big armchair, his back to the three at the 'phone. At one side stood a very small Kewpie dressed as a bell-boy, holding a tray on which were wee glasses filled with "scotch and soda" (?)

Backing up this little stage were small green cards, lettered in white, bearing catch-lines, "teasers" and the like, either lifted from the sub-titles, or suggested by the picture itself.

Cady Originates Novelty Prologue for "The Nut"

Claude E. Cady, manager of the Gladmer theatre, Lansing, Mich., and his stage manager, Edward Hopper, originated a highly effective novelty prologue number for "The Nut."

With a complete darkened stage a spotlight was made to play upon the hill in the background of the picture and gradually the head of Doug came above the horizon. After this there arose an opened nut which ate up Doug and then the squirrels appeared and tried to devour the nut. The setting brought forth applause at every performance and was a big hit. Mr. Cady exploits all features in a very novel manner.

Unique Exploitation for "Mother Eternal"

The time honored check stunt as exploitation has been given a new twist in efforts to fully publicize "Mother Eternal" playing at the Casino theatre, New York.

A check for five cents, countersigned by "Mother Eternal" is sent out on a mailing list, accompanied by a letter stating that "Mother Eternal" has fallen heir to a fortune and that she is dividing the sum among her "millions of children."

Serials Make Steady Patrons Says Dixon

Harry Dixon, manager of the Rivoli theatre, Buffalo, has had his faith in the drawing power of serials renewed.

Dixon balances his programs with worthy short subjects among which for a considerable length of time, it has been his custom to include a serial production. Sometime ago, he failed to make arrangements for a new serial and soon after box office returns began getting smaller. Dixon viewed his houses with alarm but couldn't understand the reason never having viewed the serial as much more than a filler at least not as an essential part of a program. Then it dawned upon him that he had overlooked one of the big bets for making steady patrons. A hurried trip to Buffalo's film row was the result of his deductions and soon Pathe's "Double Adventure" was on the Rivoli bill. With the initial episode the business depression began to end and the Rivoli is now playing to old time crowds, due to the fact that he is back on a serial schedule.

Grauman's Prologue for "The Kentuckians"

Ideas in presentation and exploitation that may be readily adapted by any exhibitor or at least modified to the needs of individual theatres are often found in the ideas carried out by Sid Grauman, managing director of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles. One of this number is found in the prologue staged for the recent showing of "The Kentuckians." Mr. Grauman transformed his stage into the interior of a depot waiting room in a metropolitan city. The usual benches were there, the various types of people sat about; the magazine and cigar stands were in their proper positions; the foreigner on the way to a job in camp or field came in; the prosperous business man fidgeted about and looked at his watch. The train announcer, megaphone in hand, informed the waiting passengers all trains were late, and then the people began entertaining. A piano and talking machine were brought to center stage and records played with piano accompaniment. This novel act proved an instant success. Other numbers included vocal numbers by soloists and a trio as well as a clever juvenile singer and a bit of a girl who danced.

Robson and the Grand Give Pittsburgh Orphans a Party

The picture theatres in Pittsburgh, Pa., have always been pledged to newspaper advertising and opposed to outdoor exploitation of all kinds but when John P. Harris booked "The Faith Healer" at the Million Dollar Grand, he had so far outgrown his natural prejudice for out of the ordinary advertising that he consented to allow Bill Robinson, Paramount exploiter to stage an exploitation campaign for "The Faith Healer" that shattered Pittsburgh's oldest theatrical traditions.

Pittsburgh was holding an auto show that had for some reason outlawed the McFarlane car. To the McFarlane local manager Robson journeyed with the query of how many cars he could deliver to take Pittsburgh orphans to the Grand for a special showing of "The Faith Healer."

The answer was "A hundred thousand dollars worth" and then to make good with a vengeance, he actually furnished $150,000 worth, the cheapest in the procession being valued at $6,500.

From this an idea of what class Robson's orphan entourage really had and also that the parade wasn't so long but what the Public Safety department sent a detachment of motor cycle police to halt all traffic till the kiddies were safely by.

The orphans of all the Pittsburgh institutions were the Grand's guests for "The Faith Healer" and after seeing the show, were driven through the parks, given candy and other goodies before going back to the various homes.

Of course the cars carried banners announcing what was going on and of course the newspapers gave the event due publicity, all of which made friends for the Million Dollar Grand and brought business for "The Faith Healer."

As for Manager Harris it looks like he was converted to exploitation and from now on Pittsburgh is on the exploitation map.

Big Time Prologue Staged in Small Sized Town

When it comes to staging big-time prologues despite the small town handicaps, full recognition must be paid to Clint Pedrick, managing director of the Belvedere theatre, Pomona, California, a city with a population of 12,250.

A prologue was staged for "Passion" that required two settings and six characters. The prologue was entitled "Vanity," and the first scene represented a woman's realization that she is not really beautiful and decides to call upon her maids to aid her. She paints, powders, and bedecks herself with finery, never ceasing in her dance, while her maids in waiting dance around her handing her cosmetics or a mirror until she finally emerges beautiful indeed. This scene takes place in a boudoir set.

Finally, cymbals crash, the music score reaches a double forte dramatic height and the stage is darkened for a second. Re-lighting finds a complete transformation. The second scene shows a throne room with "Vanity" enthroned and the "Devil" and the "King" engaged in a duel over her. The "Devil" wins and Vanity is reduced to her original ugliness and then beheaded.

Jackson's "Black Beauty" Campaign

Manager James F. Jackson, of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, recently played "Black Beauty" to a week's highly satisfactory business by making his play almost directly to children.

The picture was reviewed by the local branch of the "Better Films" society, and unanimously passed with glowing colors. So enthusiastic were the ladies of the society that each of them pledged herself to send everybody, especially the young folks, she knew to see the picture.

A beautiful coal black horse was used in a street ballyhoo, and cut-outs of Black Beauty, life-sized, were mounted on the marquee—three of them being used, one at either end and one in the center. Not a word or sign appeared on this cut-out, for it was found that the cut-out explained itself.

In the lobby, at the left, an old-fashioned boxstall was erected, with the upper half of the door swinging open, to reveal "Jessie" (a splendidly mounted cut-out from a twenty-four sheet).

Teacher's Objection to "The Kid" Capitalized

A little wrangle with the superintendent of a Clarinda (Iowa) public schools furnished S. O'Hare, manager of the Harland theatre, his exploitation cue for "The Kid."

The school teacher said "The Kid" wasn't fit to be seen and ordered Mr. O'Hare not to show it.

"What did I do?" says Mr. O'Hare. "Well, I appealed to the public through slides. First I ran this: 'It is the constant effort of the management of this theatre to run only wholesome and clean pictures.'

"The following night, I ran this slide: 'I have seen "The Kid" and do not find it objectionable in any scene.'

"The public began to clamor for the picture. But I kept up my appeal. Another night I ran this slide: 'Superintendent of schools told me not to show "The Kid."'

"Ah, two days later the superintendent came to me with a compromise to leave his name out of the affair of protest against the picture."

For further exploitation, Mr. O'Hare plastered the city and surrounding country with bill posters. A window display with a Chaplin and Jackie Coogan imitator doing a lot of hokum stunts was also used to advantage. The window was labeled "Chaplin's Day Nursery." It got a lot of attention from Clarinda theatregoers but the best exploitation was the straight laced school teacher's objections to the picture.

Roswell Introduced to Its First Prologue

Roswell, N. M., was introduced to its first prologue during the run of "The Testing Block," when Fred V. Greene, Paramount exploiter for the Denver district, arranged a simple but inexpensive musical program to precede the picture.

Mr. Greene used one of the stock exterior drops and foliage wings for a country scene. In the center of the stage he built a camp fire with timber, colored electric light globes, a small electric fan and flame-colored tissue paper.

Five little children were grouped about the "fire" and sang the refrain to "Darling Nellie Gray," the musical motive of the picture. A piano played the accompaniment, while a local violinist furnished the obligato. Explanatory slides were used before and after the program.

Chinese Set for "Tale of Two Worlds" Prologue

A Chinese set was built by Purl Wilkerson, presentation manager of the California theatre, Los Angeles, for the showing at that theatre of "A Tale of Two Worlds." The set was a beautiful and effective one, with paintings of birds and landscapes in the Oriental manner upon the backdrop. In the middle were windows through which the tall buildings of a city were glimpsed.

The Oriental prelude staged in front of this drop was called "Sui Sen's Birthday Party." The dramatic soprano, Carolyn Keller Carpenter, impersonated the Sui Sen of the photoplay and sang the Chinese lullaby from "East Is West." Five Chinese dancing girls participated in this prelude and aroused much enthusiasm by their dancing. This was followed by sleight of hand tricks by a Chinese magician and a danse eccentrique.

The prelude to "A Tale of Two Worlds" was much commented upon and certainly added to the entertainment value of the picture.

Artistic lobby decorations for "The Old Swimmin' Hole" originated by Ralph Winsor, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore.

Winsor Builds Artistic Lobby Display

Ralph Winsor, managing director of the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Oregon, put over something new in the way of lobby decorations recently when he constructed a miniature old mill and swimming hole set in his lobby as an exploitation device for "The Old Swimmin' Hole."

The novel little scene which was made mostly of papier mache, card board, stage grass, a few twigs, and plenty of glue was constructed about one of the large marble pillars in the foyer the week prior to the engagement of "The Old Swimmin' Hole." The sheer novelty of this art work attracted considerable attention and aided in stirring up interest in the picture.

Calvert Adopts New Policy for the "Short Shows"

Lowell W. Calvert, managing director of the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, and the State, Minneapolis, two of the finest Finkelstein & Ruben theatres, has adopted a unique plan for such performances at the two theatres at which the orchestras do not appear. Instead of merely dropping these numbers and shortening the show, Mr. Calvert used what he calls "extra reel" as a portion of the "Digest." This is always either a Chester Outing or a Screenic, which is released through Educational exchanges.

Mr. Calvert says that he finds that these scenic pictures are in especially great demand from business men and women who attend the two theatres either at the lunch or dinner hour. This extra reel is in addition to the regular scenic picture which is always on the bill at all performances at both theatres. For instance, last week the regular scenic at the Capitol was "An Angle in Idaho," a Screenic, and the "extra reel," "Hitting the High Spots," a Chester Outing. The previous week the scenic was "The Man Who Always Sat Down," first of the Robert C. Bruce European pictures, and a Screenic was used as the extra reel.

Both theatres use the same bill an entire week, it first being shown at the St. Paul house and the following week in Minneapolis. Elaborate musical scores are used with all the pictures, and by Mr. Calvert's plan those who attend when the orchestra is not playing really see more pictures than at the regular de luxe performances, which are given three times daily and four times on Sunday.

Personal Letter Idea Goes Over Again

"Mae Murray wrote him a letter," was the caption in bold face which the Des Moines (Iowa) Tribune used for a news story which included a fac simile reproduction of a letter written by the Paramount star to E. H. Helmts, manager of the Strand theatre of that city. During the run of "The Gilded Lily" at the Strand, Max Doolittle arranged for the letter, according to the time-honored plan, and the result was something that got a good story in the Tribune. Doolittle, who is an exploiter that belies his name, next assisted Mr. Helmts in effecting a window display tie-up with the largest Des Moines dry goods store.

Stills and the original letter were displayed. When the latter was first pasted up a few of the spectators inspected Miss Murray's chirography and remembered the stories in the newspapers. It caused no end of comment. Soon there was a steady throng outside of the window for the entire day. During the peak hours of noon and evening the police had to move the crowds along.

Local Ben Turpin Used at Baltimore

A local Ben Turpin helped Bernard A. Depkin, Jr., manager of Ford's theatre, Baltimore, exploit "A Small Town Idol."

Besides getting the most Ben Turpinish man to be had in Baltimore, Depkin exaggerated the man's crossed eyes with cardboard ringlets and then mounted him on a limp dilapidated horse that also was made to appear google-eyed. A little bit of paint on the cardboard did the work and while the man and horse dodged in and out of traffic, occasionally to the dismay of onlookers, no person walked by without looking twice. The stunt aided greatly in putting across the picture big.

Ballet Number Presented as "Passion" Prologuee

The stage setting which Lowell V. Calvert, managing director of the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, designed for a ballet number which served as a prologue to "Passion" is shown herewith.

Mlle. Desha presented the dancing numbers in this prologue. The three striking episodes in the life of Madame DuBarry were used as a theme.

The parted curtains revealed Desha bathed in scarlet light, dancing before the candelabra. This first dance was the "Dance of Passion," and concluded with the snuffing of one candle, depicting the death of the King.

The second dance was called the "Dance of Love," and the dancer worked in a deep blue light, her dancing subdued from the mad whirl of the previous dance, and ended with the snuffing of a second candle, indicative of the tragic end of Armand.

The third dance was the "Dance of Death," in which the dancer appeared shrouded in black, with but a tiny point of white light playing on her features from one side, and a deep scarlet light from the other. Slowly her movements grew less passionate, and the light faded, and she dropped dead at the foot of the candelabra, the last candle goes out, and leaves the stage in total darkness.

The number closed with a rosy light creeping from the floor to the top of the back drop, depicting the dawn of a new France, while the orchestra and grand organ broke into the thrilling strain of the "Marseillaise."

"Black Beauty" Drawings Go Over Big

The now famous drawing stunt for "Black Beauty" was put over by George M. Krupa when this picture played the Hamilton theatre, Lancaster, Pa. Mr. Krupa offered six cash prizes ranging from $20 to $5 for the best drawings of "Black Beauty" and over a hundred competitors were entered. Many of the drawings submitted showed that much time and effort had been expended on them, and the winners, as shown by the accompanying cut, proved that they were clever artists. The stunt brought great returns for the Hamilton.

New Company to Make Gene Porter Novels

A NEW company, International Higher Culture Films, Inc., has recently been formed, with offices in the Union League Building, Los Angeles, for the purpose of producing the novels of Gene Stratton Porter. Production will start shortly with "Michael O'Halloran" and follow with "The Harvester." Mrs. Porter will be associated with the company and three pictures will be made each year. The company will produce at Brunton's.

A. L. Tull and R. S. Marsh, formerly of the Elgin Motor Car Corporation, are associated with the company as president and vice president respectively, and G. B. Stearns, assistant valuation engineer of the Santa Fe Railroad, is the treasurer. James S. Lawshe will represent Mrs. Porter's interests in the board of directors. Captain S. J. Bingham is engaging the production force of the best talent that can be procured. Joe August, A. S. C., who has photographed every William S. Hart picture that star has produced, is to be the chief cameraman.

Cliff Smith Organizes Producing Unit

A new independent producing unit has been formed in Los Angeles known as Cliff Smith Productions which plans to make and release to independent exchanges a series of eight 5 reel Western Subjects featuring Pete Morrison and Rita Royce. Cliff Smith is one of the best known Western Directors, having been credited with directing productions starring William S. Hart, Tom Mix, Texas Guinan, Edith Sterling, Roy Stewart and others. The company is now working on first production. C. O'D Blanchfield is in charge of sales and the business management of the company.

"When Dawn Came" in Los Angeles

"When Dawn Came," the Hugh Dierker production offered on the independent market by Producers Security Co., of New York, received its premiers on the West Coast on April 25th, when it opened at the Trinity Auditorium in Los Angeles.

An elaborate prologue is being staged in connection with the picture.

Urban Prepares New Series

New Kineto Reviews to Be Made Up of Famous LaFontaine Fables

CHARLES URBAN is rapidly getting ready a series of Kineto Reviews, which, according to reports, will be one of the most remarkable sets of film literature that has ever been translated to the screen from the classics of literature.

It will be a series of 20 reels, all embraced under the title "Modern Truths from Old Fables." The idea and the basis of the series are the old fables of La Fontaine, fables which have been read for several hundred years by children and grown folks all over the world.

Mr. Urban and Raymond L. Ditmars, of the New York Zoological Society, are co-operating in preparing the screen versions of the Fables. The actors are all animals, as, of course, they were in the text. They portray humor and tragedy, they mimic and originate, and they apparently have all the resourcefulness of many great stars. The photographing of the animals is all being done by Mr. Ditmars in his nature's laboratory out at the Zoo, and Mr. Urban personally is editing them. The titles are largely from La Fontaine himself.

Besides the rare beauty and interest of these Fables in motion pictures, there will, it is claimed, be several other distinct advantages to the exhibitor.

In the first place, their unusual appeal to children will create a patronage for the theatre that will draw the whole family. There is a quality about the fables from La Fontaine that will cause their endorsement by school teachers, clergymen and all organizations which have a particular interest in the child.

And, further, taken as they are from classics which have been pronounced incomparable for almost 300 years, they give to the motion picture theatre a defense that is most valuable in countering the attacks of people who would throttle it.

"Modern Truths from Old Fables" also bear out the contention of the proponents of the motion picture who have been saying that in time the movies would extend their field to the finest sort of classic entertainment.

Franklyn Farnum to Be Starred; Al Hart and Hamilton in Cast

THE actual construction of a mammoth studio building was begun at Tulsa, Okla., recently for the W. M. Smith Productions Inc., who will shortly make and release a series of eight western screen productions starring Franklyn Farnum and a cast including the names of "Shorty" Hamilton and Al Hart.

Several acres of land have been secured on the Sand Spring's Inter-urban line and every foot of the ground will be utilized for the shooting of scenes. It is planned to have a miniature city built near the studio and already there is a big demand for lots upon which homes will be built.

The W. M. Smith Productions Inc., plan to begin work on or about May 15, at which time the entire personnel of the company will have assembled in Tulsa. Mr. Farnum is expected to arrive here about May 10 and will confer with George Holt, who will have complete charge of the directing of all the plays.

The first three stories to be filmed by the W. M. Smith organization are "The White Masks," "The Trails End" and "Crossroads." Each production will be staged elaborately, complete even to the most exacting detail.

Franklyn Farnum is probably one of the best known western stars appearing on the screen. His vast popularity did not come about in a day or a week, but his irresistible personality plus a talent that denotes the artistry in his every effort has given him a place in the motion picture world that is said to be unequaled.

"Shorty" Hamilton is known throughout America for his humorous versatility, and it is anticipated by the producers of the Smith releases that Mr. Hamilton will go a long way in making these pictures popular.

Al Hart who starred in the Westart series of western plays will be a featured member of the cast.

The first picture will be released about July 15.

"Screen Snapshots" Has First Birthday

WITH issue Number 26 of Screen Snapshots, which is now being edited and titled for release during the coming week, is rounded out the first year's output on this single-reel novelty release.

Known as "the fan magazine of the screen," and produced by Jack Cohn and Louis Lewyn, Screen Snapshots has, according to Mr. Cohn, established itself as being "what the fans want."

During the past year, Screen Snapshots has showed to the public 339 luminaries of the screen—each one a star, or a director of the first rank. This number, in 26 issues, makes an average of 13 stars to an issue, including every player who has won fame of any description on the silversheet.

"Britain's Palaces" Is New Kineto Review

"Britain's Palaces," a Kineto Review is at the Rialto Theatre in New York this week.

In addition to the pure beauty of its contents, this reel is said to be of especial historical value, for the ages of English history are pretty well expressed in English architecture and the titles take care to point out the significance of all the scenes.

Weis to Handle Northwestern Product

John E. Maple, of the Northwestern Film Corporation, of Sheridan, Wyo., has just completed arrangements with Harry Weiss of Superior Screen Service, Chicago, to handle the sale of the five-reel Western feature just completed by Northwestern.

Mr. Maple states that the scenes were laid in Montana and Wyoming and that the river, forests and Big Horn mountains, where the picture was made, furnishes an unusual variety of beautiful locations, and that the story, written by Caroline Lockhart, the author of "The Fighting Shepherdess," and many other screen successes, is of intense interest.

Goulding to Direct for Pacific Film Co.

The act of taking possession of its new studio plant by the Pacific Film Company recently was the signal for the start of production of an elaborate program.

Manager John J. Hayes announced that he had signed a contract whereby Alf Goulding will become director general. Goulding comes from Pathe, where he has been successful in directing Harry Lloyd and Snub Pollard. Under his new contract with the Pacific it is said that Goulding will receive the highest salary paid to any director in the field of independent producers. Starting upon the new schedule at least one White Cap comedy will be released weekly throughout a twelve-month period.

To Announce Callahan Comedies Shortly

Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market Inc., which will release the new series of Callahan comedies now in production at Atlantic City, N. J., states that he will announce the names of these comedies within the next two weeks.

"Hush" Scores on Broadway

Clara Kimball Young Draws Well During Run at Capitol Theatre

WINNING its way into the country's largest and most beautiful picture palace as the first independent production to be accepted on its roster, "Hush," the fifth Clara Kimball Young production completed its week-run at the Capitol theatre on April 29th. with a creditable box-office showing. For seven days of continual performance, with four turnovers a day in a theatre seating 5,000, the Equity release pleased huge audiences.

For a year Miss Young's vehicles met the fate that is the lot of other independent releases—it could not find an open date at a Broadway first-run theatre. Though admitting the value of her vehicles, the Broadway houses were so crowded with bookings that no vacancy was available. Throughout the year Clara Kimball Young was absent from the Gay White Way. The public had a year in which to forget her triumph in "The Eyes of Youth" and "The Forbidden Woman," the last two productions to have first runs in the metropolis. Evidently the devotees of the Equity star were merely watchfully waiting for her return and saving their ovation for her reappearance. The Capitol showing of "Hush" proved that Clara Kimball Young is welcome on Broadway at any time and that absence makes the heart grow fonder.

The usual opposition that "Hush" has encountered in its first runs throughout the country held sway in New York, too. The Strand, a few blocks away, heralded the personal appearance of Jackie Coogan in company with his starring vehicle, "Peck's Bad Boy." At the Rivoli "Deception," billed on posters and newspapers broadcast, ran a crowded second week, and "Fatty" Arbuckle and a Charlie Chaplin revival besought patronage at the Rialto.

The prologue arranged by S. L. Rothapfel in charge of presentation at the Capitol, was a fitting prelude to the picture. An overture by the orchestra and a striking ballet suggestive of the title, "Hush," headed the program, and was followed by an Oriental cycle of vocal selections that prepared the audience for the mood of the picture. The ballad "Hush" was sung immediately before the screening and was eminently well chosen. So effective was the Capitol showing that many exhibitors and exchangemen who attended it confessed that the picture exceeded their own high opinion of it previously entertained in its artistic surroundings.

The advertising campaign of Nat Rothstein in newspapers and subway stands was also effective in announcing the coming of the picture. Considerable attention was aroused locally by the artistic arrangement of the advance announcements. The cut of Miss Young showing her index finger at her lips won general commendation.

Kraft Leaves Equity

William M. Kraft, director of sales promotion for Equity and Joan Pictures for the past year, has severed his connection with that company and reports that he will handle some releases of independent producers for the state right market.

While with Equity Mr. Kraft assisted Nat Rothstein in preparing press books and did considerable sales work on "She Played and Paid," "Whispering Devils," "The Invisible Ray" and the Billy West Comedies. Mr. Kraft will have his offices at 1664 Broadway.

New Town and Country Series for Arrow

A NEW contract was closed this week between W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, and Jack Eaton, president of Town and Country Films, Inc., for a new series of popular Sport Pictorial releases and for an alternating release to be known tentatively, as "Humor Graphic." Some other suitable brand name for this unit may be selected later.

The "Humor Graphic," as it is known at present, is said to be something new in the way of feature fillers and the nature of the subject matter has not yet been divulged by Arrow.

Initial Cummings Picture Announced

Following closely upon the heels of the bare announcement that Irving Cummings would appear in a series of two-reel dramatic stories of Canadian Northwest Police Life, the Producers Security Corporation reports that it is flooded with requests from exhibitors to tell them more about the forthcoming "tabloid super-features."

The Cummings series is a brand new series, with Cummings taking a company of players into the wilds of Canada to give each subject perfect atmosphere. The initial subject will be entitled "On The Trail" and it runs an exciting gamut of thrills with Cummings playing the role of an officer of the mounted police.

The stories are original, with each subject carrying a complete narrative. In each Cummings as Corporal Campbell, the dashing mounted trooper, handles the lead.

Associated Photo-Plays Have Morrison Series

ARRANGEMENTS were made in Los Angeles on May 3 by which the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., of New York City will release the series of eight pictures starring Pete Morrison.

The Cliff Smith Productions, builders of the Morrison series, and Victor B. Fisher, general manager of Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., today signed the contracts by which Associated will release the entire Morrison output from the Cliff Smith studios.

The first of the series is ready, and Mr. Fisher, who will leave for New York in a few days, will bring with him the negative of the first picture.

At the New York offices of Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., it was stated that Mr. Fisher, in addition to bringing with him the negative of the first Morrison picture, would also have the negative of "The Wolverine," the first of the Spencer Productions, Inc., productions, starring Helen Gibson, to be released by Associated.

Vic Potel Returning in Comedy Series

Victor Potel, who is remembered for his brilliant work as Slippery Slim in the old Essanay "Snakeville" Comedies, is returning to the screen in fun films of the same type that gained for him so great an amount of popularity with exhibitors and the picture public while he was with Essanay.

The comedian recently entered into a long-term contract with Webster Cullison, whereby he will portray the title role in Ellis Parker Butler's popular magazine stories "Philo Gubb, the Correspondence School Deteckative."

Surrounding Potel is a cast of considerable note. Including Otis Harlan, Dorothea Wolbert and Harry Todd. Others who will be seen in the Gubb stories include Ernest Shields, Mark Hamilton, Howard Crampton and May Foster.

Several Additions to Reelcraft Units

Ollie Mack, long-time team mate of Charley Murry and known to the vaudeville audiences throughout the world as Murry and Mack, has joined the Sun-Lite Comedy unit, producing two-reel comedies for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

Nancy Deavers has joined the Aladdin Comedy unit as leading lady in support of Bud Duncan, the diminutive comedian.

Joseph Baisel, long associated with Larry Seamon as assistant and continuity writer, has joined the Shiller staff and will supply stories and co-direct with one of the units. William Gilbert, one of the original Keystone Cops, is also working in the Aladdin series.

Forms Chain of Exchanges

Forward Film Exchange of N. Y. Is First Link in Sameth's Chain

THE Forward Film Exchange, Inc., the first of the chain of independent exchanges to be operated throughout the United States by the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., has been opened in New York for northern New Jersey and New York State. J. Joseph Sameth, president of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., in announcing the opening of the New York exchange, declared that the first of the chain was but a forerunner of what might be expected from Forward within a very short time.

Samuel Freund, who established himself in the industry by his work with Paramount, Goldwyn and other companies, is manager of the New York Exchange. Joseph Joel, "of high prize fame," will assist him.

The "Shadow," starring Muriel Ostriche, written and directed by J. Charles Davis 2nd, and "Hearts O' the Range," are the first two offerings the new exchange will handle. Mr. Sameth in addition to securing the distribution rights of the Ostriche series made by Salient Film, Inc., has plans under way by which a complete yearly program will be mapped out.

"Weeks ago, I stated that there is no such thing as depression in the motion picture industry," said Mr. Sameth. "To further prove my assertions, I am opening my exchanges when all others are declaring that the time is not ripe. I contend that the right pictures marketed in a businesslike manner will be saleable at any time.

"I have three men making a survey of the United States at the present time and within a very few weeks I shall announce the opening of additional exchanges and I will leave nothing undone to organize a chain of exchanges that will be a credit to the producer, the film and the distributor."

Levey With New Exchange

System to Cover Non-Theatrical Field; Offices in 15 Key Cities

A NEW organization has been formed called National Non-theatrical Motion Picture Exchanges, Inc., to distribute motion pictures over the non-theatrical field which includes schools, churches, clubs, lodges, industrial plants, etc. This company, of which Harry Levey, well-known in the industry as a producer of industrial films, has been elected president, will distribute dramas, comedies, educational and instructive pictures.

National Non-theatrical Motion Pictures Exchanges, Inc., are establishing exchanges in Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Washington, Atlanta, Dallas, Chicago, Omaha, Denver, St. Louis, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Salt Lake City, from which key-cities sub-stations will be conducted. The exchanges will be operated under the management of local men who are experienced in the non-theatrical field.

The first release will consist of over four hundred films which will be placed in these exchanges where they will be at the disposal of non-theatrical subscribers. The educational pictures have been produced with the co-operation and in line with the school systems for the purpose of developing courses of visual education. It is conceded that the motion picture is one of the greatest aids to modern education. Mr. Levey has no hesitancy in saying that the non-theatrical field will eventually become larger than the theatrical field.

The exchanges will have completely organized plans for special film service to Institutions, Public Libraries, fraternities, societies, and federations devoloping the field and market for home motion picture machines, establishing central film libraries, film encyclopedias, film histories and film books of knowledge without competing with the theatre.

Big Business Reported on New Wed Series

New Wed Comedy series, featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry Myers, is meeting with success throughout the country, is said to be borne out by the reports reaching the Dominant Pictures, Inc. the distributers, from independent exchanges, exhibitors and other sources.

It is seldom that short subjects can boast of stars of the magnitude of Theby and Myers and at the time when these players are heavily featured in a production of the calibre of "A Connecticut Yankee."

First Broadway Comedy Ready for Release

The Arrow Film Corporation announces this week that the first release of the series of twelve new Broadway comedies which they are handling in the independent field is entitled "His Hansom Butler," featuring Harry Cribbon, Eddie Barry and Helen Darling, former well known players in the Christie Comedies.

The second of this series is entitled "A Designing Husband" and is now being completed at the West Coast studio.

Work has been started on the production of the third release.

Cullison Planning Four Unit Organization

With a series of two-reel comedies now in production at the Francis Ford studios in Hollywood, Cal., negotiations are being made by General Manager Cullison, erstwhile director and studio executive, whereby three new units will soon be added to his organization.

To accomodate the production activity of the different companies, Cullison has already ac quired an option on a large lot in Hollywood, where, it is stated, he intends to erect his own studios in the near future or as soon as a working staff has been assembled and all details pertaining to the various stories arranged.

Western dramas, comedies, educational and scenic pictures will be the output of Cullison's organization, it is announced.

Aywon Short Subjects Offered to Trade

Now that Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, has closed considerable territory on his feature production, "The Lure of the Orient," he has turned his attention to the marketing of fifteen two-reel comedies starring the well-known Jimmy Aubrey and a series of six Diamond Dot Western thrillers of five reels each.

"Hush" Runs Two Weeks in Baltimore

"Hush," the fifth Clara Kimball Young production released by Equity Pictures Corp. is running for a second week at the Blue Mouse theatre, one of Baltimore's Largest screen theatres. This makes a total of eighteen first-run houses of different cities who have booked "Hush" for double its original run.

Paglin-Davidson Move

Paglin-Davidson announce the removal of their offices from 1393 Broadway to 130 West 46th Street. In order to be nearer the motion picture district due to their buying activities as state right buyers they have moved closer to the trade offices.

Callahan's Leading Lady

Lottie Kendall, Playing in New Comedy Series, Experienced Player

LOTTIE KENDALL, who is playing principal roles in support of Jimmy Callahan in his new series of 26 two-reel comedies, has a national reputation as a light opera and musical comedy star. She began her stage career when but fifteen years of age. Her progress was remarkably rapid, due to her beauty, voice, dramatic ability and extraordinary stage personality. Before she was twenty years of age she headed her own company of 104 people and had a repertoire of 140 musical productions. This repertoire included the light operas of Gilbert and Sullivan and all the leading musical comedy successes as they were released for stock and repertoire representation.

She made her headquarters in New Orleans during one half the year and in Los Angeles and San Francisco the other half, playing all the principal cities in the South, the South West and on the Pacific Coast.

In New York she played in "Veronique" and other notable productions presented by the Shuberts, and on tour played the widow in the "Prince of Pilsen," presented by Henry W. Savage. She then joined A. H. Woods and played the leading roles in his Potash and Perlmutter productions. Last season she played in Harry Frazee's presentation of "My Lady Friends" with Carlyle Blackwell.

Recognizing her ability and motion picture possibilities, Robert W. Priest, of the Film Market, Inc., had signed a contract with Miss Kendall to present her in motion pictures. When he became affiliated with Mr. Callahan, he transferred his contract with Miss Kendall to the Callahan Film Corporation.

THE following sales on the independent market were reported during the week:

Four James Oliver Curwood productions (Arrow Film) to David Mundstuk, of the Strand Features, Inc., of Detroit, Mich.

Eight Jack Hoxie features (Arrow Film) to the Strand Features, Inc., of Detroit, Mich.

"The Stranger in Canyon Valley" (Arrow Film) to the Strand Features, Inc., of Detroit, Mich.

"Headin' North" (Arrow Film) to the Strand Features, Inc., of Detroit, Mich.

"Bitter Fruit" (Arrow Film) to Lightning Photoplays Co., of Boston for New England.

"The Man Who Trifled" (Arrow Film) to Lightning Photoplays Co., of Boston, for New England.

Second Series of Jack Hoxie features (Arrow Film) to Lightning Photoplays Co., for New England.

"Diana of Star Hollow" (Producers Security Corp.) to Warner Brothers Film Exchange for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

"Whispering Devils" (Equity Pictures Corp.) to C. O. Brokaw, of Merit Films, of Detroit, for Michigan.

"Every Woman's Problem" (Plymouth Pictures, Inc.) to J. E. Dunne, for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

"Dangerous Love" (C. B. C. Film Sales) to the Standard Film Company of Cleveland, O., for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

Censor-Proof Productions

Marion Fairfax, New Producer, to Avoid Sordid Sensationalism

MARION FAIRFAX, noted dramatist and screen author who recently formed her own producing company, announces that the aim of her organization is the production of censor-proof films. Miss Fairfax has written various popular Broadway plays and has personally staged a number of these productions.

In discussing the policy of her own company and the possibility of such a thing as a censor-proof picture, Miss Fairfax said: "I believe there is such a thing as censor-proof films and with the production of "The Lying Truth" and other Marion Fairfax Productions, I am endeavoring to realize my belief.

"Sex appeal has never been the vital element in either my stage or my screen plays. There are greater things than this that appeal not only to the sophisticated but to all persons who are human and of average intelligence.

"The question has often been asked me, can a story be clean and yet have the punch? Decidedly so! Sex appeal is only one of many human emotions. Even some of the most sensational of such situations can be handled in such a way as to make them inoffensive but the best method, particularly at this time, is to eliminate them.

"The motion picture industry is no weaker nor stronger than any other enterprise that paints life as we find it. In all forms of art we find the sensationally extreme, playing on the sex appeal. It is only because of the tremendous power, the globe encircling popularity of this great art that the paid reformers and publicity-seeking individuals single out the motion picture and make it their lucrative object of attack.

"I am trying to present on the screen the 'why' instead of the 'what.' In other words, it is my desire to avoid the by-ways of uncalled for sensationalism and try to stick to the straight road of reasonable dramatic construction leading up to natural punches that will register effectively for the simple reason that they offer in the minds of everyone an intimate part of the story itself and because they are dramatic and yet logical."

Film Market Moves to Larger Quarters

Robert W. Priest has leased space in the Fitzgerald Building in New York for the executive offices of The Film Market, Inc. The new quarters are large and commodious.

The growth of Mr. Priest's business has been so remarkable that it became necessary to acquire larger quarters than were available in the Times Building, where Mr. Priest has had his offices for the past seven years.

In addition to "The Supreme Passion," which Mr. Priest is distributing on the state rights plan, he is releasing, state rights, twenty-six two-reel comedies starring Jimmy Callahan and featuring Florence Dixon, star of "The Supreme Passion" and Lottie Kendall, an Al. H. Wood's star. Mr. Priest also is releasing the revised version of Rex Beach's novel-movie, "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

First Neva Gerber Release Soon

Prints of the first of the Neva Gerber series "A Yankee Go-Getter" being distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation, are being made by the Lyman Howe Laboratories, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Lack of space prevents publication in full this week of the story of the use of Synchronized Music Scores at the Astor. The story will appear next week.

More Allene Ray Westerns

Bert Lubin Heads New Company; Production to Start This Week

IT was announced early this week that Bert Lubin has been made president and general manager of the newly formed Western Pictures Corporation and that this company would commence work immediately on a series of semi-western society dramas.

Allene Ray, featured in Bert Lubin's previous offerings, "Honeymoon Ranch" and "West of the Rio Grande" and who rose to stardom through winning the Dame and Fortune Contest has been signed to a long term contract by Lubin and will be starred in this new series.

She will be supported by exceptional casts in each of the series. Robin Townley who directed her in her previous pictures will wield the megaphone on this series and is already picking locations for the first picture.

Lubin will sail immediately for San Antonio where the initial production will be made. He has announced that care would be taken to insure against the censorship problem in the making of the pictures, something which has been overlooked in western pictures heretofore.

"It may be surprising to some film folk" stated Mr. Lubin "that at a time when other companies are shutting down on production I am going ahead on a new series. It is only a case of taking advantage of very unusual conditions to put over something really big in program pictures. I am going to take advantage of the drop in prices of studio facilities, extras, and make pictures which would otherwise have been impossible for the regular program under ordinary conditions.

"The Western Pictures Corporation will buy only carefully selected stories, secure the best continuity writers and provide Allene Ray with support on a par with the very highest priced production casts.

"Full confirmation of this will be made when I announce the initial production and cast already under contract. Production will start on May 9th. The other five pictures will follow on scheduled time.

Three Federated Features

"Hearts and Masks" Is Latest Addition to Growing Program

THREE features and a super-animal production on the list of releases of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., have been completed already, and will be released shortly. This releasing activity, it is announced, will be continued for the next twelve months. In addition to the longer pictures, three comedies of two reels each, have been finished for Federated distribution through the twenty-two exchanges of the organization.

"Hearts and Masks," a Federated production of the famous novel by Harold McGrath, is the latest addition to the growing list of all-star Federated features. Elinor Field heads the capable cast, supported by Francis McDonald, Lloyd Bacon, John Cossar and Molly McConnell.

Other features in the Federated program are: "Penny of Top Hill Trail," starring Bessie Love, and "Dangerous Toys," featuring William Desmond. There is also the Warner Brothers' production, "Miracles of the Jungle," and three Hallroom Boys' comedies, featuring Sid Smith.

open territory

JOAN FILM SALES CO. has open terri-

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

A scene from the new Pearl White feature, "Beyond Price," released by Fox

Child Actress Praised by Albert Capellani

Rita Rogan, who takes one of the most important parts in Cosmopolitan Productions' "The Wild Goose" that a child actress has ever taken for the screen, is a five-year-old girl. "The Wild Goose" is a screen adaptation of Gouverneur Morris' novel and is scheduled for an early release through Paramount. Albert Capellani directed the picture.

Capellani commented on the acting of Miss Rogan as follows:

"Her acting is simply remarkable. I never expected to direct a child possessing such skill and intellectual power. She is amazingly quick to grasp and depict the import of situations and has a remarkable power to act them in the most natural way."

To Surpass Even "Lying Lips" Says Ince

"Mother O' Mine" has been scheduled for release on June 5th by Associated Producers. The picture is said to present a powerful argument against capital punishment and to handle the question in a most logical and convincing manner. It has been dramatized by C. Gardner Sullivan from the novel "The Octupus" by Charles Belmont Davis.

Thomas H. Ince writes as follows to General Manager Al Lichtman concerning this production:

"I am altogether sincere and emphatic in the opinion that it is a truly wonderful story and production, most assuredly measuring up to 'Lying Lips" in its commercial value, and going even ahead in the humanness and poignant appeal of its most timely story."

Fred Niblo directed the production under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince. The cast includes Lloyd Hughes, Betty Blythe, Joseph Kilgour, Betty Ross Clarke, Claire McDowell, Andrew Robson, and Andrew Arbuckle.

Educational Reports Representation in 90% of Theatres

STARTING with May 1, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announced that it was represented in fully ninety per cent of the theatres of the United States and Canada, and that in a greater portion of these houses the product of the company was shown every day during the entire week. This considerably exceeds the mark set for the drive, it is announced by the home office.

"Every print working every day" was the slogan used through the drive, and, though reports have not been received by the home office from every exchange, indications are that this has been realized. Not only were all the current releases used, but in many cases, it is stated, branches called on the home office for additional prints of older releases which had not been shown in certain territories.

Fourteen of the exchanges had already set the record of Educational pictures at every first-run theatre in their cities for as long as a week, and so in these cases it was difficult to break this record, but in each case this was accomplished by the exhibition of two or more pictures in the same theatres, it is declared. In many cases as many as three pictures are reported to have been used, and in a score of instances in principal cities first-run houses are said to have observed Educational's trade message: "Everything for the theatre except the feature." This included one and two-reel comedies, scenics, specials and Kinograms.

In New York the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" was being shown at the Capitol and "Deception" held for a third week at the Rivoli prevented the use of any other pictures at these houses. At the Rialto theatre, "As Old As the Hills," a Bruce Scenic, and "The One Best Pet," a Chester comedy, are being used. At the Strand, Johnny Hines is appearing in "Torchy's Big Lead," and the Brooklyn Strand is using "Torchy Mixes In" and "Water Trails," a Bruce Scenic. The Loew theatres are playing "Back From the Front," a Christie comedy, and "April Fool," a Mermaid, featuring Lloyd Hamilton.

Franchise for Shea Houses

Ass'd Exhibitors' Franchise Has Been Acquired by Buffalo Concern

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, general manager of the Shea Amusement Company, has announced on behalf of the organization that the Associated Exhibitors franchise has been acquired for the Hippodrome and the Court theatres in Buffalo. In making this announcement Mr. Franklin's company joins with Sam Harding, of Kansas City, and Paul Guadanovic, of Cleveland, in allying themselves with the reorganized company. All three exhibitor interests were represented in the pioneer organization out of which the present franchise plans of Associated has been evolved.

"The Shea Amusement Company is typical of the calibre of exhibitor corporations which have been invited to join Associated, and we are glad to have men and organizations of that character holding our first run franchises in important centers," Mr. Phil L. Ryan, manager of franchises of Associated, said when announcement of the conclusion of negotiations was made.

"The Hippodrome is one of the finest theatres in the East, and under Mr. Franklin's management it has achieved a great reputation for the quality of the entertainment presented there. The production policy of Associated Exhibitors for the coming year is so well known and understood by Mr. Franklin that his selection of our picture for the theatres he manages is a compliment and an assurance to other big exhibitors.

"This franchise given Mr. Franklin the Associated series of Harold Lloyd comedies, the first of which, 'Now or Never,' is making a great impression in the big theatres in the country. It also assures his priority rights on 'The Rider of the King Log,' the big Holman Day special, which, we believe, is the equal of any picture released in the past year. We are arranging for other big pictures which will also be available under the franchise."

American Film Announces Two Releases

The American Film Company announces two more of its reconstructed features for early release. "High-Gear Jeffrey," with William Russell, adapted from the original "The Frame-Up" is one, and "Youth's Melting Pot," with Mary Miles Minter, adapted from "Youth's Endearing Charm," is the other.

Both of these productions have been newly titled, it is announced, and some very fine paper has been prepared for them. The new music cues provide for proper musical atmosphere.

Heavy bookings are reported by American Film on the former releases of these reconstructed features.

Ben Turpin Is Made a Star by Sennett

AN announcement from the headquarters of Associated Producers declares that Ben Turpin, as a result of his fine work in the leading role of "A Small Town Idol," has been elevated to stardom by Mack Sennett. His comedy acting in this Associated Producers release received liberal praise from the critics throughout the country.

The first production which will launch Turpin as a star is "Love's Outcast," a multiple reel comedy, which will be shortly released by Associated Producers, Inc., at a date to be announced later. He will be surrounded by a cast of players of the usual Sennett quality.

A. S. Kane Carrying Out Big Plan on Coast

REPORTS from Los Angeles indicate that the important production plans formulated upon the reorganization of the Associated Exhibitors are being successfully effected by Mr. Arthur S. Kane, chairman of the board of directors of Associated, who is now on the Coast. No official statement giving details has been given out by Mr. Kane or forwarded to the office of the company in New York, but it is reported that negotiations involving the services of two big stars and two directors are under way.

Aside from these negotiations Mr. Kane has arranged for the distribution by Associated of several pictures already completed. Announcement of the release of some of these will come in the early summer, but the productions with stars and directors in series of pictures will not be available until early fall.

Hines Will Do Feature Length Comedy

According to advices from the Master Films headquarters, Johnny Hines, the featured player of the "Torchy" comedies, released by Educational Films, is about to enter the feature-comedy field. Mr. Hines is said to have been awaiting for some time a story of proper character and a director of the right calibre to enable him to branch out into comedies of feature length. Ray Schrock has supplied the story, it is stated, and while the name of the director is not announced he is said to have been engaged and to be now on his way from the Coast. Mr. Hines states that his company will soon be three months ahead of the "Torchy" release schedule and that practically the entire summer will be devoted to the feature.

Chandlee and Laub Edit Sixth World Feature

Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub have just completed the final scene assembly and subtitles for "Suspicious Wives," the last of six special features for World Film Corporation.

CLEVER!!!

"Reputation" Is Given Premier

Large Crowd Attends Showing at Astor Hotel, New York

THE New York premiere of "Reputation," the new Universal-Jewel productions starring Priscilla Dean, was held last Monday afternoon in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor, before a large audience of newspaper and trade paper representatives, prominent figures in the New York film world, and exhibitors from the New York territory.

The presentation was strictly an invitation affair. It was accompanied by a colorful prologue which sounded the keynote of the picture and by other happily chosen exploitation effects calculated to show the visiting exhibitors the value of certain simple and atmospheric methods of enhancing the showing of the feature.

It is understood that the Hotel Astor showing takes the place of a regular Broadway showing for the Dean picture, although Universal officials say there is great possibility that a theatre will be engaged in the near future for an indefinite run of the production on Broadway.

Upon arriving at the hotel Monday afternoon the guests were met by a bevy of pretty girls garbed in costumes of the Louis XV period, with ruffled gowns and powdered wigs. This costume was in keeping with a sequence of the picture in which Priscilla enacts several scenes from a period play. The Louis XV usherettes gave a colorful atmosphere to the presentation.

An orchestra of twenty-seven pieces, led by James C. Bradford, who prepared the musical score for the picture, accompanied the showing. The music was of especial interest because of its adaptation to the rapid changes and vivid contrasts of the photoplay.

Neither Miss Dean nor the director, Stuart Paton, was present at the showing. Miss Dean is already at work on her next picture, "Conflict," and could not leave Universal City, Cal. Mr. Paton is preparing a new Universal-Jewel for production. One of the boxes at the showing, however, contained the authoress, Edwina Levin, and her guests. "Reputation" was adapted by Lucien Hubbard, Universal's West Coast scenario chief, from Miss Levin's novel, "False Colors." Niles Welch, who plays the principal supporting role to Miss Dean in "Reputation," also was at the showing.

Universal reports that "Reputation" already is booked in many key cities throughout the United States. It was released in all parts of the country on the day of the New York showing, all prints having been made in California and shipped directly to the various exchanges in advance.

Universal's exploitation department, which for the past several months has concentrated its efforts on Miss Dean's previous photodrama, "Outside the Law," will immediately start a nation-wide drive to popularize that star in "Reputation." It is expected that by summer the new Universal-Jewel will have been shown in every big city in the United States and Canada.

Campaign for "Wonder Man"

Dempsey - Carpentier Bout to Be Taken Advantage Of

WITH this country and Europe astir over the coming battle for the heavyweight championship of the world between Jack Dempsey and Georges Carpentier, the Robertson-Cole Company has launched a campaign among its salesmen as a spur to booking "The Wonder Man," in which the French pugilist made his screen debut several months ago. The competition is open to all the salesmen attached to the company's 24 branches.

According to the Robertson-Cole announcement, a ticket for a ringside seat at the big battle, together with transportation to Jersey City, N. J., where the match will take place, will be given to each of the two salesmen who obtain the greatest number of contracts for the showing of the Carpentier production between now and June 25th, when the competition ends. In addition the Robertson-Cole Company will pay the hotel expenses of the winners while they are visiting in New York, it is announced.

Charles R. Rogers, general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, arranged the competition before he left the home office on a trip to the Los Angeles Studio.

"The Wonder Man," according to Mr. Rogers, is of particular interest at this time because it depicts with considerable footage the boxing skill of the poilu champion. In the big scenes in which Carpentier encounters a combative young clubman and whips him after a gruelling battle, the French titleholder is fully extended. He unlimbers the attacking batteries Dempsey will face in the arena at Boyle's Acres on July 2nd and showers blow after blow upon his reeling adversary. In the early stages of the match in which he sustains severe punishment. Carpentier shows his marvelous defensive skill. His footwork, too, is the footwork of the ring at its very best. He shows also his flying attack, in which he leaps from the canvas and sends his right crashing to his opponent's jaw. Besides the fistic skill of the French idol, "The Wonder Man" unreels an engrossing story in which romance blends with the free and easy life of the clubroom, the prize ring and the training quarters, all of which is particularly timely with the "battle of the century" approaching.

Two Paramount Releases Set for May 8

THE PARAMOUNT releases for May 8 are the Cosmopolitan production, "Proxies," and Dorothy Dalton in "The Idol of the North."

"Proxies" was directed by George D. Baker, one of the best known of Cosmopolitan's directors, working from his own scenario based upon the original story by Frank R. and Leslie Adams, which ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Norman Kerry has the leading male role, while playing opposite him is Zena Keefe. Others in the cast are Raye Dean, Jack Crosby, Paul Everton and William H. Tooker.

In "The Idol of the North," which was directed by R. William Neill, Dorothy Dalton returns to the type of Western role that made her widely popular. The story was adapted by Frank Beresford from an original by J. Clarkson Miller. Miss Dalton's leading man is Edwin August, and E. J. Ratcliffe, Riley Hatch and Marguerite Marsh.

"Four Horsemen" Opens in Boston Theatre

"THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE," Metro's screen version of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's famous story, which was made under the direction of Rex Ingram, opened at the Tremont Temple theatre, Boston, on May 1. This makes the fifth city of the United States in which the picture is now being shown.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" now is showing to capacity houses at the Astor theatre, New York; the Mission theatre, Los Angeles; the La Salle theatre, Chicago, and the Garrick theatre, Detroit. Besides the premiere in Boston, Metro will introduce the Rex Ingram production to Pittsburg within a few days at the Sam S. Shubert theatre. Companies are being formed for St. Louis, San Francisco and other big cities of the United States.

"Proxies" is Booked by Three Big Circuits

After a week at the Rivoli Theatre in New York, "Proxies," the latest Cosmopolitan Production to be released through Paramount, has been booked for all the Keith-Moss-Proctor Theatres in Greater New York. It was shown last week at the 81st Street Theatre, the Fordham Theatre, and the Coliseum with an interesting prologue.

"Proxies" was written by Frank R. Adams, the well known short story writer, and appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. George D. Baker wrote the scenario and directed "Proxies."

Norman Kerry and Zena Keefe, who play the leading roles have won universal praise for their work from the New York critics. Others in the all star cast are Raye Dean, who plays a charming ingenue with skill and winsomeness, Jack Crosby, Paul Everton, William H. Tooker, Marie Shaffer and Robert Broderick.

"Woman God Changed" Has Unusual Effect

In the court room scenes from "The Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan Production scheduled for early release, a large pendulum clock hangs on the wall. It is shown in close-ups several times during the picture, and gives the effect of the ticking out of the life of Anna Jamesen on trial for her life because of the murder of Alastair de Vries. The uncanny monotony and at the same time the fearful tensity of this trial is brought out excellently by these pictures of the pendulum, signifying the slow but sure passage of justice.

"The Woman God Changed" was adapted for the screen by Doty Hobart from the story by Donn Byrne which appeared in Hearst's Magazine. Robert G. Vignola directed this picture. Seena Owen and E. K. Lincoln play the leading roles.

Pickford Picture May 15

"Through the Back Door" Set for Early Release by United Artists

FOR many weeks exhibitors have been awaiting the announcement of the release date of Mary Pickford's next United Artists production, "Through the Back Door," which was made this week by Hiram Abrams, President of the "Big Four." The date was set for May 15th.

This is the first picture in which Miss Pickford has worked under the guidance of two directors: Jack Pickford, brother of the star and Alfred E. Green, and the production affords her an apportunity for the display of talent equalled only in such productions as "Pollyanna" and others of the class that have brought her her greatest fame.

The outstanding feature of "Through the Back Door" is said to be the delightful comedy sequences scattered throughout the picture. In the little girl role in this production Miss Pickford has a chance to become involved in innumerable complications all provocative of mirth, yet touched with that pathos which stamps this greatest of all ingenues as mistress of her art.

Surrounding Miss Pickford in this production is an unusually clever and capable cast including Wilfred Lucas, who has long held a position of pre-eminence as an actor as well as a director; Gertrude Astor, Adolphe Menjou, Elinor Fair, little Jeanne Carpenter, John Harron, brother of the late Robert Harron, Helen Raymond, Peaches Jackson, Doreen Turner and John Dromgold.

"Through the Back Boor" is the fourth production that Miss Pickford has delivered to United Artists.

Metro's May and June List

Release Dates Announced for Four Special Productions on Schedule

METRO announces four special productions for release during May and June. "Coincidence" with an all-star cast, including June Walker, will be ready for booking on May 9. "The Last Card," a picturization of Maxwell Smith's story, "Dated," presenting May Allison in the stellar role, will be released May 23. "Home Stuff," in which Viola Dana plays the leading role, has been scheduled for release on June 6th. On the 20th of June will be released "Fine Feathers," produced by Maxwell Karger from Eugene Walter's powerful stage play of a few seasons ago. "Fine Feathers" presents an all-star cast.

The cast for "Coincidence" includes, besides June Walker, Robert Harron, Bradley Barker, William Frederick, Frank Belcher and June Terry. The photoplay, a story of youthful love by Howard E. Norton, was scenarioized by Brian Hooker and directed by Chet Withey.

Supporting Miss Allison in the Bayard Veiller production of "The Last Card," are Al Roscoe, Stanley Goethals, Frank Elliott, Irene Hunt, Dana Todd and Wilton Taylor.

In "Home Stuff" Tom Gallery plays opposite Viola Dana. Albert J. Kelley directed the picture. The cast includes, Josephine Crowell, Nelson McDowell, Priscilla Bonner, Robert Chandler, Aileen Manning and Phillip Sleeman. The cast of "Fine Feathers" includes Clarie Whitney, June Elvidge, Thomas W. Ross, Eugene Pallette and Marburton Gamble.

Goldwyn Production News

New Reginald Barker Picture to Be Titled "The Poverty of Riches"

THE next Reginald Barker production, it is announced by Goldwyn, will be "The Poverty of Riches," an original photoplay by Leroy Scott, author of "Partners of the Night." The scenario originally bore the title of "The Mother" which has been discarded in favor of the more impressive title. The continuity was prepared by Arthur F. Statter. Leatrice Joy will play the leading part while John Bowers will have an important role.

Tom Moore is on the home stretch of his forthcoming starring vehicle, "Beating the Game," by Charles Kenyon, under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

Wallace MacDonald, well known screen star and leading man, has been engaged by Goldwyn to play an important part in support of Will Rogers in the picturization of Edward E. Kidder's popular old play, "A Poor Relation," which Clarence Badger is directing.

One of the big stages of the studios was converted into a hospital last week for scenes in Mary Roberts Rinehart's original photoplay temporarily entitled "The Glorious Fool" which is progressing rapidly under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

After a week in New York taking scenes for "The Grim Comedian," Rita Weiman's first photoplay for Goldwyn, Frank Lloyd and his company returned last Saturday to the studios at Culver City. Four members of the cast accompanied him on the trip east—Phoebe Hunt, one of the latest recruits from the stage, who is making her first screen appearance; Jack Holt, well-known leading man, loaned to Goldwyn for this picture; Gloria Hope, and John Harron, brother of the late Bobby Harron.

Lists "Buried Treasure" Among Six Best

Miss Annalee Vernon, well known as a New York critic of motion pictures, has made a list of the six best photoplays released in April, and she classed "Buried Treasure" with Marion Davies, the Cosmopolitan Production, as one of those six pictures.

"Buried Treasure" is reported to have won praise through the country because of its beautiful settings its theme of reincarnation. With Marion Davies in the cast are Norman Karry, Anders Randolf, Edith Shayne, Earl Schenck, John Charles and Thomas Findlay. George D. Baker directed the picture and wrote the scenario from a story in Hearst's Magazine by F. Britten Austen, the well-known English novelist.

Motion Picture League Endorses Charles Ray

"Charles Ray is one of the pioneers in proving to the motion picture public that clever, wholesome, pictures carry a universal appeal which is filling the theatre and bringing a permanency to the motion picture industry."

This sentence is contained in a report just issued by Mrs. Adele F. Woodward, president of the National Motion Picture League, an organization represented in every state of the Union, with club women, college professors, school principals and teachers, and community workers forming a large part of its membership. The League sends out weekly nearly 1500 bulletins containing a list of pictures recommended by its reviewing committee in New York.

United Artists to Add to Foreign Offices

The second delegation to be sent to Europe by Hiram Abrams, to look after the distribution of the "Big Four" product, sailed Saturday, April 30th for France on the Celtic, where, within a fortnight, offices will be opened in Paris, from which point the distributing of this organizations' productions will be handled in the future.

Guy Croswell Smith, well known in the film export business, and who has been located in Europe for the past number of years, headed the delegation and will have charge of the distribution organization in Continental Europe. Palmer Cushing, who accompanied Mr. Smith, will assume the duties of treasurer of the European organization.

June Mathis to Break Another Record

June Mathis, who already has established many screen precedents, is about to break one more record through an arrangement just made by the scenarioist at Metro's West Coast studios. Since she has undertaken the task of supplying two complete producing units with screen stories for special Metro productions, and serve as scenarioist for both the Maxwell Karger and Rex Ingram productions.

Althouh Miss Mathis is known through her literary efforts for many of Metro's most successful films, she gained world wide prominence through her writing of the screen version of Ibanez' "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," a Rex Ingram production.

Maxwell Karger, whose most successful Metro productions have borne Miss Mathis' name as scenarioist, insisted that he had a prior claim upon the product of her prolific typewriter. She herself settled the discussion.

"I will pryoide scripts for both units," she said.

And, just to show that she meant what she said, Miss Mathis is preparing two unusual stories for the two producer-directors. A Balzac story—the details and even the title of which are being carefully safeguarded by both Mr. Ingram and Miss Mathis—is in the process of preparation now. "A Trip to Paradise," a fascinating story, practically has been completed and now is being filmed by Mr. Karger with Bert Lytell in the stellar role.

Cosmopolitan Turns Out Big Products in Brief Space

IN a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Cosmopolitan Productions there is submitted a brief resume of the production activities undertaken by this organization since its inception. It is declared that "In the short time since its organization Cosmopolitan Productions has scored more notable successes than any other motion-picture producing organization in the world." "Humoresque" is pointed out with special emphasis as a product of this company and as a picture "which has crowded every motion-picture theatre where it has been shown." The statement continues as follows:

"'The Restless Sex,' with Marion Davies, a Robert W. Chambers story, was a screen achievement of the first order. The settings for this picture were made by Joseph Urban, and the setting which Mr. Urban designed for the pageant scene known as 'The Ball of the Gods' has become famous throughout the country. 'The Restless Sex' was one of the most popular stories Robert W. Chambers ever wrote when it appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and on the screen, it achieved even greater popularity. The picture was directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

"Robert G. Vignola directed 'The World and His Wife' for Cosmopolitan Productions. The story is based upon a dramatic poem by Jose Echegaray, the famous Spanish author, and the scenario was written by Frances Marion, who adapted "Humoresque" to the screen. This picture contained an all-star cast, among whom were Alma Rubens, Montague Love, Pedro de Cordoba, Gaston Glass, Margaret Dale and Charles Gerard. The settings were designed by Joseph Urban.

"'The Passionate Pilgrim,' a screen adaptation of Samuel Merwin's famous novel which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, was also screened under the direction of Mr. Vignola. Matt Moore, Rubye de Remer and Julia Gordon were in the cast of this picture.

"'Heliotrope,' a screen version by George D. Baker of the story by Richard Washburn Child, which Mr. Baker also directed, and was a great Cosmopolitan success. Mr. Child is an author, editor and lawyer of great reputation, and he was President Harding's personal adviser during the campaign for the Presidency. 'Heliotrope' was described by many reviewers as the 'brother' picture to 'Humoresque,' inasmuch as the theme of the story concerns father love.

"Winston Churchill's greatest novel, 'The Inside of the Cup,' was next produced by Cosmopolitan Productions. This story of corruption in certain churches and in certain financial circles has revived the discussion which the publication of the story caused when it ran serially in Hearst's Magazine. It is now running in the biggest theatres of the country and is drawing immense houses. Directed by Albert Capellani, it has been declared by all admirers of the book to be a perfect screen version of Winston Churchill's masterpiece.

"'Straight Is the Way,' which Frances Marion adapted for Cosmopolitan Productions from the story by Ethel Watts Mumford called 'The Manifestations of Henry Ort,' is a clever crook story, in which Matt Moore, Gladys Leslie, George Parsons and Mabel Bert play interesting parts. Robert G. Vignola directed.

"'The great success of 'Buried Treasure,' with Marion Davies, which is getting indefinite runs in all the large cities of the country, is only a proper tribute to its great merit. 'Buried Treasure' is one of the most magnificent pictures ever screened. It is a story of reincarnation by F. Britten Austen, the famous English author, which appeared in Hearst's Magazine. George D. Baker wrote the scenario and directed it. It is a fitting vehicle for the great beauty and charm of Marion Davies.

"The settings of the pirate ship scenes and the Spanish settings are some of the most magnificent settings Joseph Urban ever designed. Norman Kerry, Anders Randolf, Edith Shayne, Earl Schenck, John Charles and Thomas Findlay support Miss Davies.

"Proxies," the latest release of Cosmopolitan Productions, is called the fastest moving motion picture story ever screened. It contains an unusual and clever story filled with thrilling scenes. The story was written by Frank R. Adams for the Cosmopolitan Magazine and was adapted for the screen by George D. Baker, who also directed the picture. Norman Kerry and Zena Keefe play the leading roles. Others in the cast of this picture are William H. Tooker, Marie Shaffer, Raye Dean, Jack Crosby and Paul Everton.

A. P. Announces Coming Issues

GENERAL MANAGER AL Lichtman of Associated Producers, Inc., announces for general release during the month of May and June what he declared to be a formidable and promising array of special productions.

The schedule announces Mack Sennett's "Home Talent," a full length special, for May 22nd; "I Am Guilty," a J. Parker Read, Jr., production featuring Louise Glaum, for May 1st; "Mother O' Mine," a Thomas H. Ince production dealing with a theme of universal interest, for June 5th; "The Broken Doll," an Allan Dwan special, for June 12th; "The Foolish Matrons," a Maurice Tourneur special with an all-star cast, for June 19th; "The Ten Dollar Raise," a J. L. Frothingham production, for June 26th; and a two-reel gem of comedy by Mack Sennett entitled "She Sighed by the Seaside," for May 8th.

"In offering to exhibitors these unusual productions I am firm in the conviction that here is an array of pictures that cannot fail to make an impression upon any audience," said Mr. Lichtman.

"Exhibitors who have already played Sennett's 'A Small Town Idol' know by experience what drawing power these great comedies have. In 'Home Talent' we submit an attraction that is in every respect just as sure fire. Ben Turpin, who needs no introduction, is in it, of course, and so are the rest of the famous Sennett fun makers. Every exhibitor knows that the fact that it is a Sennett Comedy with Ben Turpin in it is enough for any audience.

Lichtman Names the Subjects on May and June List

"'I Am Guilty!' J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, production featuring Louise Glaum, strikes a new high note of artistic excellence. It shows Miss Glaum in the best role of her career, a sympathetic, appealing part that will win her thousands of new admirers. The story of 'I Am Guilty' is big and fine in its elemental appeal and I have every reason to believe that it will make a hit anywhere.

"'Mother O' Mine,' a Thomas H. Ince production, deals with a theme that is close to the hearts of people of every degree. Its appeal is tremendous because it concerns a weakness in the social order of things that affects every person individually. This production comes up to the highest standard ever set by Mr. Ince and will long be remembered as an example of the ideal motion picture.

"In 'The Broken Doll,' an Allan Dwan production, Associated Producers offers to exhibitors a splendid feature of undoubted quality, one of the greatest attractions of the year. This production has been made with the usual care and fidelity to truth that characterizes all of Mr. Dwan's pictures, and from the sales point of view it leaves nothing to be desired.

"Maurice Tourneur's 'The Foolish Matrons' is a box-office picture from the ground up. Not only has it a superb title but the story, the cast and the production as a whole make it a rare bit of screen art. It is one of Tourneur's finest pictures and its box-office value is tremendous as any live showman can tell at a glance.

"The Ten Dollar Raise,' a J. L. Frothingham production, is another superior feature that will add cash and glory to any exhibitor. It is a comedy drama of throbbing, pulsing life by Peter B. Kyne.

"Sennett's gem, 'She Sighed by the Seaside,' is a feature in itself. While only two-reels in length, it deserves the headline position on any bill. It proved its great value recently when it played to capacity houses for three solid weeks at the New Symphony theatre in Los Angeles.

Pathe News Reel Opens in Big Circuits

WITH the complete details worked out on one of the biggest booking deals ever closed by a motion-picture concern, practically every Keith theatre, and every theatre allied with the B. F. Keith interests in the United States, began exhibiting the Pathe News on May first.

In New York the Pathe News enjoyed its premiere exhibition at the Palace, Colonial, Alhambra, Riverside, Regent, Eighty-First Street, Orpheum, Halsey, Royal, Hamilton, Fordham, Jefferson, Harlem Opera House, Bushwick, Greenpoint and the Prospect.

In Chicago, first runs were shown at the State Lake, Majestic, American, and Lincoln Hippodrome; in Boston, at B. F. Keith's and the Boston; in St. Louis, the Grand, Rialto, and Orpheum; in Albany, Proctor's Grand, Leland, and Harmanus Bleecker Hall; in Cincinnati, B. F. Keith's, and the Palace; Cleveland, B. F. Keith's; Toledo, B. F. Keith's; Philadelphia, B. F. Keith's and the Grand Opera House; New Orleans, the Orpheum and Palace; Washington, B. F. Keith's; Kansas City, Orpheum; Denver, Orpheum; Omaha, Orpheum; Seattle, More; Salt Lake City, Orpheum; Indianapolis, B. F. Keith's; Newark, Proctor's; Milwaukee, Majestic and Palace; Detroit, Temple; Memphis, Orpheum; Portland, Helig.

Novel Camera Work in "Home Talent"

"Home Talent," Mack Sennett's latest production, styled a comic fantasy, which is scheduled for general release by Associated Producers, Inc., on May 15, introduces, among other features, the art of James E. Abbe, the well-known New York photographer who has acquired world wide note because of his remarkable success in controlling lights and shadows as applicable to the camera.

An excellent cast has been assembled including such well known comedians as Ben Turpin, James Finlayson, Eddie Gribbon, Kalla Pasha, Charlie Murray and Phyllis Haver. The Sennett bathing beauties also play an important part.

To Group Scenic Releases

Educational to Issue 40 Scenics Geographically Grouped in 4 Sets

E. W. HARMON, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces a plan wherein he will so group scenic photoplays that instead of offering scenic releases as they happen to arrive in the market, hit, or miss, with no geographical sequence, he is to place at the disposal of exhibitors, shortly, four groups of journeys, that will enable the exhibitor to actually take his audience around the world in motion pictures.

There will be forty pictures, all one-reel lengths, in the four groups, ten in each, and so arranged that an exhibitor can exploit each group as is now done with serial pictures. The first offering will be known as group "A" and take audiences through Holland, Switzerland, Spain and Italy. Group "B" is known as the Oriental arrangement and is made up of fine selections taken in Samoa, Philippines, New Zealand Islands, China, India and the South Seas. In this collection is one also from Palestine. Group "C" starts with the finest works of Robert C. Bruce in Alaska, continues down through Canada and embraces Northwestern United States. Group "D" the last of the collection, has its scenes staged in Southwestern United States, Central and South America. The countries contributing scenic grandeur to this latter list, in addition to the United States, are the West Indies, Chile, Ecuador and other points in South America.

In announcing the completion of his collections Mr. Hammons said: "I have watched the growth of scenic photoplays for seven years. I have always believed that we did not do enough for the average patrons of our screen whose circumstances did not allow them the opportunity to travel. I did not believe that people patronize the screen to be preached at, but I did want to start them on a journey some day around the world visually. Not hit or miss, jumping from Alaska to Timbuctoo, or from the Riviera to the jungles of India, but on a real vacation, just as they themselves would travel had they the time and the money to go. I believe that exhibitors generally will welcome something of the nature of these works as all the pictures are specially selected and so arranged that no two tell the same story or view two countries exactly in the same way. I had originally twenty-three pictures, and all strong ones, in each group and finally eliminated all but the strongest ten in each lot."

"Pardon My French" on Goldwyn Schedule

The second of the Messmore Kendall-Vivian Martin productions, soon to be released by Goldwyn, temporarily called "Oiling Up Society," has been given the title of "Pardon My French," as more indicative of the humorous and farcial nature of the photoplay. The picture was made from Edward Childs Carpenter's story of "Polly," and Irvin S. Cobb was engaged to write the titles. Sidney Olcott directed the picture.

In the cast supporting Miss Martin is one of the country's famous comic opera stars, Grace Studdiford who, as Grace van Studdiford, starred in "The Red Feather."

Arliss-United Artists Combine Praised

Congratulations from every side have been received by Hiram Abrams, President of United Artists Corporation, and George Arliss, the well known character actor, because of the new affiliation they entered into last week, whereby Mr. Arliss' future productions will be distributed through the "Big Four" organization.

Exhibitors throughout the country have been most profuse with their congratulatory felicitations to Mr. Abrams, the consensus of the opinion being that the "Big Four" has added a well worth while artist to their organization.

Christie Comic Series Cost $700,000

With the starting of work on the filming of "Southern Exposure" which will be number 24 in the first series of Christie Comedies distributed through Educational exchanges, Christie is said to be completing the biggest single comedy job ever undertaken, aggregating in the series an expenditure of roughly $700,000 and spreading over twelve months time.

In the twenty-four two-reel comedies, while no particular star-element has been advertised, a record number of popular comedy players has been presented. The summary of pictures shows that Neal Burns is appearing in 10 pictures, Bobby Vernon in 7, Fay Tincher in 3, Dorothy Devore in 6, Vera Steadman in 8, Eddie Barry in 6, Helen Darling in 8, Harry Gribbon in 2, Earl Rodney in 6, and others including Viora Daniel, Josephine Hill, Teddy Sampson, Charlotte Meriam, Laura LaPlant, Ogden Crane, William Sloan, Lydia Titus, Ray Gallagher, etc., in one or more pictures.

The picture now undertaken "Southern Exposure" follows "Sneakers" and "Let Me Explain" recently completed under Al Christie's personal direction. "Southern Exposure" is being directed by Frederick Sullivan and features Neal Burns, Vera Steadman and others.

Educational Will Offer Fifteen Specials

FIFTEEN short-subject specials are to be offered to exhibitors nationally in one combination, according to an announcement made from the executive offices of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., on Monday of this week

"Most of these specials are now in the hands of all our branches and the rest are to go this week," declares President E. W. Hammons. "The group of fifteen, as a group, will be offered to exhibitors so that they can be booked over an extended period and possibly so selected that they either help to balance up with other pictures on the program or are used to bring out the atmosphere of other pictures. None of these pictures is over one reel in length, and I feel that I am duly conservative when I say that these fifteen specials will meet with the greatest success, both for the exhibitor and ourselves. We expect to be able to announce in the trade journals about the 7th day of May the titles and character of each picture in this list of specials."

Included in the list are reported to be "The Race of the Age," "The Art of Diving," featuring Annette Kellermann, views of the Katma Valley in Alaska, and others showing "Babe" Ruth in action.

Interest in Realart Star

Star Franchise Holders Pleased With Elevation of May McAvoy

REALART'S recent "Invitation" advertisement announcing its second anniversary has aroused considerable interest in view of the rather indefiniteness of its offering to the owners of Realart Star Franchises. Last week's advertisement, of course, let in considerable light on the subject, revealing that no less an artiste than charming Miss May McAvoy had been chosen as the star to fittingly celebrate Realart's second anniversary in their birthday production to be released on June 29th.

In June 1919, actually less than two years ago, Realart was organized, opening twenty exchanges in the various key cities throughout the country. Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables" headed the batting order for Realart, scoring a distinct hit at the Rivoli in New York the week of December 21, 1919.

Miss Minter was closely followed by Alice Brady and Constance Binney, who, in turn, were followed by Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels and Justine Johnstone, a succession of stars who have brought to Realart a prestige that is enjoyed only by producing organizations of considerable more years. From the original twelve pictures released the first season, the schedule has expanded to three times that number. Perhaps the best commendation for them was furnished by one Star Franchise holder who referred to them as the "perfect 36."

This Star Franchise is one of the features of Realart which stands out with particular prominence. Under this plan, which was established at the end of the first season, thirty-six pictures, comprising the six stars already referred to, are being offered to exhibitors. Thus the exhibition is assured a definite supply of high grade productions. Possibly nothing speaks so well of the success of this plan than the fact that there are at present more than Six Thousand Star Franchise Owners.

The introduction of the Honor Plan among exhibitors was another innovation of Realart's and its subsequent success shows that their sales organization has its finger on the pulse of up-to-date selling methods. By this much talked about plan, straight rental prices and percentage guarantees are ignored and the valuation of the picture is left entirely with the exhibitor; he plays the production and then remits what he believes to be a fair price.

Three Mayflower special productions were originally made available under this plan. Two more were subsequently added, and the indications today are that still more will be offered on this basis, for hundreds of exhibitors have welcomed this selling policy.

So much for the past and the present. What the future holds is purely problematical, but from indications there will be no let-up in either productions or novel selling plans states Realart.

Five Griffith Pictures Run on Broadway

SOMETHING unprecedented in the history of the state or theatre in New York is happening this week, when five of the biggest and all of the latest spectacular productions of D. W. Griffith, were presented on Broadway at the same time. This is the first time that five productions exclusively made by one person have ever run at the same time on Broadway.

With "The Birth of a Nation," at the Capitol theatre, "Dream Street" at the Town Hall, continuing its New York run after its engagement at the Central theatre; "'Way Down East" still drawing capacity houses at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, "Broken Blossoms" at the Standard, Broadway and Ninetieth street, Japanese Garden, and Fox's Nemo theatre, and "The Love Flower" at the Standard theatre also, Broadway for the first time in its memorial theatrical life had five great films from the work of one man running simultaneously.

Trace Marion Davies' Rise

Cosmopolitan Speaks of Star's Screen Career as "Phenomenal"

IN a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Cosmopolitan Productions the career of Marion Davies is briefly traced and her rise as a screen star described as "phenomenal." The Cosmopolitan statement follows:

"The phenomenal rise of this young star, only twenty-one years old, has been one of the unusual and brilliant stories of filmland. From her first appearance in the 'Chin Chin' chorus, when her beauty and voice attracted both audience and producers to her first picture a little more than a year ago this young woman has proved herself so gifted that her rapid recognition by the lovers of photoplay in all parts of the country as one of the supreme artists of the screen drew her rapidly to the place she holds today.

"From the 'Chin Chin' chorus she was immediately picked for good parts in other musical comedies. It was from the famous group of Ziegfeld beauties that she made her way to the screen. While in the 'Follies' she won the attention of the world's greatest artists, and her life became one demand after another from painters to pose for them. Slight and lithe, Miss Davies has beautiful blonde hair, extremely fine and naturally curly. She has the dreamy Celtic blue eyes of her ancestors which, when she smiles, light into the merriest twinkle.

"When Harrison Fisher asked her to pose for his famous study "Morning," there followed universal acknowledgment that here was not only a beautiful but gifted actress from whom the artistic world was going to demand much.

"In the order of their appearance her pictures, all notable successes and all still playing in many parts of the world, have been: 'Runaway Romany,' 'Cecilia of the Pink Roses,' 'The Belle of New York,' 'The Cinema Murder,' 'April Folly,' 'The Restless Sex' and 'Buried Treasure.' 'Buried Treasure' has been acclaimed by leading critics and artists as one of the best acted and most beautifully produced pictures yet made."

"Doug" to Make Picture on Story Sequence

Under the direction of Fred Niblo the first scenes for Douglas Fairbanks' sixth United Artists' production, "The Three Musketeers," were "shot" early last week, thus launching work on this lavish celluloid spectacle.

A rather unusual procedure in connection with the making of this picture is that every effort is being made to "shoot" the scenes in their proper sequence.

Many Paramounts in May

Current Releases Include "Sentimental Tommy" and "Deception"

PARAMOUNT'S release schedule for May, as announced by S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, contains more than the usual quota of big productions, for among others listed are John S. Robertson's production, "Sentimental Tommy," and the big European spectacle, "Deception," both of which have been received with acclaim in New York and other first-run cities, as well as the Sydney Chaplin special, "King, Queen, Joker," and the Lois Weber production, "Too Wise Wives."

First on the list for release May 1 is Thomas Meighan in "The City of Silent Men," adapted by Frank Condon from John Moroso's story, "The Quarry," and directed by Tom Forman. On May 8 comes the Cosmopolitan production, "Proxies," a crook picture equally interesting as the Meighan picture, but with a decidedly different theme. The 8th also brings Dorothy Dalton in a mining camp role remindful of "The Flame of the Yukon."

Scheduled for the 15th is the massive European spectacle, "Deception," the story of King Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn. This production, in which 7,000 actors were employed, was directed by Ernest Lubitsch, who produced "Passion," and features Emil Jennings and Henry Porten. Sydney Chaplin's super-comedy, "King, Queen Joker," is also announced for the 15th.

The third of the Lois Weber productions for Paramount, titled "Too Wise Wives," is released May 22. The story was written by Miss Weber and Marion Orth. Also scheduled for the 22nd is the William D. Taylor production, "Sacred and Profane Love," starring Elsie Ferguson. It was adapted by Julia Crawford Ivers from the novel and play by Arnold Bennett, in which Miss Ferguson starred on the stage last year. Conrad Nagel plays opposite Miss Ferguson and prominent roles are taken by Thomas Holding, Helen Dunbar, Winifred Greenwood and Jane Keckley.

"Sentimental Tommy," John S. Robertson's superb production of Sir James M. Barrie's quaint stories of the Scotch village of Thrums, is the release for the 29th. This production is now in its sixth week at the New York Criterion and has fairly captivated New York.

May also witnesses the release of the Paramount-Vandenbergh, a series of African exploration pictures, "Wild Men of Africa." They are of two-reel length and are released in four successive weeks, beginning the 1st.

Big Bookings for "The Heart of Maryland"

Vitagraph's next special production, "The Heart of Maryland," has been booked by a very large number of representative theatres throughout the United States for the week commencing May 29th declares a statement from Vitagraph. Due to the fact that Monday of that week is Memorial Day, the various theatre managements have apparently regarded this week as a very appropriate time for the showing of this picture which has a patriotic theme and which as a stage production was one of the most famous successes ever sponsored by David Belasco.

Catherine Calvert is the featured player.

"Big Five" Idea a Success

First Nat'l Says Grouping Plan Has Been Proved Highly Efficient

A STATEMENT just issued by First National upholds the efficacy of grouping unusual attractions for the purpose of advertising and exploitation as a means of increasing attendance at the theatres. This plan, says the First National statement, "Is well illustrated by the success which every one of the Big Five productions are meeting in every part of the country. While Passion, The Kid and Man-Woman-Marriage are the only three which have been generally released in all territories in the United States, the other two, Sowing the Wind and The Oath, have been given pre-release showings in a number of cities and have already proven the drawing power they have, not only in themselves, but through the success which has greeted the other three.

"The extent to which these pictures have been, or will be shown in the country is exemplified by the number of non-franchise holders in First National who have contracted for runs on dates which do not conflict with those selected by the franchise and sub-franchise holders.

"With new contracts being signed every day for The Kid this feature probably has already reached a record in the number of bookings it has received. In addition to the 3,000 theatres in which First National franchises are already operative 3,493 other contracts have been signed for the Charlie Chaplin six reels of joy.

"Passion was considerably slower in getting started than the Kid. The fact that Pola Negri, the star, and everyone else connected with the production were unknown to the exhibitor made the non-franchise house cautious until after the franchise houses had shown it and then came the flood. Outside bookings are still on the increase but already the number reported to the First National home offices has reached 1588, which means that nearly 4600 theatres have already shown or will show this spectacle.

"Man-Woman-Marriage and Sowing the Wind have not been generally offered to non-enfranchised theatres as yet, because of the fact that the franchise houses have not yet selected their playing dates. Despite this fact however the Mayer-Stewart member of the Big Five already has 683 contracts from outside houses, while eighty-nine non-franchise theatres have arranged to show the Holubar-Phillips special."

Releases for May 15 Announced by Pathe

PATHE announces its short-subject releases for May 15. "In Hostile Hands," the third episode of George B. Seitz's serial, "The Sky Ranger," has been set for release on this date. June Caprice plays opposite Mr. Seitz, and the supporting cast includes Harry Semels, Frank Redman, Joe Cuny and Peggy Shanor. "The Avenging Arrow," the Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland, enters into its tenth episode, "Outwitted," in which the star undertakes new perils to secure thrills.

A "Straight Crook" holds up the comedy end of the week's releases, presenting Eddie Boland as featured comedian in a new Hal E. Roach comedy. Boland is assisted by the entire staff of Hal Roach comedians.

Pathe Review, No. 103, presents a number of widely diversified subjects. "Where Uncle Sam Packs His Punch" presents exclusive studies in Pathe Slow-Motion of the huge coast defense guns in action at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds. "The Geyser of Yellowstone Park" offers intimate views of the National Park's most celebrated geysers, including Old Faithful, and others, in Pathe color. The current Capitol Travelaugh by Hy Mayer, is "Those Were Happy Days." "The Friendly Watchers" is an interesting insight into the manufacture of the street lamp, showing the many different processes the lamp goes through before it is placed on duty.

Paramount Planning Another "Big Week"

ANOTHER "big week" is being planned by Paramount for the week of June 19 to inaugurate the mid-summer drive. It will be known as "The Best Show in Town Week" and is calculated to offset the dullness which usually brings worry to exhibitors during the summer months.

In conjunction with the plans formulated by General Sales Manager Ballance, the advertising department, under the supervision of Jerome Beatty, has laid out a big campaign of newspaper advertising to assist exhibitors in reaping the full benefit from this solid week's showing of Paramount pictures. The chief feature of this campaign will be a full seven-column advertisement which will appear at the beginning of the week in the newspapers of all the exchange cities. Topped by a seven-column illustration, this advertisement will contain a list of all the new Paramount productions, as well as the names of all the theatres in the immediate territory of the Exchange cities which are to participate in the week.

Pathe Winners Are Announced

Final Figures of the Brunet Month Test Are Set Forth

CARRYING a renewed expression of confidence in Pathe Exchange, Inc., from exhibitors throughout the United States, the final figures of the Brunet Month competition, waged by the Pathe and Associated Exhibitors sales forces during March, are made public this week. Held up by a large number of last minute contracts and the closeness of the races in every division, the figures contain some startling revelations, and in addition to upsetting previous records result in the crowning of three new division champions.

The prize winning branches are: Eastern—Albany, F. M. Moran, branch manager; Southern—Memphis, C. C. Vaughn, branch manager; Central—Milwaukee, J. H. Mergener, branch manager; and Western—Seattle, P. G. Lynch, branch manager.

Albany alone of the four branches who were successful in the Pearson Month competition in November, was returned winner during the Brunet anniversary celebration. This is the third time in succession Albany has been triumphant.

With the figures based on an average for December, January, and February, the Albany sales force showed a twenty per cent increase in collections, and the tremendous increase of 107 per cent in new business. Buffalo, under the guidance of W. A. V. Mack, gave Albany a sterling race, but just failed to get under the wire first. Buffalo showed an increase in collections of seventy per cent, and eighty per cent in new business.

The order of finish of the other Eastern division contestants, was: Washington, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Newark, Boston and New York.

Perhaps the most startling performances of the competition was the showing of Memphis, winner in the Southern division. The Memphis office was moved over from Little Rock about the beginning of the Brunet Month competition, but in spite of this handicap showed the almost miraculous increase in new business of 215 per cent, and an addition of sixteen per cent in collections.

Memphis had to run a phenomenal race, for New Orleans was at its heels all the time, winding up the month with a record of 28 per cent increase in collections, and 152 per cent in new business; Oklahoma City, former champion, also was in the race all the way, finishing third with 30 per cent increase in collections and 112 in new business. The other competitors, well bunched, finished as follows: Dallas, Atlanta, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Charlotte and Kansas City.

Seattle made such a hard run in when it won a prize for having the the Pearson Month competition, highest national average in increased collections and new business, outside of the four first prize winners, it was a foregone conclusion March would see it well up. But it was beyond expectations to hope that Seattle would finish with such a remarkable record as a seventy per cent increase in collections and 190 in new business. Spokane which was second in this division, showed a 15 per cent increase in collections and 166 in new business, while Salt Lake City, in third place had a record of 44 per cent increased collections and 114 in new business.

San Francisco, which won the championship of the West in November, did no better than last in March, yet in spite of that had a ten per cent increase in collections and seventy-three in new business. Branches finishing ahead of San Francisco were Los Angeles, Portland and Denver.

The pace was swift in the contest in the Central Western Division, but Milwaukee, with its 66 per cent increase in collections and 136 in new business, held the van all the way. Chicago made a hard run, but never was strong enough to get beyond second place, completing the run with a 20 per cent increase in collections and 123 in new business. Indianapolis was third with 49 per cent collections increased and 92 per cent increased new business.

Planning Elaborate Premier

"Rider of the King Log" to Get Big N. Y. Showing

ACCORDING to advices from headquarters of Associated Exhibitors, elaborate preparations are under way for the premier presentation of Holman Day's special production, "The Rider of the King Log," in New York City, at Aeolian Hall on the evening of May 12th. It is stated that Governor Percival Baxter, of Maine, has requested that reservations be made for him at this showing and that reservations have also been made for Senator Hale and Senator Fernald and for Congressmen from Maine.

Prominent among the New Yorkers who are reported to have taken boxes for the occasion are Frank Munsey, owner of the Herald and Sun; Charles R. Flint, James D. Merriman and William L. Flye. A number of prominent business men are making a special trip to New York to see the picture at its first showing.

One hundred and fifty members of the Maine Women's Society will also attend the showing, and the New York alumnæ of Bowdoin and Bates have been invited. The guests are limited to 1,200 and every seat in the hall with the exception of those reserved for members of the staffs of the trade press and their wives and friends has been taken, it is stated.

An exceptional musical program has been arranged to precede the showing of the picture. One of the soloists will be Madame Conrad, who has volunteered her services to the Maine Society of New York. The musical program is being arranged by a committee cooperating with the staff of Aeolian Hall. The following statement has been issued in connection with the Holman Day special from the Associated Exhibitors' headquarters:

"Inquiries have been received from all parts of the country from exhibitors who are interested in the picture and in the remarkable impression it has made at the few private showings arranged in New England. They have expressed interest at the exceptional enthusiasm of the New Englanders. The cause of this is found in the fact that Holman Day created a remarkably faithful story of the lumber country and in transferring it to the screen the spirit of this story has held.

"The picture is said to be one of the truest picturizations of the rugged outdoor life in the north country ever made. Veteran lumbermen who have seen it say that it is as true as the life itself. Mr. Day's book brought him the enthusiastic co-operation of all the big lumber companies in the filming of his story, and in the year he worked upon it the lumber fields were open to him and to his company.

Big Bookings for Hodkinson

West Coast Supervisor Reports Contracts Closed for Releases

MESSRS. J. Mcehan and S. J. Vogel, Hodkinson supervisors of the West Coast division, have reported some very big contracts just closed, among them the following:

"The Man of the Forest" for a two weeks' showing at the Strand theatre, San Francisco, Cal.; "The Man of the Forest" for a week's run at the American theatre, Oakland, Cal.; "The Man of the Forest" for a week's showing at the Wigwam theatre, Reno, Nevada; "East Lynne" at the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, Cal., for a two weeks' engagement; "East Lynne" at the American theatre, Oakland, Cal., for a one week showing.

"The Man of the Forest" is the newest Benj. B. Hampton Production, shortly to be released. It is the screen version of what is considered to be Zane Grey's greatest novel.

School Boys Earn Treat to Charles Ray Film

As a reward for good scholarship during the last few months, 160 boys, ranging in age from 7 to 13 years, and representing five grades of Public School 87, Amsterdam avenue and Seventy-seventh street, New York City, were taken to see Charles Ray in "The Old Swimmin' Hole" at Keith's 81st Street Theatre one day late last week.

Every few months the pupils of P. S. 87 who have made the best scholarship records are treated to a "recreation afternoon," with a visit to one of the most appealing attractions in the city.

Vignola Film Example of Artistic Genius

Robert G. Vignola's production "The Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan production distributed by Paramount, is said to be the finest example of that famous director's genius, reaching even a higher level than his previous work such as "The World and His Wife," "The Passionate Pilgrim," and "Straight is the Way."

In this story of the South Seas, Mr. Vignola has succeeded in setting a new high mark, resulting in a production of undeniable merit and box-office value. Tropical life in all of its mysterious moods has been woven into the fabric of this production with the hand and mind of a master, so expertly done and so convincingly as if it were itself projected on the screen instead of its photographic counterpart. Mr. Vignola, as usual, has selected a superb cast, including Seena Owen, in the title role, E. K. Lincoln, Henry Sedley, and an old film favorite, Lillian Walker.

"THE SKY RANGER"

The Problem of Picking Your Program

Picking the proper program is the first step in picking up profits

YOU win or lose just in proportion with the skill and judgment you show in selecting the pictures for your patrons' entertainment.

You can't please all the people with every picture but you can please every one of them with some one picture on your program.

If you fail to have something in every show that will appeal to all you're hurting your theatre. To pin your faith to the feature alone is like staking everything on one throw of the dice,—ticklish business. A show that is all feature is like a dinner that is all cake, mighty cloying.

There's nothing like a Pathe serial to give vigor and vim to your show, regardless of what the other pictures are. Every man, woman and child likes to be thrilled; every one of them likes daring adventure.

Booking "The Sky Ranger" is taking the first step in picking the perfect program. And the fact that it builds a theatre going habit of fifteen weeks makes it a corking good medicine for stagnation at the box office.

The proof is yours for the asking; see the first episodes of "THE SKY RANGER" at the nearest Pathe exchange.

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT PLAYERS

DOROTHY BERNARD, remembered for her splendid interpretation of "Jo" in the Mayflower production, "Little Women," became a heroine in real life on May Day. The occasion was the special afternoon performance of the annual Actor's Equity Association show, at the Metropolitan. All members of Equity were invited, and that the huge auditorium was filled to capacity, with standing room all taken at eleven o'clock, gave evidence of the colossal membership. In the Shakespearean pageant, which was the last thing on the program, Alma Rubens was to appear as one of the characters. But when the time came, Miss Rubens had not yet arrived. Director Hazzard Short suddenly was aware that it was time for Miss Rubens to go on, and that only five minutes stood between that moment and an inevitable stage wait, unless some one else would go on in her place. Dorothy Bernard fortunately, stood near-by. A true Equity member, and losing no time to think it over, Miss Bernard donned the robes designed for Miss Rubens, and without rehearsal, without knowing what she was to do except as Director Short told her, as she approached her entrance, the plucky little actress faced that huge audience of professionals. Those who did not know Miss Bernard personally, thought it was Miss Rubens, so gracefully and without evidence of her sudden assignment, did she execute her part. Miss Bernard is favorably identified as a motion picture actress, though she recently has spent a long season upon the legitimate stage and arrived in New York only in time for the Equity Show. Her admirable willingness to save a situation has won her many friends who heretofore scarcely recognized the "bigness." of the little ingenue, who resigned the honor at the evening performance to Miss Rubens.

John W. Krafft, now receiving belated credit for writing a number of the comedy sub-titles for "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court"

At the private showing of the Universal production "Reputation," starring Priscilla Dean, a number of picture enthusiasts recognized a favorite actress in less than twenty feet of film. It was Lule Warrenton, who played the important part, that of an opium fiend, in the depths of degradation, yet trying to warn a younger woman against her fate, should she continue in the deadly habit. Mrs. Warrenton's work in the abrupt incident was most commendable, as usual. She will be seen in a much longer part in the George Loane Tucker production of "Ladies Must Live," and has been acknowledged as splendid in the Hobart Henley picture, "The Sin That Was His," but no better piece of acting can be looked for than that seen in "Reputation."

Harold Vosburgh, despite the tortoise shell glasses, and apparel becoming to a college professor, is easily recognized in the Robertson-Cole release, "If Women Only Knew," his style of acting, acquired by many years upon the legitimate stage, always being discernible in any kind of part. The leading juvenile is portrayed by Robert Gordon, and the "blond vamping" ingenue, by Virginia Lee.

Mercita Esmonde, who stepped from a principal role in "The First Year," a Broadway success of the legitimate stage, to a place among other famed players in the chorus for the Actors' Equity Association annual benefit, played a prominent role in "Thoughtless Women," a Pioneer release. But Miss Esmonde in this instance proved her thought for others, by selling programmes in the front of the Metropolitan Opera House until intermission and then hurriedly changing her costume to one like "all the rest of the girls," for the chorus of "Waltz Madness," one of the hits of perhaps the "biggest" show that has ever been seen in New York. The only thing Miss Esmonde is ever known to be "thoughtless" about is herself. And her popularity hinges thereon.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

TRAVERS VALE, one of the first among motion picture directors, and who served in 1920 as Secretary of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, will again take up the megaphone, after a retirement of several months. Features as well as two-reel comedies will be the output of the new producing unit with which Mr. Vale has affiliated, and the picture rights of several well-known novels and plays have already been secured. The many friends of Travers Vale will be glad to learn of his encouraging prospects.

Tod Browning personally has purchased from the author "Just Outside of Hell," by Rene De Saltes, a French writer now in Los Angeles.

The story is a contemporary drama of the Apaches of Paris. Browning is not giving details, merely stating it's for future production. His contract with Universal expires in August. He is now producing "Fanny Herself," probably the last Tod Browning Jewel.

"There is the combined heart interest and thrills I've sought for a long time in 'Just Outside of Hell,'" declares Mr. Browning. "It exposes the Bohemian tourist traps of Paris, incidentally. There are three stellar roles, one a woman. I haven't selected my cast."

Tod Browning recently threatened "to Little-Theaterize" the picture screen. "Dracula" was thought to be the "Little Screen" possibility. Browning began his directorial career under D. W. Griffith at Fine Arts. His fame is based on crook dramas and such melodramatic spectacles as "The Virgin of Stamboul" and "Outside the Law."

"THE WOMAN GOD CHANGED"

A great deal of interest centers in Mabel Normand's first reappearance under the Mack Sennett banner. F. Richard Jones has just started work on the production to be called "Molly-O" at the Sennett Los Angeles studios. Oddly, Mr. Jones directed Miss Normand in her last Sennett super-feature, "Mickey," which established a world record in the comedy field for receipts.

"Molly-O" will be the second serio-supercomedy to be made by Mr. Sennett since he decided that film fans were tired of the old-fashioned slap-stick and wanted human comedy with a story.

The exteriors of "Heart Balm," which was then decided upon, were shot in the Arroyo Seco Canyon and in the Canadian Rockies. Besides Miss McGuire and Mr. O'Hara, the cast of "Heart Balm" includes such well-known players as Noah Beery, Ethel Grey Terry, Ben Deely, Herbert Standing.

Director Jones makes an interesting announcement regarding Miss Normand's "Molly-O." It will be produced on a bigger and more pretentious scale than anything the Sennett studios have yet attempted. One of the features will be a cross-country tour by air, the scenes being photographed in a number of the principal cities of the United States. Mr. Jones has already selected a noteworthy comedy cast numbering Jack Mulhall as leading man, Mrs. Anna Hernandez, George Nichols, Albert Hackett and Eddie Gribbon.

Belated Credit for Sub-Titles

The mystery of the authorship of those now famous comedy sub-titles in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," is gradually clearing, and among others claiming credit for them, by official announcement it now comes out that John W. Kraft, of the Fox staff, New York, not only wrote many of the biggest title laughs but is also credited with having suggested the dice throwing episode, one of the humorous high spots of the production.

Upon its premier, the sensation of the production centered in the sub-titles, many critics declaring them to be the funniest ever seen in a picture. Mr. Kraft wrote nearly a hundred of the comedy titles used at the initial showing, but until recently sought no credit for his work.

This writer edits and retitles, where necessary, all Fox productions of a comical nature, including most of the Tom Mix pictures, and Sunshine comedies. For more than a year he titled the News Screen Magazine for Universal. In this reel he used a series of original humorous sayings under animated caption, "With the Wise Birds."

"I would have said nothing about my share of the work in "A Connecticut Yankee," declared Mr. Kraft, "were it not for the many contradictory stories that have been spread as to the authorship of the comedy titles. In the confusion, some of my friends showed signs of beginning to doubt that I had anything to do with them, and to relieve the embarrassing predicament, I simply claimed recognition for the sub-titles I wrote, and do not desire to infringe upon anyone's credit. I desire, only, credit for my work."

Canadian Author Writes Motion Picture Story

A book has been written and is published by John Lane Company entitled "The Conquering Hero." It author, John Murray Gibbon, is a publicity director for the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and also President of the Canadian Author's Association. It is the story of a young Canadian boy, who is one of only a few out of his Regiment to return from France, and his acquaintance with a Polish princess, a famed motion picture actress. The character of the princess is a sort of cross between Nazimova and Petrova, and the building of a huge motion picture studio in a Canadian forest, might supply an idea to a speculator of fhtnre producing locations.

GOLDWYN

Samuel Goldwyn is expected to arrive on the Coast on Saturday of this week.

Victor Schertzinger has completed "Beating the Game" by Charles Kenyon, in which Tom Moore is starred.

Wallace MacDonald has been added to the cast of "A Poor Relation U. Clarence Badger is directing the subject, which stars Will Rogers.

"The Poverty Riches" has been selected as a final title for the Reginald Barker Production originally titled "The Mother." The picture is an adaptation of Leroy Stone's story of the latter title. The principal roles are assumed by Leatrice Joy and John Bowers.

It is reported that Goldwyn is reducing its producing staff and that it will have four companies working for the next six months.

METRO

Edward Connelly and Ralph Lewis have been added to the cast of "The Conquering Power" from the Balzac story. Rex Ingram is directing this production. June Mathis wrote the continuity. The cast selected for this production is practically the same as that used by Director Ingram in "The Four Horsemen," the list including Alice Terry, Rudolph Valentino, Edward Connelly, Bridgetta Clark, Cleo Madison, Noble Johnson and Marc Fenton. With the exception of Miss Madison all of these players were seen in "The Four Horsemen." John Seitz continues as cameraman for the company.

The fourth unit of Metro organization is to be headed by Dallas Fitzgerald who has been closely associated with Viola Dana productions. Fitzgerald is now making the final scenes for "Life's Darn Funny" and will then take up the filming of "The Matchmaker" by Meta White. Jack Perrin has been engaged to play opposite Viola Dana in "The Matchbreaker." The continuity is being written by Arthur Zellner. Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Screen Snapshots No. 24"
(C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.)

TWENTY-FOUR is a winning number for "Screen Snapshots" and one that should interest and amuse those who have the pleasure of witnessing it.

This does not mean that its opening scenes are any better than the previous releases, but that in or about the middle of the reel the amusement value is decidedly increased by the introduction of three most prominent stars who seem to work their heads off in determined efforts to "put over" the situations.

The stars are Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Jack Dempsey, surrounded by a chorus, if it may be called a chorus, of marines with their band, who indulge in all sorts of capers, with the celebrities, in order to keep up the action.

In the latter scenes Chaplin and Fairbanks divide honors in the comedy situations with Jack Dempsey, a strong runner-up. When the band begins to play Chaplin assumes the role of leader and apparently is getting along very well, when Fairbanks, aroused to action, leaps into the scene, seizes the baton—and then the fun commences.

When the climax is reached Dempsey enters, engages in a "free for all" with the two leaders, and is knocked out by the little comedian. It's a good act and should be saved for future use.

The opening scenes show Marie Prevost arriving home after a dip in the ocean, followed by many views of the pretty star and her pets; Hank Mann rehearsing his company; slow motion photography; Naomi Childers in the role of a palm reader, and Hugo Ballin, who is caught in the act of kissing his wife. This is done for instruction purposes and shows that the young man is a master craftsman in the art. Little Miriam Batista, of "Humoresque" fame, does her bit and is followed by the famous Butlers, David and Fred, who show us how a film should be directed.

Very good, to say the least.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Zero Love"
(Gayety Comedy-Educational)

"ZERO LOVE" is a good average comedy, with enough incident introduced to make it amusing. Its one fault seems to be over-acting or a desire on the part of the actors to overwork the situations. Still all this can be forgotten when the big scenes are reached and played up to a good pitch and kept there.

Although it has a rather trite story, the scenario writers have arranged the scenes in such a way that it would be hard in places to connect them with anything overdone upon the screen. In fact, the situations are rather cleverly put together in a new way.

When the young fellow discovers that his girl likes an automobile and is easily enticed into one by his rival he craves for revenge. While looking over the morning papers an idea springs into his mind, which he uses at the first opportunity. He allows the car in which the two lovers are riding to hit him "abaft the binnacle," is assisted into the house by the young lady and is placed in bed and comforted by her. The other fellow resorts to the same trick and receives the same treatment.

Their ruse is discovered by the young lady, however, who informs the doctor, who in turn invents a clever scheme to outwit the young Romeos. One of them is placed on ice and the other receives a steam bath in the form of a stove which is placed upon the bed and over the patient. They are then switched about and given the reverse treatment and in turn brought to their senses.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Miracle of Manhattan"
(Selznick-Elaine Hammerstein)

THIS production does not give Elaine Hammerstein the opportunities she has had in many of her past pictures. The story is long drawn out, the plot obvious and one that harps on the old-time theme—the society girl who goes to the slums in order to understand life from both angles.

The opening scenes, which show the star in her home surroundings among the elite, are very tame and used as an introduction to the story, which begins to develop when the plot hits the slums.

The latter scenes are of the usual variety, the saloon and dance hall, with the usual element which infests it, the tough bartenders, the gang with its leader, the dance hall girls and the drinks, the cheap restaurant and the rooming house.

With the exception of a rough and tumble fight, in which the leader of the gang and hero of the story whips a young tough who is anxious to usurp his job, the story is very tame. In the final scene a surprise is sprung when the hero shoots his "gal" when she is about to stab the heroine in a jealous rage.

This leads to the usual courtroom scenes and the disappearance of the heroine for the time being. After a fruitless search she reads of the trial in the papers and appears in court just in time to save the hero from the death sentence.

The picture gives fair entertainment, but as we said above it is not up to Miss Hammerstein's usual standard.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Philippine Futurity"
(Chester Screenic-Educational)

ALTHOUGH the water buffalo has been seen in many pictures before, it is doubtful whether this peculiar animal has been shown to such advantage as he is in this one-reeler.

All of which means that the buffalo, the one which inhabits the Philippines, is the featured player.

Originally this animal roamed the plains and woods of Asia and Africa and was considered a fierce foe in battle, as is the African species up to the present day. But the Asiatic species has been subdued and domesticated to such a degree that the natives would certainly be at a terrible disadvantage should he cease to live. And this is plainly illustrated in "The Philippine Futurity."

In these islands the big brother to the American variety is seen doing various kinds of work from the time he leaves the stable, if it may be called that, until he rests his weary bones in the paddock at eventide.

But it is in the rice fields that he excels, for he draws a plow all day long from one end to the other, three and sometimes four feet below the surface, and never tires. Probably this is because he takes his time and the native is not given to hurrying.

When he is not doing this kind of work he is ridden about as a horse, draws a native wag and does various other stunts.

For the benefit of the cameraman, the nati stage a race between the big fellows which not exciting in the least. But who cares ab that when comedy takes the place of drama? T buffaloes race through the village and out i the surrounding country, where they ford ma streams, and then for a finish race down M Street. A close-up shows a female as the w ner.

The reel has interest and is amusing FRANK LEONARDD.

"Dexterity and Mimicry of I sects—Acrobatic Flies"
(Kineto Reviews—Second Series)

THIS is a rather novel reel showing vario kinds of insects in their home surroun ings, their methods of obtaining food, and th "battles" in which claws, feet and teeth pl an important part. In the latter scenes t titles also point out the fact that it is impossib to discover some of these insects as they per or hang from the branches of trees, because their resemblance to their surroundings, bo in color and appearance. The closeups are ve clear in illustrating this fact.

In the second half of the reel an amusi fact is brought out and one that is not w known. By this we mean that the fly is not w known as a comedian and juggler. He is, hov ever, and when placed on his back will amu himself with any small object which is plac within reach of his legs. Many amusing scen show Mr. Fly juggling and balancing sm objects. We don't know what they were ma of, although they looked like pieces of cor And the way he can put up and shoulder out dumbbell beats anything we've ever seen. St he used about six legs to accomplish the trick.

Many views are also shown of the centiped the scorpion with its lobster-like claws, t caterpillar, the drone fly, the wood ant and t grass-hopper.

Much time and energy must have been spe in producing this film, especially in getting t correct results. It should interest and instru wherever shown.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Red Trail's End"
(Chester Outing-Educational)

THE cameraman takes us around an India village in this one-reeler and shows many things we did not know about these pec liar people. And to make the subject mo interesting, it is the Taos Indians of New Me ico, the tribe that builds its own pueblos houses, which is featured.

When a little Indian girl leads us out to t ruins of an ancient pueblo it begins to daw upon us that these people were a "wonderf lot" in bygone days. In the present day, hov ever, these Indians are more interested in farm ing, especially in growing grain and corn, a the different views illustrate.

In a concise manner they are shown harves ing the hoofed wheat, which seems to be ver popular "eating" with the tribe, while the bea tiful backgrounds in the northern mesas, whe mountains are bright with purple and maroo stand out in delightful contrast.

"REPUTATION"
(Universal-Jewel)

Interesting Picture Might Have Been More Dramatic

UNIVERSAL has found an exceptionally good story for Priscilla Dean—one adorned with an attractive title and well fortified with sound ingredients and which permits the emotional star to display her expressive talent and vibrant personality. A story of the theatre, there is no question that it will interest the majority of patrons who are fascinated with life behind the footlights. Whether it is real or not there is a glamour which cannot be denied. "Reputation" enables the star to display more emotion than any of her previous pictures with the single exception of "Outside the Law." But in enacting a dual role of mother and daughter it seems to us that the director has erred in not giving the elderly figure a sympathetic development after the manner of "Madame X."

The subject has much in common with the latter play. Certainly Miss Dean has her big moments as the mother, yet despite the emotional stress, she is never allowed to sympathize with her because she is painted in unattractive colors. Naturally the younger figure dominates the attention, according to screen ethics, though her life is far from being complete with sorrow, despair, and adventure as the mother's. Yet the picture is thoroughly interesting because of its story quality and the good arrangement of the individual scenes. If it has any fault it may be found in the way the director has outlined his action. The picture is lacking in suspensive value because a sequence is explained and then allowed to be shot." The star enacts the two roles of actresses. The mother is painted as a frivolous figure and entirely lacking in the finer instincts. She is unaware that her daughter has grown to womanhood and is having a bitter struggle to obtain a livelihood in the profession, since one resides in America, the other in England. It is when a cablegram announces that Laura Figlan, the mother, is unable to come over that the younger woman takes advantage of her resemblance to hoodwink the manager.

The picture develops an effective climax when the real Laura Figlan arrives, though the manner of her coming is glossed over by a subtitle. Miss Dean puts over some real emotion as the wretched woman who has flirted with the gutter in her insatiable desire for pleasure. The theatre is crowded and the pseudo star is giving a bad performance because of fear of being discovered as an impostor. It is a clever scene when the mother hides in a closet and kills a philanderer, responsible for her downfall. Thus she has her revenge in having her part stolen since the masquerader is indicted for the crime. When the murderess discovers the identity of her daughter she commits suicide without revealing her relationship. The picture is well constructed in its individual sequences, although many of them are marred by cloudy lighting. A few subtitles of a flowery nature could be dispensed with, also one or two crude scenes which show harrowing detail. Niles Welch gives a creditable performance as the hero press-agent. Indeed he acts like a regular fellow. William Welsh as the manager gives a good account of himself. He looked out of place, however, in the scene which showed him occupying a stage box on opening night.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of the most dramatic and entertaining photoplays of the year is coming to the ———— theatre next ————, featuring Priscilla Dean. It is entitled "Reputation" and presents the Universal emotional star with a role which enables her to flash her gifted talents. Certainly Miss Dean eclipses her past performances. "Reputation" is a story of the theatre—of its tinsel and glamour—of its shadows and sunshine. It presents an actress, who unable to stand prosperity, deliberately seeks the depths. She has a contract to appear in America, but days of debauchery prevent her from fulfilling her obligations.

Meanwhile an ambitious actress of little reputation realizes that she resembles the famous star and is successful in being given the part. Little does she know that she is the daughter of the star. Her only fear is the thought that the London actress might come unexpectedly and rob her of her one chance to reach the heights. The denouement is as unexpected as it is dramatic and furnishes a fitting climax to an extraordinarily interesting picture. Prominent in the supporting cast are Niles Welch and Spottiswoode Aitken.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever stop to think of the adversities that one encounters upon the stage? Did you ever pay notice to the hardships of the profession when one is striving for success? Think of the long, monotonous one night stands—the striving for name and fame and prosperity. In "Reputation," Priscilla Dean's newest picture, the emotional star has a role which acquaints the public with the "ups and downs" of the acting profession. It is a picture which enables the star to display her abundant talent. It is her greatest picture. Miss Dean appears in a triple role—a role which calls for every shade of expression and the star is gifted enough to make the most of it.

"THE WALLOP"
(Universal)

Good Incident and Detail Spell Interesting Western for Carey

THE "he's human" star, Harry Carey, has in "The Wallop," a picture comparable to his Cheyenne Harry offerings. Which is to say that it is well blended with good incident, first class detail, picturesque action, a vein of suspense, a dash of romance—elements which are developed against truly western backgrounds. The picture carries a fine flavor of humor too, a note which is caught in the play of characters and the colorful dialogue. The opening sequence discloses Carey viewing a "handsome Harold" movie when he recognizes a former sweetheart next to him. The picture is so bad that they walk out and the star promises to look her up again. This is the only part of the offering which appears episodic since the remaining scenes are closely related and measure out a healthy line of rugged action.

Carey is seen in one of those sympathetic roles which shows him playing "second fiddle" to a more romantic figure. The sympathy is his to the finish since it is his object to protect his rival and "fade-out" at the end with a realization that romance is over. The plot revolves around the attempt of a crooked sheriff to discredit the youth who has beaten Carey to the lovestakes. The latter puts over some good incident in a pool parlor and performs a timely rescue for his unknown friend (a typically Carey scene). Frustrated here, the villain frames the youth on a murder charge and the latter is forced to flee to the mountains. This sequence defies logic for an innocent man is never afraid to face the truth. Viewing it from a strictly western angle it is strictly according to Hoyle since guns speak louder than words. The sheriff and his gang start in pursuit but the cowboy beats them to the impregnable cave. His object is to win the reward for the capture of the murdered man's assassin and also to aid his rival in battling his oppressors.

The title finds its meaning when Carey deals the youth a terrific wallop, knocking him out, so that the sheriff will be forced to give him the reward. It looks like the art of "double-crossing" on the part of the unromantic figure until the plains are reached when he surprises the crooks and compels them to put up their hands. This picture may read like the regulation stuff, and it would be if deprived of its incident. However, Carey adds one of his individual touches, a breath of humor is incorporated, a healthy punch comes to the rescue in some distinctive scene and the picture enters the better class of Westerns. There is good atmosphere and plenty of hard riding and straight shooting.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Harry Carey, the "he's human" star of Universal, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in one of the best Westerns in which he has appeared—a picture entitled "The Wallop." It is an offering well balanced with humor, primitive action, romance, intrigue, gun-play, thrills, fast-riding, and human interest, and permits the star to bask in the role of a lovable character—much after the fashion of his memorable Cheyenne Harry. As John Wesley Pringle, he plays a rough and ready cowboy who finds that his personality lacks something to invite romance. When he discovers his former sweetheart loves another he steps aside and encourages her.

A time comes when he is instrumental in saving his rival's life—a deed that is highly appreciated by the latter. The youth is being sought for a crime of murder——a crime of which he is innocent. When he flees to the mountains, John Wesley goes to protect him. Through his native shrewdness he is able to circumvent the real criminals and save the successful lover. And so his duty over, sadly goes out of young people's lives. The picture keeps the attention throughout because of its vigorous action and the rugged acting by the star and his company.

PROGRAM READER

He hadn't seen his girl in several years, but when she did come back into his life she told him she was in love with another. Her former admirer had a heart as big as a mountain and took his defeat like a real hero. A time came when he protected his young rival at the risk of his life. And they became bosom friends. Then one day upon a mountain the cowboy gave his new-found friend a terrific wallop. Why? What had the youth done to deserve such treatment. Was the discarded suitor a traitor? Was he deceitful? Yet he knocked his rival out and handed him over to the authorities. What was the reason? Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see Harry Carey in "The Wallop," a two-fisted, red-blooded picture of the West. One of the star's best.

CATCH LINES

He could ride like the wind. He could fire straight and true. And oh, what a wallop he carried in his fists! See Harry Carey in the rugged picture, "The Wallop."

He certainly put one over on those 'ornery hombres. But he had to knock his friend out with his fists to do it. See "The Wallop."

"THE HOME STRETCH"
(Ince-Paramount)

Human Interest Story Carries Thrills and Humor

THERE probably won't be any argument about "The Home Stretch," heing the hest picture in which Douglas MacLean has starred since "Twenty-three and One-half Hour's Leave." Certainly it carries a rich assortment of scenes which are colored with thrills, moments of heart interest, and flashes of rural hokum. If its finale can be guessed from the opening "shot," nevertheless, it contains enough interesting incident to hold one's attention. As the title indicates the picture presents a plot revolving around a race-horse, a metropolitan track and all the colorful details which accompany such a story. There is an immediate hid for sympathy as the picture starts since MacLean, owning the fastest horse on tbe track and certain of cleaning up a snug fortune, deliberately ruins his chance by rescuing a child from the approaching hoofs, the youngster having run out on the turf during the home stretch.

The little girl's father has occasion to remember the brave act when he offers the racing man a position as clerk in his hotel. Before this scene is flashed the hero is forced to flee the law because of assault in a roadhouse. His horse is in care of a jockey and is neglected until the final episode. And speaking of the development of the picture it is really episodic, though there is enough continuity present to make the scenes more or less closely related. We next discover the hero taking advantage of the above-mentioned offer where he runs afoul of an arbitrarily introduced villain—one closely akin to the lounge lizard type. And when he throws up his job rather than compel his employer to lose patronage he takes a position as handy man around the hamlet's general store—a store which harhors the post office and which is presided over by the beroine.

There are moments of pleasing romance and some more of hokum before the big punch arrives in an effective horse race at the county fair. The hero learning that a "ringer" is going to run under the auspices of the villain employs the same tactics and enters his own horse. This scene is developed with sure-fire hokum with a David Harum touch attached. The thoroughbred is camouflaged hut captures the race. But in the grandstand the heroine and her father have listened in on information discrediting the hero. So the youth departs, though he comes hack when he makes his pile. The concluding scene carries a Fairbanks touch as the young man dives off a hoat to return to his sweetheart. The star gives a hreezy performance. although he overworks his smile. There is fine atmosphere. —Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Douglas MacLean, who is one of the most popular, polite comedians of tha screen, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in his newest photoplay entitled, "The Home Stretch." This is a romance of love and the turf and unlike most comedies, it has thrills of its own besides unusually clever comedy situations. The story concerns a jockey, a trainer, a racetrack follower, who at time the picture opens, has risen to the ranks of racehorse owner, and of the difficulties he encounters when he attempts to ahandon his gambling habits.

The opening scenes of the story, laid on a famous California racetrack, are notable for tensely dramatic situations, and a thrilling accident, in which Mr. MacLean play a prominent part. Throughout the remainder of the picture, clever comedy and dramatic suspenses are delightfully hlended and carried through to an unusual ending. The star is said to give a performance quite on a par with his portrayed in "23½ Hours Leave." Beatrice Burnham, Margaret Livingston, Wade Beteler and Charles Mailes are memhers of the supporting cast. The picture was adapted from a story hy Charles Belmont Davis.

PROGRAM READER

"The Home Stretch," Douglas MacLean's latest picture, will he the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. With the story hinging on the gambling proclivities of a young horse owner and his difficulties in freeing himself from the influence of the Goddess of Chance, "The Home Stretch" is said to afford MacLean one of the most entertaining roles of his popular career. Not only is the production rich in comedy, hut it contains many gripping dramatic situations and thrilling racing scenes as well. Particularly notahle are the scenes of a spectacular handicap staged on one of America's largest tracks. The star is supported hy a clever company.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this picture for its comedy scenes and its full quota of spectacular thrills. Tell that it is a racing story which affords the popular star a fitting vehicle for the display of his comedy talent. Tell that he has a role as entertaining as that in "Twenty Three and One Half Hours' Leave." If you can get a short subject concerning a horse race, or a short comedy based upon a similar idea it would be a good stroke. You could then bill the program as "all comedy week" with the ponies. Throwaways announcing the attraction cut in circular form and distributed about would stimulate partonage. These would be in harmony with those who are offered patrons at the metropolitan tracks. Play up the thrills. Bill it as a clean, captivating comedy.

"IT CAN BE DONE"
(Vitagraph)

Rather Unusual and Offers Fair Entertainment

CROOK stories have become so orthodox in plot and characterization that any development away from regulation channels is bound to he appreciated by the steady picturegoer. Take Earle Williams' newest offering, "It Can Be Done" for example. Here is something new in crook plot construction, but because of its very character the interest is not maintained with the attention which the ordinary mystery story demands. It is developed in a spirit of make-believe with the protagonist acting a part as it were. Thus the suspense centers more on the incident than it does on the anticipation of the ending. An editor of a muck-raking newspaper employs a prominent author of crook stories to expose a ring of profiteers. It happens that one of these captains of industry is the father of his fiancee while another is his hated rival. He has no scruples in exposing the latter, hut resigns rather than humiliate his sweetheart.

Here is where the picture develops a twist. The profiteer picks up one of the author's hooks and declares that it is illogical—that the events never could happen. So the hero plays one of his own hurglars, climbs into his prospective father-in-law's house, steals the incriminating papers from the safe without his identity being known except to the daughter. A counter-plot revolves around a real thug who is working in the interests of the editor. The reformed crook forgets his conscience long enough to steal the jewels, though be is caught by the author. Since they are friends the latter advises him to seek safety in his home. Meanwhile the profiteer has called up the police and informed them of the identity of the author.

The succeeding sequence becomes a trifle arbitrary since the officers investigate in a haphazard fashion. In fact they are unduly polite. In real life the suspects would have been lugged off to the station and allowed to offer explanations there. The profiteer arrives but is advised in a confidential whisper not to press the case, hut to state tbat it is a huge joke. So the author impresses bim with the fact that his stories can be real after all. He gives up the papers on the promise that the profiteer will reform. The picture offers moments of captivating humor, especially when the reformed thug holds the scene. There are a number of clever twists and surprises and the production has been done in good taste throughout. But its suspense is lost because the plot is thoroughly mapped out abead. The star gives a polished performance. The offering should get by in any neighborhood house.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"It Can Be Done," is a photoplay adapted from a popular magazine story hy Frederick J. Jackson. This is the second of the author's tales to he picturized hy Earle Williams, and presents the popular star in a role that fits him perfectly. The character is that of a wealthy American youth who takes up writing stories as a profession and who is unusually adept at capitalizing crime and detection. His friends, while interested in the tales, tell him that they are illogical. To prove the truth of his plots he attempts to live one of his characters.

In fulfilling the requirements of the het, he here has many strange and startling adventures as well as a love affair that is certain to hold the interest of the average picture patron. The story is one that should prove popular as it contains the elements of suspense, mystery, humor and romance in the right proportions. The scenic backgrounds are pleasing to the eye and the production is also marked for its atmosphere. Mr. Williams gives a finished performance as the author who took up a life of crime to show that his plots "could he done." In his support ard Elinor Fair and other competent players. "It can Be Done" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————.

PROGRAM READER

They ridiculed his stories and told him that his ideas and characters were far removed from life. Just to show them that they were wrong he placed a bet that he could live one of his figures. How he did it makes a very interesting picture. "It Can Be Done" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Earle Williams as the star. We don't intend to detail the plot to you. It furnishes so many surprises and carries such a wealth of incident and action that such a course would rob the story of its suspense. But come next ———— and be royally entertained. It is a picture which is excellently hlended with romance. mystery. intrigue and suspense. Elinor Fair plays opposite the star.

SUGGESTIONS

The title can come in here for some novel exploitation. Cards for window displays can he featured such as—"Girls Dress Attractively On an $18.00 a Week Salary." "It Can Be Done." These cards can he placed in the windows of shoe. furniture and women's specialty stores. And they will certainly excite attention. Blind ads distrihuted on the amusement page of the newspaper featuring the title will stimulate curiosity. Play it up in this fashion for some weeks in advance of the showing. Play up the picture as a really novel offering which carries a wealth of entertaining moments. Tell that it is well halanced with humor, mystery, intrigue, suspense, and romance. Play up the star and announce that he has one of his finest pictures here. Bill it as a timely suhject.

"BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER"
(Neilan-First National)

Wesley Barry Saves the Show

EXCEPT for Young America, Wesley Barry saves this from being called old fashioned Indian melodrama. Otherwise "Bob Hampton of Placer," for grown-ups, especially the female of the species would ive too much battle stuff with long shots of Indians riding around their ctims in circles and many extras and some of the principals of the cast ıcluding the hero, Jim Kirkwood, being killed before the picture is over. "Bob Hampton of Placer" is an adaptation of Randall Parrish's story the same name which in turn was a more or less accurate historical ovel founded on "Custer's Last Stand." It presents Mr. Kirkwood and a ıe cast of types and competent players, that includes besides Wesley, arjorie Daw, Pat O'Mally and Noah Beery in a typical Wild West story, ıacted with some wonderful scenic settings, and attempting to contradict a way the old saying that "the only good Indian is a dead one."

Wesley Barry's part is undeniably dragged in by the ears and at variance ith history, but all the same the farce comedy incidents in which he ap- ars and some really dramatic scenes does much to bring the picture into e fine entertainment class. As a juvenile two gun man, a pal of the ro and jealous of Kirkwood's interest in the heroine, this youngster is ven his greatest acting opportunity. He earns a number of good laughs comedy scenes and puts over a bit of real dramatic work in the last rt of the sequence devoted to Custer's fight.

Men will like this picture. the boys will eat it up and the women will ac- pt it because of the comedy and the clever work of Wesley. The pro- ıction has unusual exploitation possibilities, not the least of which is the l star cast. Uncle Sam co-operated in production by loaning the famous nth cavalry and allowing the picture to be made in Glacier Park. The dian scenes are enacted by real red skins among which are some fine pes.—Length, 7268 ft.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Bob Hampton of Placer," the thrilling story by Randall Parish based on Gen- al Custer's last stand against the Indians, has been adapted to motion pictures by arshall Neilan, and will be the attraction at the ———— theatre for a———— ys engagement beginning ————.

In the cast are players that make the production truly an all-star picture. mes Kirkwood plays "Bob Hampton," Marjorie is the pretty heroine, while Pat 'Mally is the juvenile. Then there is Wesley Barry in the best role of his career, at of a boy cow puncher and two gun man, a pal of the hero who furnishes plenty comedy relief and some emotional acting worthy of the most talented grown-up.

The feature was photographed in the Glacier National Park, with Uncle Sam operating by loaning the famous 10th Cavalry for the battle scenes. A whole be of real Indians are also used. Five thousand people appear in some of the enes.

"Bob Hampton of Placer" is a classic Indian-western picture of the type that ery red-blooded American likes. It has all the thrills and drama that can be owded into a picture besides plenty of comedy relief. Every body from Grandma little Willie will find something to please them in this picture of the great West the 70's.

PROGRAM READER

One of the greatest of melodramatic pictures ever produced, "Bob Hampton of acer," adapted from the novel by Randall Parish, of the same title is the ————'s feature film for a ———— days 'engagement beginning ————.

The picture was produced by Marshall Neilan, and has an all-star cast that in- ıdes James Kirkwood, Marjorie Daw, Wesley Barry, Noah Beery and Pat Mally besides many others whose names are familiar with picture fans who are miliar with America's greatest film players. Over 5,000 people take part ini the ttle scenes, enacting with historic accuracy Custer's last fight in which the whole giment was killed before aid could arrive. For these scenes the famous 10th. ıvalry, was loaned by the government and a whole tribe of Indians donned war int and enacted the war scenes of which their ancestors had told them. Some of e Indians used actually took part in the battle in which Custer's army was exter- inated. One "buck" is 92 years old, but was hale and hearty enough to go to ew York and appear at the picture's premiere at the Mark Strand theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation opportunities of this picture are to be found in the cast espe- ılly Wesley Barry, the 10th Cavalry, the scenic settings of the Glacier National ırk, the fame of the story, from which it was adapted, the historical significance the battle scenes, Marshall Neilan's name, the Indians used in the picture, the big enes in which what is alleged to be five thousand people take part and the aptability for prologue and exploitation stunts that can be pulled with Indians d old time West costumes. The producers are putting out complete plans for a ɔlogue number that has been proven effective by trial at the New York Strand eatre. Big newspaper space and plenty of 24 sheets with direct billing for the ungsters is advised.

CATCH LINES

The story of a old time West gambler, a boy who was a two gun man, and a rl who loved a brave young soldier. Thrills, melodrama, Indians, real U. S. ldiers, James Kirkwood and Wesley Barry playing his greatest role.

"HIS GREATEST SACRIFICE"
(Fox)

Heavy Drama May Satisfy Star's Admirers

THEY have taken William Farnum ont of the West in this picture. And coming out of the West, he has discarded the bare-knuckle type of action which characterized many of his previous program pictures. "His Greatest Sacrifice" gives the star the part of a successful author and later that of a downtrodden ex-convict, but it gives him no villain to punish after a deadly fist fight.

We think the picture, dealing as it does with a husband's noble fight to keep the love of a foolish, erring wife, is too dramatic for an audience which does not hold the star as a favorite. This is largely because of Farnum's method of handling his part. He keeps the tempo down in the dramatic scenes, has numerous close-ups with heavy make-up, and emphasizes every emotion he is called upon to register. This type of acting may, however, be just what his admirers are fond of and expect.

This story itself is not devoid of real gripping situations. The star's wife achieves fame as a singer and neglects her home, and her husband in a struggle kills her manager, who has been urging her on to a professional career. Twenty-two years elapse. Farnum, who has been given a life sentence, is allowed out on parole. In the middle of the film Farnum is neglected almost entirely to trace the history of his daughter and his wife.

As an ex-convict the star is the most appealing. After hopeless search for work he appeals for charity at the home of the man who is to be his daughter's husband. When he learns this he is prepared to disappear forever rather than allow his daughter to be disgraced and her happiness ruined. When he is arrested as a suspicious character, he begs to be sent back to his prison home. This is his greatest sacrifice. But finally he is persuaded to save himself and live happily with his daughter and her new husband. His wife, the opera singer, is disowned by her daughter for her neglect and goes out of the picture.

One thing cannot be excused. This is the titling. This is especially true of the dialogue. They are full of bromides, and are so commonplace to be almost childish. They dwell on the most unimportant topics, and are almost entirely without human appeal.

An average cast supports the star. Farnum has held his following for considerable time, and probably will please them here, but because of his exaggerated acting, he certainly will not appear convincing to those with no predilection for him.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Farnum, admittedly one of the leading stars of filmdom, will play the leading role in "His Greatest Sacrifice," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Few stars have enjoyed and held their popularity as William Farnum has. Starting his career in the early days of the screen, he has won thousands of admirers and continues to win more with every new picture.

Patrons of the ———— theatre who saw "If I Were King" will need no urging to see "His Greatest Sacrifice." Farnum, who made such a great hit as the lovable rogue, Francois Villon in "If I Were King," plays an exceedingly dramatic part in this new picture. The story is a thoroughly human one, filled with drama and pathos from beginning to end. The star is cast as a successful author, whose wife is lured away from her home life to follow an operatic career. Her husband makes a desperate effort to show her that true happiness lies not behind the footlights, but before the hearthstone in the home.

Farnum shows his great versatility in this picture, as the story covers a period of thirty years. He is just as pleasing as a white-haired old man, as he is as a youthful husband.

"His Greatest Sacrifice" will be shown for ———— days beginning. It is recommended as a wholesome, certain evening's entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

One of the most popular stars of filmdom, William Farnum, will play the leading role in "His Greatest Sacrifice," which will be the attraction at this theatre on ————. It is ———— weeks since this well known and capable actor has been seen at the ————, when he was seen in the successful screen play "————."

This time Farnum has an unusually dramatic role. The story is one filled with tense action and thrilling situations throughout. He is cast as a successful business man who fights to the utmost to retain the love of his flighty wife, who is seeking the glory of an operatic career.

Supporting the star in this picture are Alice Fleming, Evelyn Greely and Charles Wellesley. The picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed Farnum continually in his most successful pictures. The screen version is by Paul H. Sloane, an experienced screen writer.

SUGGESTIONS

Naturally William Farnum's name is the greatest point of appeal in this picture. He is cast in an unusually dramatic role, and as there is no Western stuff in the picture, so you can promise them a picture which is straight drama, dependent upon gripping situations rather than a rough and tumble Western action. None of the cast are very well known. J. Gordon Edwards has gained in fame through his direction of "The Queen of Sheba," and if you are located in or near any city where this spectacle has played it might be well to mention this fact. Spreading the star's name and the use of pungent catch lines, telling that it is a drama of home life seems the best course of action.

"HEARTS AND MASKS"
(Federated Film Exchanges)

Should Fill Demand for Clean, Entertaining Light Stuff

FEDERATED offers here a nice hit of entertainment which might be classed either a comedy-drama or melodramatic-comedy. But whatever you want to call it, it is entertainment which should find a place on a program looking for light stuff, capable of holding the interest. Harold McGrath's story has basically the same excellent farce-comedy idea of the stage play, "All the Comforts of Home," hut in with this is mixed a considerable amount of melodrama which adds to the audience value. The whole picture is seasoned with good hokum and Elinor Field, playing the female lead, puts across the gags allowed her in fine fashion.

The story concerns a young girl who lives alone with a gouty, irrascihle old uncle in his large country estate in the Berkshires. When uncle goes away, Alice, the niece, dresses as a servant and goes forth in search of adventure. This part is a hit silly and unconvincing, but from it develops the comedy idea. The girl, craving company of her own age, and in order to keep up the lie she has told, turns her uncle's mansion into a boarding house. The housekeeper becomes the landlady, the servants the boarders, and Alice the housemaid. A famous author, traveling incognito, becomes a roomer, and the romance develops very nicely. Then comes the melodrama, with the introduction of a notorious criminal at a nearhy hotel. It ends up very good-naturedly as melodramatic comedy in a masquerade hall sequence. The real crook poses as a detective, the hero is suspected of heing the thief. and before things are straightened out there is some action and good entertainment in the attempted escape of the two young people through a coal chute in the cellar. This action is not extravagantly mounted, hut the hallroom and hotel sets are sufficiently lavish to he convincing.

The cast is of high order. Lloyd Bacon, playing the male lead, acts with a remarkable naturalness. He neither gushes all over in the romantic spots nor froths all about to show that he is angry. This restraint characterizes the whole cast. Francis McDonald is a calm, daring crook. Even John Cossar, as the cranky uncle, while he gets a great deal of comedy out of his part, does not do it by forced acting.

Director William Seiter has turned out a picture which should fill the long emphasized demand for clean, entertaining comedy without a million dollar star or a million dollar set. We do not think any audience will he disappointed unless you promise them a world-heater.—Length, 5200 feet. —Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Hearts and Masks," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is a picture which is surely going to please the lovers of clean, entertaining comedy-dramas. In these days when strict censorship of the screen is threatened, no better argument could be offered in defense of motion pictures than such a high class picture as "Hearts and Masks." At the same time it is filled with interest from beginning to end, for it is an adaptation of the story by Harold McGrath, one of the most successful of modern magazine writers.

Elinor Field, one of the most attractive actresses on the screen, Francis McDonald and Lloyd Bacon, are the trio who provide the romance, comedy, and thrills, for the picture is not of the spineless variety, in the play.

The story concerns a vivacious girl, who lives with her irascible gouty old uncle. Craving human companionship of her own age, she changes the luxurious home of her uncle into a boarding-house, during one of the old man's absences. The servants are made the boarders, and the niece becomes the maid. To this strange household comes a stranger seeking rooms, and, of course, he falls in love with the maid. It ends happily, but not before a baffling mystery of stolen pearls is explained, and a wealth of good humorous scenes are shown.

"Hearts and Masks" will be shown for ———— days. It is offered by the manager as a proof that picture can be thoroughly entertaining even without one of the half dozen brightest shining stars of filmdom in the cast.

PROGRAM READER

Poor little Alice lived along alone with a houseful of servants and a gouty old uncle. She wanted to meet people of her own age, and—she wanted to be loved. So when Uncle went away she decided to turn his fine country home into a boarding house. The servants change their positions in life. They became boarders and the housekeeper became landlady, while Alice played the part of a servant. And when the handsome young stranger arrived, the fun started.

And the fun and the interest never stops in "Hearts and Masks," which will be the feature attraction on ————. It is one of the few pictures which you hate to see end. It is no wonder, for the story is by Harold McGrath, a highly successful magazine writer, the direction is by William Seiter, a master of his art, and the cast includes Elinor Field, Francis McDonald, and Lloyd Bacon—an unmatchable trio unmatchable in all filmdom.

SUGGESTIONS

Harold McGrath's stories have consistently found a place in the leading fiction magazines, and his name should be worth a place in your advertising on this picture. Mention the cast as all-star, and exploit the picture in general as an entertaining comedy drama, with more comedy than drama. Audiences like the light stuff, and here it is. If luck provides a masquerade party in your town around the time of the run, a tie-up is possible, for the climax of "Hearts and Masks" takes place in a masquerade affair. You could dress your ushers as Pierettes for a reasonable sum. Also have them masked. Costome your doorman in the same manner, and, if you wish an attractive lobby, cover the walls with cardboard of a large black and white check.

"SEE MY LAWYER"
(Robertson-Cole)

Too Lengthy and Complicated to Be Amusing

THIS stage play does not impress us as good screen material judging from its adaptation and development. It has all the earmarks of being one of those offerings which depended upon hits of "business" for its success, and T. Roy Barnes doubtless added them when he starred in the original version. Featured in the screen adaptation the star seems to he hindered hy valueless incident which never gets over hecause it hasn't heen developed in strictly comedy fashion. "See My Lawyer" has heen constructed too literally with the result that it furnishes no humorous sparks. For three reels it carries nary a mirth provoking scene, which of course, encourages the spectator to take it more or less seriously. And such a development is fatal considering the satirical theme and characterization.

The picture revolving around a get-rich-quick scheme, the steady patron will realize its single-track development hecause of repetitious detail. A youthful promoter thinks he has discovered a process for making artificial rubber. He is flooding the mails with literature concerning its merits and inviting the gullihle puhlic to become stockholders when a rival concern requests the government to investigate. Before the postal authorities take a hand the comedy hecomes rather wearisome hecause it is lacking in spontaneity and humor. The characters are firmly planted and the plot is exposed with all its shortcomings intact. The promoter and bis lawyer realizing that they are in "dutch" with the government feign insanity. Here is where T. Roy Barnes comes to the rescue and saves the picture with some stock "business." Here is where the comedy catches up with the spirit of the plot for the first time. A rich uncle has invested a small fortune and the promoters have a rich sum in their possession.

The conflict centers on a hattle of wits hetween them and the postal authority. An attempt to make it ring true is observed in the gullihility of the promoter in falling for such a scheme and the rival concern heing hoodwinked hy the inventor and his crude machine. However, Barnes scores with his insanity hokum. An alienist is called in and advises the asylum until he is influenced with a fat hribe. The heroine discovers her fiance's predicament. And so it develops into a counterplay with the hero attempting to get away with his hokum. In the end be succeeds hy involving his rival and the government. The picture heing devoid of humor and spontaneity never reaches farcical pretentions.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

At the ———— theatre next ———— "See My Lawer," a motion picture starring T. Roy Barnes, will be shown for the first time. Critics who have seen this film have expressed the opinion that it is one of the cleanest and fastest comedy of its type ever presented. The offering appeared as a stage vehicle several seasons ago and the star was in the stellar role. It is said that Mr. Barnes gives a better performance in the screen version. Written by Max Marcin, an experienced playwright, the story is jammed with humorous situations and startling surprises.

It tells of a young man who is using the mails to induce people to buy stock in an artificial rubber company. An inventor has convinced the youthful promoter that he can produce the rubber by chemicals, and they are out to clean up several millions of dollars. The young man finds himself in a tight jam with the government. He tries to wiggle out by feigning insanity which only increases the already numercus complications. Lloyd Whitlock, J. P. Lockney and Grace Desmond aid in bringing about a good part of the humor in "See My Lawyer." Al E. Christie directed from a scenario by W. Scott Darling.

PROGRAM READER

Another treat is in store for patrons of tbe ———— theatre when "See My Lawyer" is shown next ———— starring T. Roy Barnes. Here is a comedy-drama of the first order with the star establishing himself as one of the screen's best artists. The photoplay is an adaptation of the play of tbe same name by Max Marcin which scored a hit upon the stage several years ago with Mr. Barnes in the leading role. The story of the picture tells of a young man who is trying to float an artificial rubber company. About midway in his promotion scheme he discovers that his product is a fake. How he gets out of his trouble—how he shams insanity to avoid difficulties with the postal authorities—how he finds romance is told in five reels of most enjoyable comedy.

SUGGESTIONS

Perhaps the best way to put this picture over is to get out some publicity matter concerning its stage production, the star, the autbor and the director. Clever copy can be arranged around the title with catch lines attracting the eye. You can make much of Barnes being seen inn his original role. Play up Christie who is responsible for the clever comedies being put out under the Christie banner. Make clever copy around artificial rubber which can be exploited in catch lines—such as "He was cleaning up millions with rubber and he wasn't making erasers either." Play up Barnes' other picture, "So Long Letty." Announce it as a clever comedy based upon a get-rich-quick promotion. Bill it as a live America farce with one of the best comedians of the stage and screen in the stellar role.

Chicago's Classic in Theatres, the Roosevelt Opens to Public

Ascher Brothers New House Makes 19th in Windy City

MOST classic of Chicago's moving picture palaces, and in dignity and beauty, worthy of the historic name it bears, the Roosevelt, Ascher Brothers' magnificent new theatre on North State Street, Chicago, opened its doors to the public on April 23rd.

Joseph R. Noel, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, unlocked the doors of the new cinema palace with a golden key and many men notable in the political and business life of the city were present at the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bowes, of New York, were among the out-of-town notables present, coming to Chicago in a private car to attend. Mr. Bowes represents the Du Pont interests and also is managing director of the Capitol Theatre in New York.

As the first notes of the overture were heard an aeroplane soared overhead and Miss Peggy Doyle, a Chicago newspaper correspondent, dropped thousands of roses on the crowds assembled around the theatre.

The Roosevelt is estimated to have cost approximately two million dollars and is the second theatre costing over one million dollars to be opened by Ascher Brothers within a month, the other being the Capitol in Cincinnati, which is said to have cost one million five hundred thousand. It brings the number of theatres controlled and operated by Ascher Brothers to twenty-five, nineteen of which are located in Chicago.

The opening of the Roosevelt marks the realization of the life's dream of the Ascher brothers, Nathan, Max and Harry, to have their finest and most complete house in the middle of Chicago's loop district, a dream which had its inception shortly after they left the wholesale leather trade in 1909 and entered the picture business, buying the Ellis Theatre at 63rd and Ellis Avenue.

In discussing the name given the new theatre and what it means to the brothers, Nathan Ascher, senior partner, said: "By giving it that name we, of course, bind ourselves to hold the policy of the theatre at all times to the measure of dignity and honor implied. We care for the theatre because it is in the heart of the city to which we owe everything, and we wished to name it so that our respect for it would be obvious. It is useless to point out what the name Theodore Roosevelt means to the public and I wish merely to say that we are glad to accept the obligations that the use of the name implies."

Located in the heart of Chicago's busiest shopping district, directly opposite Marshall Fields, which is known as the world's largest and finest retail store, the Roosevelt presents an imposing appearance. The exterior is Grecian in its general treatment, the materials terra cotta on marble, and as we see the facade in its severe dignity and simplicity marks a great contrast to the richness of ornament and color of the interior.

Peggy Doyle, Chicago newspaper woman, who showered opening crowd at Roosevelt with roses

The terra cotta is by the Midland Terra Cotta Company of Chicago and is a splendid example of the magnificient work turned out by this concern, the pediment being particularly impressive, showing as it does an artistic group of Greek figures against a cerulean blue background, which combined with the use of the blue in other parts of the facade gives warmth to the classic lines of the exterior.

The marble, which was used with fine effect on the exterior and throughout the theatre, was furnished by the Chester N. Marthens Marble Company, one of Chicago's best known firms in this line.

Another feature of the exterior is the marque, the largest in Chicago, which supports poster boards and provides for the flood lighting of the exterior of the theatre. The base beneath this marquee is green marble. The attraction boards, which this canopy supports, were installed by the Lu-Mi-Nus Signs, Inc., makers of many of the finest signs throughout the United States, and are in keeping with the quiet, yet distinctive beauty of the theatre. The attraction boards are fitted with gold beveled letters of original and attractive design.

Owing to the tremendous value of land on State Street, Architect C. Howard Crane and his associate, Mr. H. Kenneth Franzheim, were forced to show great ingenuity in getting an adequate number of seats for the ground space available, and on a piece of property 91 x 94 feet, have erected this house, which is not only beautiful to the eye, but has been laid out to accommodate sixteen hundred and nine seats. This was achieved by revolving the main axis of the auditorium of the theatre so that the mezzanine and balcony floors extend, not only over the foyer, but over the entrance and lobby. In other words, the entire upper portion of the of the large richly ornamented and beautifully theatre is utilized for seating.

The height of the building has been kept down as much as possible, and because of this the sight lines thoughout the house have been worked out very carefully, so that there is no waste height between the various floor levels, all seats in the theatre having a clear view of the stage, which is complete in every respect. Separate stairways are provided for the mezzanine and balcony from the same stair well, worked out in such a way so that there is no interference between the circulation from the two balconies.

The interior is strictly Italian in design and the treatment is rather unusual in that there is an entire dome ceiling and inner dome. One of the impressive things of the architecture of the theatre is the long lines of pilasters supporting both arches of the boxes and the proscenium proper, between which, hang, in beautiful, luxurious folds, curtains of dark blue silk interwoven with silver thread, making a Renaissance pattern.

W. P. Nelson Company, well known Chicago decorators, who are responsible for many beautiful theatres throughout the country, executed the decorative scheme, carrying it out in golds, ivory and blue, all to harmonize with the richness of the walnut finished woodwork.

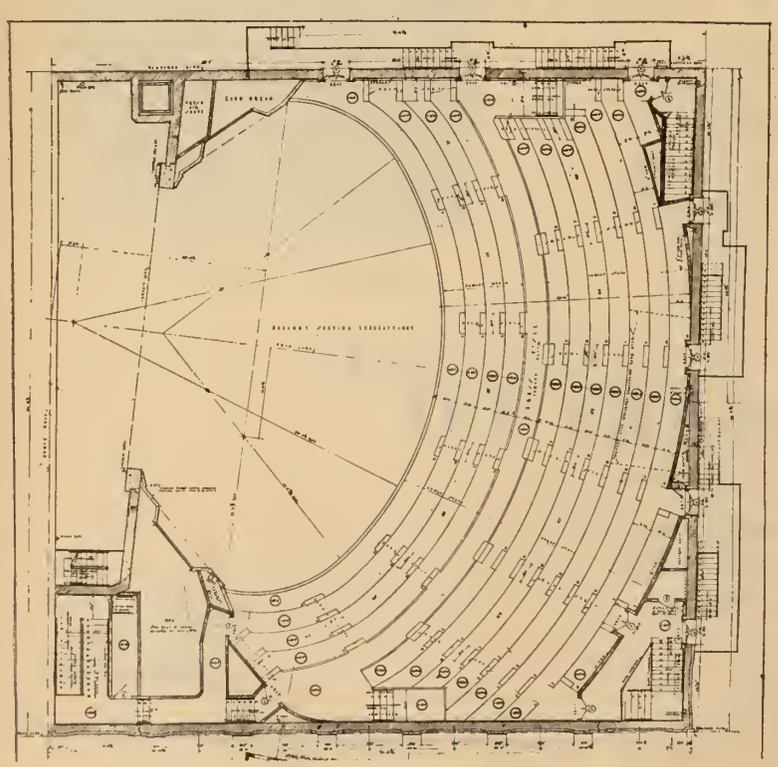
The lighting effects are a unique feature of the Roosevelt, with the high arch of glass in back of the box, through which a warm amber light is most effective, also the indirect lighting colored dome of golds, ivories and blue. One of the special features are the murals painted by John B. Smeraldi, of the New York studios of the W. P. Nelson Company, who also carried on the work at the Allen, the beautiful new Cleveland Theatre.

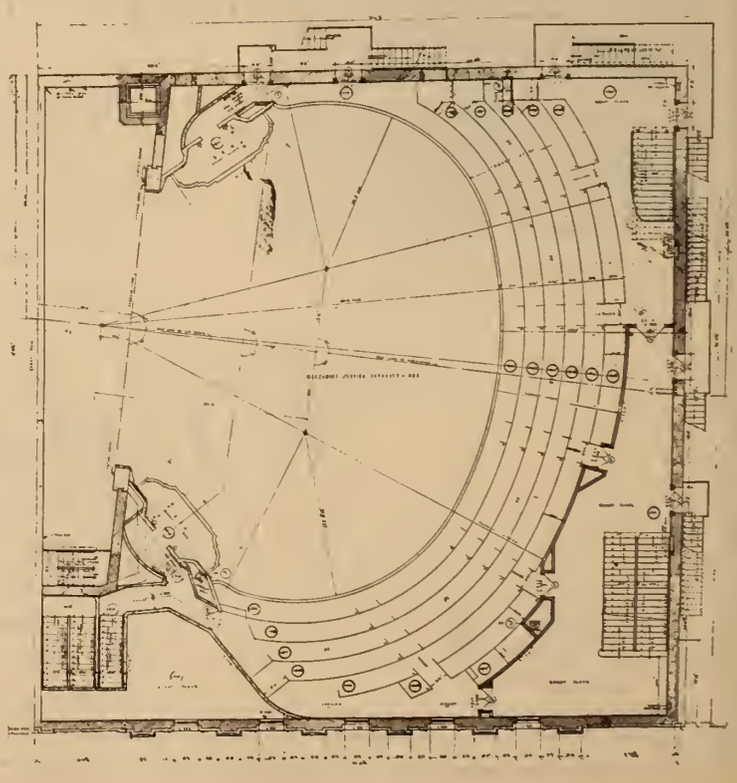
Ascher Brothers in building the Roosevelt gave careful thought to the comfort of their patrons as well as the beauty of the theatre, and the Charles H. Law Company installed a remarkable system, whereby pure drinking water can be obtained by patrons or employees throughout the theatre. This firm has recently finished the plumbing and ventilation for Ascher's Capitol at Cincinnati and has a long record of accomplishments in the theatre building world.

Special cooling devices were installed by E. J. Claffey Company, of Chicago, in addition to the air filtration plant, which takes in air from tunnels running under the loop. Either of these systems insures the maintenance of the seventy degrees temperature all Summer long or lower, if desired.

The Henry Ericsson Company, which has a record of forty successful years in Chicago, were general contractors for the theatre and Henry Ericsson, who pesonally supervised the work said: "It is fire-proof throughout. I have put up many theatres but none so fine as the interior of this. No accidents will occur in the Roosevelt. Every known precaution against the possibility of jams has been taken and the plan of the house is such that vast crowds can be accommodated and never know that there has been a crowd.



Among the fire prevention devices installed is a sprinkler system, which was put in by P. Nacey Company and which is said to be one of the most complete theatre installations in the country, including as it does, pipes in the basement, above the grid iron over stage, the twenty thousand gallon gravity tank, a five hundred gallon per minute fire pump, float switch control and two interior stand pipes with hose and siamese connections for the fire department.



Much credit for the early opening of the Roosevelt is due to the firm of Bradley & Goode, which furnished general consulting and designing services for the owner, architect and general contractor, and in addition, furnished all details of structural steel for both steel and ornamental iron contractors. All their work in this connection was completed ahead of schedule, in spite of unfavorable conditions prevalent at the time their work was under way. Bradley & Goode take particular pride in their performance in the work on this job as the work would not be possible in any but a perfectly balanced organization with each man a specialist in this line.

The elaborate system of electrical wiring in the Roosevelt was installed by the Dearborn Electrical Construction Company, making possible fine stage effects with graduation and dimmer units enabling any color or degree of lighting to be made by the mere turning of a switch.

The Standard Mosaic Tile Company of Chicago installed the art marble tile which gives a beautiful, dignified effect wherever used throughout the theatre.

The railings used throughout the Roosevelt were furnished by the Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati widely known for its work on theatres throughout the United States

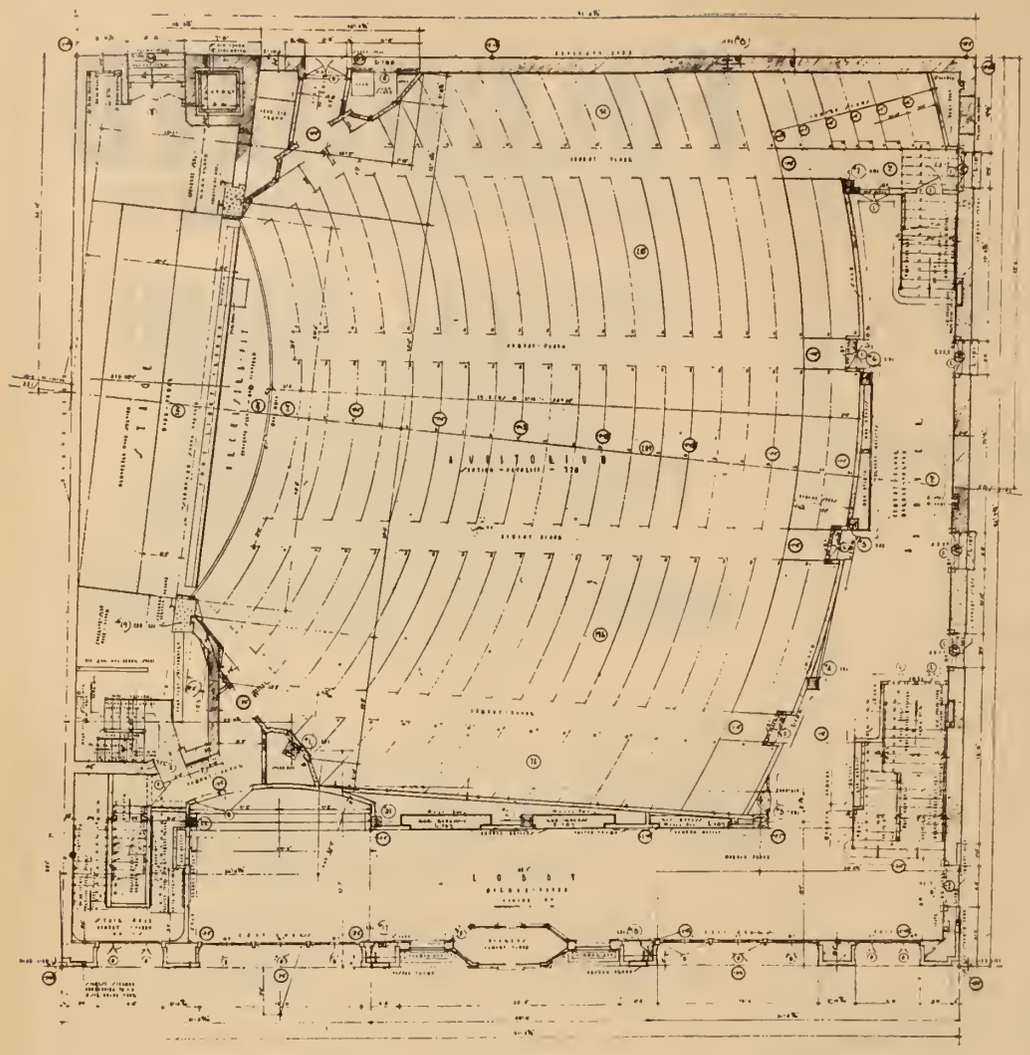
Distinctive Beauty



The dominant feature of the new Roosevelt Theatre is distinctive beauty.

That "LU-MI-NUS" Attraction Boards were chosen to present this theatre to the public is true recognition of the fact that "LU-MI-NUS" bespeaks quality and beauty.

Auditorium layout, Roosevelt theatre. This drawing shows novel manner in which the maximum seating capacity was obtained and are in harmony with the beauty of the theatre. The cross over railings in the balcony are made of two inch polished brass tubing, the balcony, mezzanine and box railings of steel covered with velour and the orchestra furnished with brass posts and velour covered posts.

Ascher Brothers were among the first exhibitors to recognize the importance of music in the presentation of pictures and in keeping with their tradition of offering their patrons the best along this line, have installed a great Kimball organ in the Roosevelt Theatre. It is a magnificent orchestral unit in keeping with the building, founded on majestic diaphones, diapasons, and tibias, and colored by the instruments of the symphony orchestra.

It includes the complete family of strings from the double basses through to the delicate muted violins with a complete brass representation, which is further supplemented by flutes, and other instruments of woodwind character. There are many general or accompanimental stops including the famous vox humana, on account of which the Kimball organ became well known as the organ with the human voice. The instrument has a full set of cathedral chimes and the musical percussion instruments of the orchestra but the unmusical "traps" and effects were intentionally omitted. The organ is located in sound proof chambers at the sides of the proscenium having electrically controlled individual swell shades back of the grille opening into the theatre. A handsome modern unit console is located in the center of the orchestra pit with clear view of the screen and conductor, permitting use of the organ with the orchestra as well as in solo.

Projection details of the Roosevelt have been carried out with the utmost care and precision under the personal direction of Carl H. Fulton, president and production engineer of the Fulco Sales Company, whose retention as the projection engineer of the Ascher's circuit was one of the early steps taken in planning of the details of the new house. No opportunity is allowed for any mischance or interruption in the continuity of the program or the incomplete preparation of musical or other accompaniment to the pictures. Under the direction of Mr. Fulton a battery of five Simplex Projectors were installed, the largest single installation in the middle west. These are in the projection room, in accordance with modern projection engineering concept. In the development of the private reviewing room under the main auditorium of the theatre, however, where two more Simplexes are installed under conditions approximating in most details conditions of projection in the booth itself, Ascher Brothers have adopted the policy of the biggest of big time motion picture theatres. Here each program is projected in advance under the direct supervision of the department heads, each reel being analyzed for its exploitation, musical and projection possibilities. As a matter of convenience the reviewing room projectors are equipped with Mazda lamps rather than the carbon lamp houses used in the projection room itself. In both the projection room and private reviewing room, the following Fulco accessory equipment has been installed: Fulco Inspection Table, Fulco Enclosed Rewind, Fulco-Argo Ideal Film Cabinets, and many other items.

Despite the sharp pitch and short throw in the theatre, the screen results have exceeded expectations and the Roosevelt has been one of the few houses opening in Chicago with practically perfect pictures on the screen. The difficulties in securing perfect projection may be realized when it is stated that the angle of projection is approximately forty-two degrees and the throw but ninety-seven feet, and was accomplished by the careful adjustment of special aperture plates and screen relation.

The Peerless Automatic Arc Controls, manufactured by the J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, are an important part of the Roosevelt's projection room equipment and are in use in Ascher Brother's entire circuit of theatres.

Roy McMullin, formerly manager of the Kenwood Theatre, is manager of the new Roosevelt Theatre and the twenty-five piece orchestra is under the leadership of Harry Rogers, formerly of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Edmund Fitch, widely known musician, is the organist.

The opening program was as follows: Ascher's News Weekly, Pathe Color Reel, Pathe Review, Topics of the Day, Hy Mayer Cartoon and the feature, "Lessons in Love," starring Constance Talmadge.

The policy of a weekly change of pictures has been inaugurated and the admission prices are 55 cents for matinees and 83 cents in the evening.

Theatre Buildings News

Providence, R. I.

Announcement is made that Providence is to have another moving picture theatre which will be called the Broadway theatre. Work will begin in about two weeks on the edifice. It will have a seating capacity of 1,500 in the orchestra and a large balcony capacity, should the owners decide to open the balcony at the start. The house will be located in what is known as the Olneyville district where the Royal community house is located. A company has been organized with a capital of $250,000 to erect the new building. The officers of the corporation are John A. Notte, president; Peter Laudati, A. Rotelli and Herbert Mathewson.

A new community theatre has been added to the list of Providence, R. I., motion picture houses, the opening having taken place March 7. The new theatre is called the Liberty, and is located about 15 minutes car ride from the city's motion picture district. The building and equipment represents an expenditure of more than $300,000. The building was designed by Samuel Bomes who also owns it.

The lobby has been finished in marble and limestone, while the interior finish is old rose and gold. Wall panels are lighted to give a tone effect. During the overture and at suitable times throughout the performance the beauty of the auditorium will be set off by a system of colored lights. Tints for special productions have been included in the stage illuminations.

Wide aisles combined with proper lighting and distinctly marked exits care for the safety of the patrons. All seats are on one floor. Special attention has been devoted to the seating arrangement. Seats are 21 inches wide and the rows are 30 inches apart. Absence of pillars and scientific arrangement add considerably to the seating advantage.

Other features are a rest room for women, smoking room for men and a completely equipped stage for the presentation of all kinds of entertainment from vaudeville to classic drama. A new Moeller organ has been included in the equipment.

Programme will change on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Matiness will be held daily at 2:15, while evening performances start at 6:30 and 8:45 o'clock.

Mr. Bomes has engaged Theeder T. Jietri to manage the Liberty. Mr. Eberstein for the past five years has been identified with the Boston district of the Fox Film Company. The first pictures shown were "The Great Redeemer," "The Saphead" and a Harold Lloyd comedy.

Seattle, Wash.

Announcement has been made by Edgar Milne, Northwest General Manager of the Pantages Vaudeville Circuit, that Alexander Pantages has purchased the Hippodrome theatre in Portland for $500,000, the deal having just been completed.

The Hippodrome, a five-story building erected by Sullivan and Considine at Yamhill and Broadway, Portland, has a seating capacity of 2,000. It occupies a space 200x200 feet.

The purchase of the playhouse is the 22nd owned by Pantages and in addition there are 20 affiliated theatres on the circuit. The new Portland theatre, will as the others, feature among other specials, continued motion pictures, which Mr. Milne says, attract much attention.

Arcade-Strand of Lansing, Mich., Makes Much of Display Frames

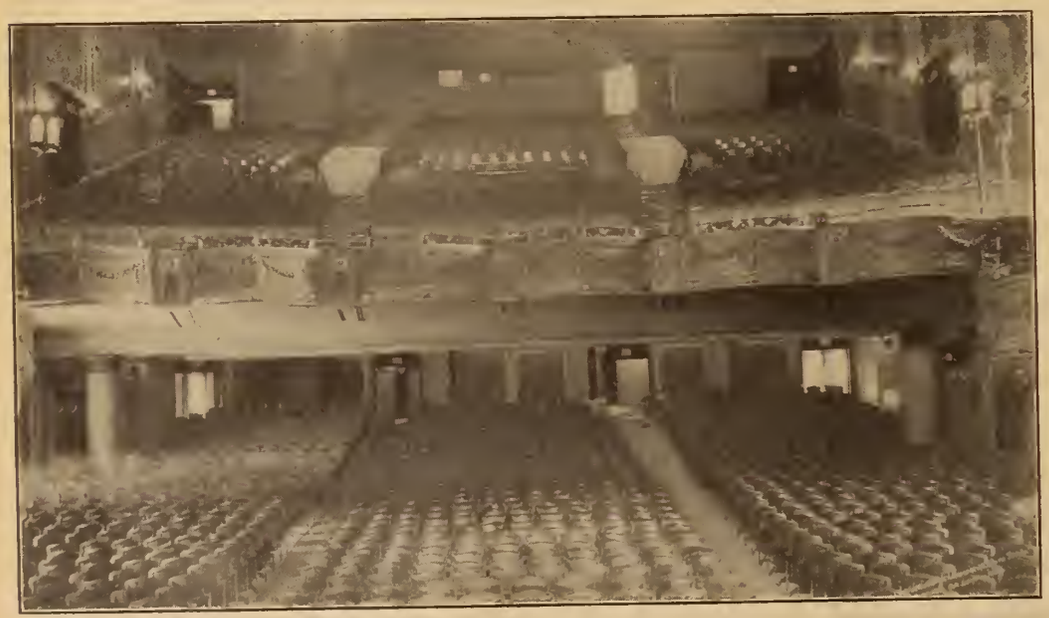
Lobby Is Flanked on Both Sides by Illuminated Displays

The new Arcade-Strand theatre, called by visiting theatre men one of the most beautiful and modern theatres in the Middle West, was opened this week at Lansing, Michigan.

The theatre is the twentieth Butterfield theatre in nine Michigan cities. It was erected at a cost of around $750,000 and combines a theatre seating 2,000 and a commercial proposition numbering 46 shops and offices.

Motion pictures and Keith vaudeville, the combination policy which is this year the popular thing with all larger houses formerly exclusively vaudeville, will be the policy.

The new Arcade-Strand is in the center of Lansing's business center. It has a frontage of 109 feet on Washington avenue, the main street of the city, one and one-half blocks from the main corners. The structure runs back 330 feet, with a 99-foot frontage on Grand avenue, one block back. Besides offices, shops and theatre, the building has quarters for a banquet and convention hall, a branch of the Chamber of Commerce, a great ball room, and manufacturing lofts on Grand avenue.



The building is unusually attractive, inside and out. Approaching it, one feels he has evidence of an architectural effort expressing a semi-public building of high grade character. The two-story structure is executed in a two-tone mottled terra cotta, offering a very inviting aspect.

A twenty-foot arcade, leading from the main street for a distance of 165 feet, studded by 15 shops on the main floor, forms the approach for the new theatre.

Front of Strand theatre, Lansing, Mich.

The arcade is 30 feet high, a multi-colored Spanish ceiling executed in rich ornamental plaster interspersed with amber sky lights, giving this arcade and promenade a festive atmosphere of eternal sunshine. The vestibule of this arcade, entirely executed in polychrome terra cotta, containing the box office, conveniently arranged to handle a large crowd; the public check room, electrically lighted, displays frames and a marble grand staircase leading to the second floor of the arcade. The shops on the main floor have copper bay show windows with marble bases and are lighted with special lighting hoods.

Auditorium of Strand theatre, Lansing, Mich.

The entire floor of this arcade is executed in art marble and connects with an open passage way paralleling the auditorium leading in an unobstructed way straight through to Grand avenue, thus affording a short cut through this entire block and practically creating a marble paved, roofed street.

The balance of the Washington avenue frontage is occupied by three modern shops and marble stairway entrance to the basement. This basement contains, in the form of a community center amusement and service place; a large billiard room, bowling alleys, restaurant, barber shop and storage places for shops. An exceptional high ceiling, and a very clever treatment of decorations add to the comfort and appearance of the establishment.

Artificial and dependable ventilation furnishes fresh air, tempered and washed to all these rooms as well as to the ladies' parlors and retiring rooms.

Reaching the second floor of the building, one finds an enormous convention hall with a parquet dance floor sufficient in size to accommodate 1,000 people. The luxurious appointments of the hall indicate the hall was designed with the minutest details to accommodate conventions, dances, entertainments, lectures and banquets.

At the end of the arcade and to the right are four sets of beveled plate glass doors leading into the foyer of the theatre. This foyer is a two-story affair open to the roof, executed in Kane stone. This foyer is the reception room for the theatre proper. A beautiful marble floor, a

D.C.-D.C. Compensarc

Operating Advantages of Compensarcs

1. Steady strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value.
6. Current easily raised and lowered.
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit.
8. Fading made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

G-E Compensarcs insure good projection

Because the use of the right compensarc on any circuit insures the proper current for the projection lamps, theatres so equipped can give their patrons pictures that are uniformly strong, steady and devoid of flicker or sudden fading of light.

Because, with the G-E outfit, it is so easy for the operator to handle the change-over between reels, there is even at this time no flickering or diminution of light on the screen. The outfit is so arranged that the arc on the second machine can be started and adjusted just before the first machine comes to the end of the reel. Then, by throwing a single switch at the actual time of change-over the shift is effected without the slightest break in the projection.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable. G-E offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service.

graceful carved marble stairway leading to an open balcony under the dome of this indirectly lighted rotunda, are works of art. There are classic columns, richly decorated ceilings and artistically shaped iron railings executed in Roman gold. The latter form balconies of rare beauty.

Three sets of doors lead into the foyer of the main floor of the theatre, designed in Louis XIV style. This foyer, richly carpeted, with rich tapestry panels covering the walls, is separated from the main floor auditorium by a fireproof wall admitting patrons through aisle doors, thus preventing interference from draft and noise and adding to the comfort of the theatre audience.

The interior of the auditorium is designed with balcony loges, is decorated in old rose and ivories and Roman gold. Classical columns supporting the cornice start the proscenium arch and contain the proscenium boxes and with a graceful sweep form the sounding board. It arches from side to side, starting with a laurel leaf festoon plaque allegorically representing "Music" and "Dance." Graceful streamers of ornamental enrichments and grill work form the treatment of this sounding board.

Danz Opens Florence Theatre in Seattle

A NEW name was added to Seattle's list of down town motion picture theatres when the Florence, at 512 Second Avenue, opened its doors. The new playhouse is owned and operated by John Danz, who is also proprietor of the Colonial and the Star, both popular in their respective sections of the city.

The new theatre is in keeping with the idea developed in the larger Eastern cities of locating motion picture theatres in the heart of the commercial section. This makes possible the patronage not only of transients but also of a certain regular clientele from large office buildings.

With the L. C. Smith, the Hoge, the New York Block and the Alaska buildings, within a few steps from the door of the new Florence it will prove a convenient place when relaxation is required by the tired business man.

Isham B. Johnson, architect and contractor, has had entire charge of both the designing and building of the new playhouse.

The playhouse seats approximately 500 persons, with plenty of aisle room. The interior decorative scheme is in old gray, soft to the eye and artistic.

The house has rest rooms for both men and women, and a smoking room opening off the balcony. The sight lines in the house are especially good and allow a perfect view of the screen without effort from every seat.

The electrical installation is of the latest type for theatre illumination, the main auditorium being lighted with three colors indirectly.

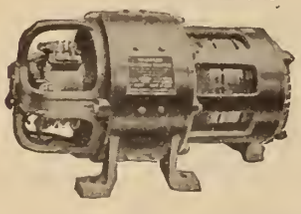
The entire theatre is controlled from the picture booth. One service controlling all motion picture apparatus and lighting, the other service, feeding and controlling all exit, stair and aisle lights, Even though the main service would fail there would be at all times sufficient light for the audience to leave the theatre.

The moving picture room and all apparatus therein is of the latest type and design, being under the absolute control of the operator at all times by what is known as a dead front operating panel and cabinet.

The front of the theatre and the lobby are artistically lighted.

Intercommunicating telephones are installed connecting all the important stations throughout the theatre. The entire installation complete with all apparatus, was furnished, manufactured and installed by the NePage, McKenny Company.

From the projection side Mr. Danz has placed equipment in the operating room which makes it second to no booth in the city. Two Simplex projection machines, equipped with snaplite lenses, will project the picture upon a Gardiner Velvet Goldfibre screen. The equipment was furnished by the Western Theatre Equipment Company who enjoy the distinction of having placed their machines in almost all of the down town motion picture theatres.



The system of ventilation and heating is of the most modern type. Pure air is constantly introduced into the auditorium. A proper temperature for either winter or summer will be provided by the heating and cooling apparatus. This equipment was installed by the West Coast Heating Company who specialize in heating and ventilating systems for modern auditoriums and who recently installed the much larger plant in John Hamricks Blue House theatre, also in Seattle.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

You Tell him, St. Peter

From K. R. J., out in Iowa, comes a question that needs no answer. He asks: "If I put an ammeter in place of a voltmeter what would happen?"

Choking Effect of Adjacent Conductors

J. M., Canada: I have been told that a rheostat of a fixed resistance when placed on an alternating current circuit of the same voltage as a d, c. line will not give the same amperage at the arc. Why is this?

Reply: The rheostat on the AC line will give a lower amperage at the arc due to the inductive effect produced by the passage of the alternating current through the resistors. The amount o fthis induction will depend on the design and construction o fthe rheostat. Induction acts in much the same way as resistance, although entirely different stuff. Both produce voltage drop.

How Hot are the Various Illuminants

In a technical paper prepared by Mr. Preston R. Bassett, of the Sperry Gyroscope Co., Co., and read by the author before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, an interesting study of the temperatures o fthe different light-giving bodies was presented.

According to Mr. Bassett's figures the temperature of the ordinary carbon arc is approximately 3750 degrees Centigrade or about 7000 degrees Fahrenheit. The intrinsic brilliancy of this arc is about 150 candlepower per square millimeter. The sun on the other hand has a temperature of about 10,000 degrees Fahrenheit and a brilliancy of over 900 candlepower per square millimeter.

As showing the accomplishments by are light engineers it is interesting to note that the Sperry High Intensity Arc now being used at the Capitol theatre, New York, accomplishes an intrinsic brilliancy of nearly 700 candle power per square millimeter of crater area with a crater temperature of around 900 degrees Fahrenheit.

Because o fthis increase in intensity it has been found possible to increase the light on the screen while using the same current from 2. foot candles to 6.2 foot candles.

How Many Operators Will Say the Same Thing?

Summe and warm days are almost here. Then is the time when the life of many a projectionist becomes a nightmare. Shut up in a small, undersized and poorly ventilated booth he is expected to turn out a finished product. How he does it is often a mystery to a man who understands the unbearable conditions under which he works. And some of the worst offenders are the theatres owned by the large circuits.

To be specific, there is a Fox theatre in New York City with a projection room that should be condemned by a Board of Health. It is undersized—very much so—it is placed above the upper balcony and it has no forced ventilation and exceedingly poor natural draught. The projectionists get nothing but second-hand air of a poor quality at that.

Here is a particular case that might with good results be studied by the City Board having to do with the health of industrial workers. No man could work in this particular Fox booth for a year and come out of it a well man. More might be said but it is unnecessary here. The motion picture operators unions are taken up the subject of suitable working conditions and in due time their efforts should begin to tell. In the meantime the owners of the theatres might look around and anticipate some of the things they will have to do ultimately.

Who Should Be Responsible for Film Condition

Elsewhere in this issue there appears an article describing a new mechanical service to be rendered by certain exchanges. According to this report the exchange officials have got together and agreed that the theatre man needs more mechanical "brains" than are now at his disposal and that by furnishing him with "mechanical service" the projectors will be kept in better condition which means (or is supposed to mean) that the film will be better treated and last longer. Whether or not this will be the effect remains to be seen. There is considerable to be said on both sides of the question.

In the first place there is no one to deny that the films being supplied to the small town exhibitor are in too many instances in "rotten" condition. The NEWS is in receipt of criticisms of this nature weekly. Exhibitors complain but nothing is ever done. Why, then, should the exchanges look to these self-same exhibitors as the cause of the poor condition.

In politics it is the custom, when a clique is about to be investigated, to call the public's attention to some other factor which is more in need of attention. A smoke screen. Pure and simple. One cannot but wonder if this is not the reason for the action on the upart of the film exchanges. For many moons the trade papers, operator's unions and exhibitors bodies have been emphasizing the need for better film protection and now when it appears that their complaints are bearing fruit, the eyes of the men in power are directed away from the exchanges to the exhibitors. And any criticism of the exhibitor as regards the treatment of film will fall ultimately on the shoulders of the projectionist.

Although the intentions o fthe exchanges may be of the highest order, it might not be a bad policy for the projectionist in the towns affected by this charity to display prominently in a frame on the walls of the booth that oft used phrase: "Beware of Greeks bearing gifts."

According to th report from the Western Theatre Equipmen Co., it has no intention of moving from its present address at 2028 Third avenue, Seattle, bu will use the Johnson site as additional sales space.

Portable Deodorizing Machine on Market

A deodorizing machine that can be used as an air perfumer or as an air treating machine and that costs but two to ten cents a day for operation and upkeep has recently been placed on the market under the name of Claxo. Already a large number of theatres in New York City have been reported as purchasing these machines and finding in them just what they had been in need of for some years.

The Claxo may be run on a.c. or d.c., which makes it adaptable to all theatres having any kind of current. It weighs about 10 pounds and stands about 15 inches high. It may be placed for operation on a shelf or hung from the wall by hooks.

Its finish is of the finest quality and the workmanship is such that the device, even under constant use, should last for many years.

As an adjunct of the ventilating system, particularly in those theatres where it is frequently necessary to treat the air to neutralize disagreeable odors, the Claxo will well repay the purchaser. It is much more efficient than the old-fashioned way of using a spray pump and is never offensive to the patrons. The Claxo Deodorizing Corp., at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, says: "It will soon be as necessary for a theatre to have some deodorizing device similar to the Claxo as for it to have a projection machine for the picture."

Like Noah's Ark The Columbia Arc Is a Life-Saver

Some carbon arcs are so restless they just can't keep still. They wander all over the place causing blurry, ghost-like screening; hence poor uneconomical service.

Not so with

COLUMBIA Projector Carbons

These carbons are game to the core—made with a special material to keep the arc on the job without the semblance of a flicker and "gagged" so they can't hum nor haw, buzz nor burr, growl nor grind.

This feature saves the life of the carbons, the nerves of the projectionist and the patronage of the house.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Special Shift at Powers Factory for A.P.S.

The American Projection Society has accepted the invitation of the Nicholas Power Company to inspect its factory, and the plant will be kept open Friday night, April 6th, in order that the members of the society may pay the visit at a time which is most convenient for them. The membership of the American Projection Society is made up very largely of the projectionists in most of the New York theatres and it was decided that midnight would be the most convenient time for the majority of the members of the society to pay the visit. The employees of the Nicholas Power Company are co-operating with the company by agreeing to work Friday night instead of during the day, and the plan will be open with a force large enough to give a thorough demonstration of the methods used in the manufacture of Power's Projectors.

This event is an unusual one and should be of mutual advantage, as it develops the proper co-operation between those who make the machines and those who operate them. The manufacturer who keeps in close touch with the requirements of up-to-date projectionists is in a better position to assist the exhibitor in satisfying the demands of his patrons for good pictures, well screened. It is also true that the projectionist who makes every effort to know as much as possible about the standard projectors and their latest improvements will be of greater value to the house in which he works. The American Projection Society has contributed much toward the advancement of projection and the visit to the Power's plant to see how their machines are made and to become better acquainted with the recent improvements on Power's Projectors is a further evidence of the enterprise of this organization.

Th membership of the American Projection Society represents a class of projectionists which is rapidly developing throughout this country and its activities are of interest to all progressive exhibitors. The projection room is a poor place for economy and good equipment and good men will always pay the exhibitor big dividends. The picture itself is, of course, highly important, but the manner of putting it on the screen has much to do with the public's enjoyment of the show. The exhibitors are watching with interest the growth of a class of well trained, reliable men who are glad to relieve the manager of the worry of watching the projection very minute during the performance. The American Projection Society and the Nicholas Power Company on May 6th will co-operate in a way which will be beneficial to the entire motion-picture industry and we shall be glad to give further details of the event in our next issue.

Film Exchanges to Give Mechanical Service

A new service which will result in the ultimate benefit of both the exhibitor and the exchanges of Indiana has just been installed by the exchange managers of Indianapolis.

An expert mechanic, with a thorough knowledge of motion-picture projection machines, has been employed by the various exchange managers to investigate all cases where prints have been received in bad condition.

The object of the plan is not only to save the exchanges great loss of time and finances through the destruction of prints, but also guarantee to the next exhibitor who happe to book the picture a print in perfect conditic

Whenever a print is received at any Indiana olis exchange which is not in as good conditic as it was when it left the vault, ordinary we and tear excepted, the emergency mechanic sent out to find out the cause of the trouble.

His duties will not only consist of inspectir the machines, but also to lend his assistance the operator whenever possible, and, in additio to see that the inspection departments of tl various exchanges do their utmost to keep tl prints in the best possible condition.

The exchanges which are co-operating i this plan include Associated First National Pi tures, Inc.; Famous Players-Lasky Corp., Path Fox, Select Pictures Corp., Educational Fil Corp., Universal Film Corp., Robertson-Col and Reelcraft.

Amusement Supply Mov ing to Larger Quarters

Owing to increase of business, the Amuse ment Supply Company are moving to large quarters at 740-742 South Wabash Avenue Chicago.

About one year ago this concern obtaine larger quarters in the Consumers Building, bu they have now outgrown them.

The new offices are located in Chicago's nev film district, which extends along Wabash Ave nue from Sixth to Ninth Street.

They extend to all exhibitors a cordial invi tation to call, where they will have on displa all the latest goods for the motion-picture theatre.

Music Article

ow, there are a lot of hard-boiled, disgruntled, satisfied "mechanics" (not musicians) who e nothing about music but their pay envelopes. t believe me, they are in the little minority. al musicians love their work, they delight in ying well, winning applause from audiences d in pleasing their colleagues. Make them l their importance—give them the freest hand u can in doing their work, so that they are on ir honor, so that their best instincts are given opportunity to soar, and then tell them when y do well..... And all will be as peace and ey in Arcadia.

Some little points in conclusion, points that n't amount to much in themselves, but do nt in holding the good will and loyalty of musicians:

Give the conductor an opportunity to make entrance with lights upon him—so that the dience has a chance to applaud him. At the l of a number, give the orchestra a chance take its applause before the lights go out. ce in a while, even allow the orchestra to e an encore.

n the advertising, run the name of the con-ctor. Get it on the billboards, into the publi-y stories. Seek to create an atmosphere about musician.

Allow the fellows of the orchestra to play a o once in a while—if only once a season—ke everybody feel he has a chance to make eputation. If you have room in your printed grams once in a while run the names of all musicians. It will surely please them.

Once a year arrange a concert, say of a Sun-y morning, for the orchestra—let them make benefit for themselves. It will bring prestige the house, money to the musicians and good l all around.

Have a good word for all the men—even the mmer and the last second fiddler. Be one the boys. Be the first to applaud and the last leave off!

THE NEW MUSIC FORUM

(Under this heading the new ideas, queries, suggestions are gathered. This is where the motion-picture fraternity gets together on music.)

Frequently we find a picture opening with a lengthy ne or Section without displaying any particular iking dramatic or pathetic incident. At the same e it contains all the necessary introductory and ding themes, development and a considerable amount intensity for which it is somewhat difficult to place table music. I notice, if the intensity is not too matic in its texture, many play a good class waltz, ers try a few miscellaneous numbers of a neutral aracter and again others try a standard overture ich is probably the best selection so far. Operatic ections are too spasmodic and lack continuity in ping with the connected matter of the picture. I uld like to suggest a field as yet not much touched on, the symphony and the sonata. Possibly the ata might prove the most acceptable of the two. ink what a vast field is open here—Haydn, Mozart, ethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Greig, and many ers. The first movement of a symphony or a sonata composed of leading themes, development and gen-lly a certain amount of intensity which is the same terial we find in the opening of most pictures of better class.

The piano-organ and piano and violin sonatas will en up a wonderful field of research for the publisher of orchestral music, the orchestral director, the organist and the pianist.

I would like some opinion of this subject.

Yours truly,

LESLIE GROSSMITH,
Glencoe Lodge, Vancouver, B. C.

Music Editor:

I have seen my lengthy letter in your columns and am grateful to you for printing it. We have more and more organists registering with us for theatre positions; it is our intention to have organists ready for any position in any part of the country. I understand Mr. Brandt thinks it would be foolish to expect a theatre to take an unknown man on our recommendation. We don't recommend any, we only learn fully of their educational preparation and practical experience (including salaries already earned) and base our opinions on that; and then we merely give the theatre a list of men who are thus qualified to apply for the post. That's all anybody can do. While the theatre takes a slight risk in every new organist, the organist has to pull up stakes, abandon his home, his pupils, all his opportunities, and go into a new city, to run the chance of being discharged by a manager in a week without any cause whatever. So the chance is more against the organist than the theatre. However, it is all a matter of cooperation, we shall do our best to line up the organists and make them realize that they must first be fit for a position before they can expect to get it.

Remember that we are specialists on organists and organs, and when you have anything you can turn over to us we shall give it best attention.

T. SCOTT BUHRMAN,
The American Organist.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have read your excellent article in the News of Nov. 20th last, also Mr. Winkler's address at the Music Conference dealing with this question from the cue-sheet writers' point of view, There is, however, no indication in the report of the Music Conference that the opinions of those who use cue sheets were heard, hence my desire to say a few things, and also offer a suggestion for putting this most important service on a practical basis from the point of view of those who need it.

To those musicians who must rely upon cue sheets to lay out an appropriate setting for their pictures (and they far outnumber those who have no need for them) it is evident that all the producers are not doing what they should to provide this necessary service. Some producers do not provide cue sheets at all, while cue sheets provided by other Producers vary in value from good, poor, to almost useless.

Who Uses Cue-Sheets?

The De Luxe houses, with week runs, do not necessarily rely on cue sheets, as they employ a competent musical staff who preview the pictures and arrange their own settings. The smaller houses, however, which change programmes almost every day, depend entirely on some help from the Producers to enable them to lay out an appropriate musical setting. It is a fair estimate to assume that two-thirds of the theatres in the country badly need this service. Seeing that music is 40 per cent of the show, are the producers not sufficiently alive to their own interests to provide REAL SERVICE in this respect?

Specimen Cue-Sheets.

One reputable film corporation hands out a poorly typewritten cue sheet, and by way of suggesting what music to play, it gives the following crude description, i. e., No. 1—THEME (what kind of theme is left to imagination); No. 2—MODERATO (all moderato tempo compositions do not have the same appeal); No. 3—ROMANCE (what kind of romance?) No. 4—MISTERIOSO (what kind of misterioso, light, heavy, gruesome, or what?) No. 5—ANDANTE (is this neutral, pathetic, plaintive, or what?)

One of the best men preparing cue-sheets always gives a good variety of publications, and has got away from the hackneyed compositions almost invariably suggested by some other dispensers of cue sheets. He would make his cue-sheets even more helpful, however, if he would be more explicit as to the character of the composition, particularly noting light or heavy pathetic and misterioso numbers. Not all musicians are acquainted with the numbers he quotes, and they should be better described, so that proper numbers may be substituted. He would also create more heart interest by using or suggesting some beautiful love ballads as themes sometimes, where they are justified. It is also very helpful to have the various effects, even minor ones, such as bird whistles, etc., marked in where they belong. These little effects are very important.

In many other cue-sheets, dramatic climaxes, auto and other accidents, often occurring without warning, are not noted at all, with the consequent risk of their escaping the notice of the leader or organist on the first show. All live practical men preparing cue-sheets would naturally note the importance of such incidents, and mark them in.

The idea of some music publishers advertising through the medium of cue sheets is an old story. Their monotony bores me, their machine-like uniformity exasperates me sometimes, too. A system is undoubtedly required classifving numbers which are not out of print, but it should be a system thoroughly comprehensive, and based on fine dramatic instinct and heart interest.

Preparation of Cue-Sheets.

I assume a cue-sheet writer sees a picture only once, and equipped with a stop watch in one hand and a stenographer at the other, dictates whatever he thinks fits a scene as it appears on the screen. He may not, of course, be able to do more than this, for the remuneration he receives.

I maintain, however, that it is impossible to get the best results in this way. I believe the picture should be first viewed as a whole, to get a true perspective of the whole story. The picture would thus have to be run twice, and after viewing it the first time, and getting the atmosphere, sizing up the heart interest and general appeal of the picture, then with library index, elaborately classified, in hand, view the picture the second time. This, of course, only applies to men who devote all their time to writing cue-sheets. Those cue-sheet writers who are actively engaged in directing an orchestra playing for pictures can adjust their programmes after the first show, if necessary, and their cue-sheets are usually the best, as in the interests of self-preservation they dare not become stale.

Synopsis of Story Useful.

In some cases where I have been able to find a synopsis of the story, it has been a greater help than some cue sheets, especially when the synopsis has been fairly full. Some of the trade papers give good synopses of some pictures, and some film companies print a synopsis with their exploitation and press matter, although I wish some of them would sometimes publish a little more synopsis and less publicity junk.

However, I have found my best results are obtained when I have a synopsis of the story and a good cue-sheet, and this brings me to my suggestion for solving this question of MUSIC SERVICE WITH THE PICTURE.

Plea for Combined Literary and Musical Synopsis.

When we get right down to it, any real musician, with dramatic instinct, whether leader or organist, wishes to interpret a picture in accordance with his own ideas of appropriateness, within the limits, of course, of certain well defined rules, as only by using his own judgment can he experience the thrill of work well done. His own psychic self is injected into the picture story by his response musically to the various emotions portrayed on the screen, and it is this indefinable something which points one musician out from the 'crowd,' in the interpretation of motion pictures. A synchronized musical score may be a help to many musicians, but, after all, it is the product of other men's brains, and the real leader or organist will always desire to interpret pictures his own way.

How, then, can these musicians be supplied with the help they sorely need? My suggestion is the preparation of a combined literary and musical synopsis for every picture produced. This should present no difficulty to the right musicians with literary ability. A consecutive account of the story should be printed in one column, and musical suggestions, cues for effects, etc., in the adjoining column.

Such a synopsis would enable the leader or lone organist to "sense" the musical requirements of a picture, and if he did not use the number suggested, he would be reasonably sure that his own selection would be appropriate. He would not be likely to become confused, as he is apt to be when dividing his attention between cue sheet, music and screen. Having got the story in the back of his mind, or subconsciousness, the task of musically following it as it is being unfolded on the screen would be much simplified. He would not be wondering what the next development would be. HE WOULD KNOW.

I believe that if such a literary and musical synopsis were available for every picture shown, it would be a great improvement over the present haphazard way of providing this most necessary service.

What do other leaders and organists think?

T. J. A. MAPP,
Organist,
5220 Lndiana Ave., Chicago.

tractive. The front is a combination of marble and Tiffany glass in pattern worked in a combination of black and gold, a scheme original with the architect. A new idea of his is also expressed in the overhanging front, which is called a latern marquise built of framed opal glass.

The Hofius Steel and Equipment Company furnished the steel used in the new theatre. The Consumers Hay & Feed Company furnished brick, lime, cement, etc. The Tregoning Manufacturing Company had the contract for all the mill work and the very artistic doors and scrolls in the playhouse give evidence of their thoroughness.

In the extensive illumination of the new theatre a great quantity of Westinghouse Madza lamps are used which were furnished by the National Electric Company. The ornate front was manufactured by the Independtnt Sheet Metal Works.

The very attractive title in the front of the theatre as well as the beautiful marble lobby was furnished by T. C. Thomas. The Seattle Marble & Tile Company also furnished both tile and marble for parts of the interior and exterior. The Columbia Valley Lumber Company with two yards in different locations in Seattle furnished all lumber used in the construction of the new theatre.

"The policy of this house" said the house manager, "will be to show the very best pictures that are produced and those that have gone well in other cities and big motion picture houses over the country. We realize that a house of this nature should cater to the very best in order to draw people to it because it is not a big 1,500 or 3,000 seated house in a neighborhood or district where thousands pass every few minutes, nor one that can afford a big high-class orchestra.

"Houses of this kind in big or small cities should not try to fool themselves that they can simply stick up a shingle with a name of 'Movey' on it and expect people to rush in, no matter what the screen is showing. The small house on a busy street must realize that the people who are passing by are the same ones who attend the other houses and are looking for good pictures, not poor ones.

Lucas Supply House Active in South

Mr. Harry K. Lucas, head of the well-known Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, Ga., sole Southern Distributors of Simplex, spent several busy days in New York last week, the greater part of which were occupied by conferences with E. M. Porter, General Manager of the Precision Machine Company. These conferences had to do a great deal with the proposed Simplex Spring Drive which is about to be launched throughout the country and which is responsible for certain changes in the Simplex Organization that are to be announced shortly.

Mr. Lucas reports that the so-called business depression has not hit his territory as hard as would be expected, and states also that the large building at Marietta street is now entirely taken over by his company, which gives the Lucas Company the unchallenged right to be termed "America's Greatest Motion Picture Equipment House."

Among the recent Simplex installations reported by the Lucas Atlanta office are the following:

Dixie theatre, McMinnville, Tenn; Colonial theatre, Richmond, Va.; Lyric theatre, Blacksburg, Va.; Elks theatre, New Ibera, La.; Palace theatre, Marksville, La.; Palace theatre, Thomaston, Ga.; Pastime theatre, Loreanville, La.; R. W. Lindsay, Allisonia, Va.; Coke Westmoreland Co., Woodruff, S. C.; Thomas E. McMinn, Ft. Valley, Ga., and 24 others.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to January 15, 1920.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

ALL DOLLED UP (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....MAR. 12
"Pleasing offering with the star in an ideal role."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture, though we had only average business with it and it did not come up to my expectations as a box office attraction." "A nice little picture, with no special attraction. Gladys Walton scores again, as a pert little 'flapper,' and is gaining quite a following." "Dandy little picture. Had more than the usual business with it." "Good business attended this feature. Picture pleasingly done."

ALL SOULS EVE (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....MAR. 5
"Incredible plot, but has appealing moments."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture. Receipts poor." "Played this on a double bill with "Plaything of Broadway." The two make a pleasing program well liked by our patrons."

AMATEUR DEVIL, AN (PARAMOUNT) BRYANT WASHBURN...MAR. 12
"A decidedly mediocre comedy with Washburn."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Two days to average business."

BARBARIAN, THE (PIONEER) MONROE SALISBURY.....FEB. 26
"Fine backgrounds but very little action."—M. P. News.

BARE KNUCKLES (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....MAR. 19
"Above the average thriller, only in exteriors."—M. P. News.

BARS OF IRON (STOLL FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST.....,MAR. 19
"Just an ordinary production."—M. P. News.

BEAU REVEL (INCE-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 26
"Fairly interesting, though would be more convincing if developed humorously."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A wonderful picture which sure did go 'over the top.' Brought large box office receipts and much satisfaction from the audiences." "Fairly good picture with average business." "A splendid picture, well made, well acted, beautifully staged, but for some reason or other it didn't pull them in and business was only average." "Clever story with many new angles which makes a very high class and interesting photoplay. Drew splendidly and we played to big business for the week."

BELOW THE DEADLINE (ASCHER PRODUCTIONS-STATE RIGHTS) WARNER-BIRON .....APR. 30
"A well made melodrama, full of action."—M. P. News.

BIG ADVENTURE, THE (UNIVERSAL) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 23
"Simple heart interest picture carries some appeal."—M. P. News.

BIG PUNCH, THE (FOX) BUCK JONES.....FEB. 19
"Buck Jones as a minister; a dull picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good entertainment. Extra big business one day."

BLACK BEAUTY (VITAGRAPH) JEAN PAIGE.....JAN. 22
"Entertaining picture made from famous classic."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Business satisfactory because of the excellence of the picture and the fact that so many children come to see it." "One of the best pictures I have ever seen from the standpoint of a patron. Appeals to all ages and classes. Big business at all performances. School children essay contest helped put it over." "An excellent picture which appealed strongly to the younger set, but which failed to draw adults as we expected. Did only average business during its week's run." "Proved a terrible flivver for this house, much to surprise of management. An excellent picture, nevertheless."

BLACK ROSES (ROBERTSON-COLE) SESSUE HAYAKAWA.....APR. 30
"Hayakawa has entertaining mystery picture here."—M. P. News.

BLAZING TRAIL, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....MAY 7
"Some moments of interest in Mayo's latest."—M. P. News.

BLUSHING BRIDE, THE (FOX) EILEEN PERCY.....MAR. 19
"Exceedingly weak; might have made a good Sunshine."—M. P. News.

BRANDED SOUL, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 19
"Redemption story carries little appeal and is badly overacted."—M. P. News.

BREAKING POINT, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE .....FEB. 5
"More than a vehicle—a well-sustained marital drama."—M. P. News.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE...FEB. 5
"What the public has been waiting for from Fatty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Sure-fire winner. Pleased the audiences immensely. Box office returns much larger than usual." "Good comedy bringing the usual business." "This is a splendid picture and went over big with our audience. Played to large business for one week." "Capacity houses on opening Sunday in spite of heavy rain all afternoon and evening. A big winner with the public." "A great picture. It pleased my audiences, consequently the box office receipts were larger than usual." "'Fatty' went over in this picture in a surprising manner. Picture played to capacity for seven-day run." "Don't miss this one, a really big box office play." "Best box office returns in three months. Thoroughly pleased and people talked about it which brought increasing throngs." "Tickles 'em stiff—doing big." "This picture got plenty of laughs. An old favorite which is done over well in film form."

BURGLAR PROOF (PARAMOUNT) BRYANT WASHBURN.....FEB. 12
"Washburn's best one in a dog's age—a real comedy."—M. P. News.

BURIED TREASURE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) MARION DAVIES .....FEB. 26
"Spectacular production, but story is unimpressive,"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big production. Story not convincing. However, it is the best thing the star has done so far. Fair box office value." "Interest holding picture lavishly produced, but failed to pull during its run at this house and we played to poor business." "This picture flopped and was pulled off in middle of week run and another film substituted."

CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST..APR. 16
"A radical departure; highly artistic and imaginative."—M. P. News.

CHARMING DECEIVER, THE (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 16
"Mild interest because of its conventional treatment."—M. P. News.

CHICKENS (INCE-PARAMOUNT) DOUGLAS MACLEAN.....MAR. 26
"Forced comedy and hokum never ring the bell."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brought average business. Fair picture." "Played this on the program with the Universal feature 'If Only Jim,' starring Harry Carey to two days of extra big business." "Not as good as previous McLean-May productions and the 'feminine half' of this combination was sadly missed. Still this picture was good and drew well." "Too weak even for the chickens. Wouldn't even stand on a double program as a comedy." "About the usual Douglas MacLean feature; good farce, but not up to '23½ Hours' Leave.'"

CITY OF SILENT MEN, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN .....APR. 16
"Interesting crook story with rich details and heart interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Splendid picture, but rather heavy for this time of year. People left theatre feeling oppressed. Big opening, however."

COLORADO (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....FEB. 19
"Mayo's latest strong in action."—M. P. News.

CONCERT, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Another stage vehicle adaptation which flops."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Accurate photoplay of stage success. Moderately popular. Not enough action in it to make it a big success as a picture."

CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT, A (FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Mark Twain modernized in an appealing picture."—M. P. News.

COUSIN KATE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....FEB. 12
"Alice Joyce has strong personality in 'Cousin Kate.'"—M. P. News.

DANGEROUS MOMENT, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS...APR. 16
"A light and pleasing romance of Greenwich Village."—M. P. News.

DECEPTION (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 30
"Historical drama is colorful and impressive."—M. P. News.

DESPERATE YOUTH (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....APR. 30
"Goes back to the early days of pictures, but is entertaining."—M. P. News.

DEVIL, THE (ASSO.-EXHIB.-PATHE) GEORGE ARLISS.....JAN. 29
"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the photoplay masterpieces of the age. Wonderful production. Excellent acting. But a picture that will appeal only to the discriminating." "A picture that aroused the curiosity of the public. A good house all week. An artistic production." "Entertaining picture. Pleased intelligent audiences. Only mildly enjoyed by the ordinary run of people who do not like to think in the movies and who prefer a pleasant tale. Fair box office attraction due to the star." "High class picture that appeals to the discriminating. Well liked by all who saw it. Did good business. Holding it over for second week."

DIANE OF STAR HOLLOW (PRODUCERS SECURITY CORP.—STATE RIGHTS) BERNARD DURING.....APR. 23
"A complex story, well acted and entertaining because of action."—M. P. News.

DOLLAR A YEAR MAN, THE (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE APR. 9
"Weak humor and hokum make this a poor effort."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A sure-fire attraction, which brought extra large box office receipts." "Fatty Arbuckle always a sure bet and this picture proves to be no exception. Capacity house all week." "Unfortunately,

Fatty Arbuckle does not live up to his fan's expectations of him. This is no worse than previous feature-Arbuckles I've played—but it was no better, and business was poor." "Went over great. Fine audience picture."

DUCKS AND DRAKES (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....APR. 9
"Bebe Daniels has a lively offering here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Best Bebe Daniels has to her credit up to date. Business was better than it has been for several weeks." "Bebe Daniels goes her former productions one better in this picture. A snappy production that brings results at the box office."

DYNAMITE ALLEN (FOX) GEORGE WALSH.....MAR. 5
"Disconnected and wildly improbable melodrama."—M. P. News.

813 (ROBERTSON-COLE) WEDGWOOD NOWELL.....JAN. 22
"Interesting moments in mystery story."—M. P. News.

EAST LYNNE (BALLIN-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 26
"Modernized version of play and book should interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Stormy weather held down attendance on this picture, but those who saw it were pleased and we are holding this excellent picturization of the famous stage play over for a second week."

EASY ROAD, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....FEB. 26
"Rather mild for Thomas Meighan."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Our patrons seemed to like this one which played to excellent business for one week." "Thomas Meighan draws no matter what sort of picture, or role he has. This production an excellent one, and played to excellent business." "Showed in conjunction with Lloyd Hamilton in 'Moonshine.' A week's capacity business. The picture offers a good field for exploitation. Thomas Meighan at his best." "Nothing extraordinary in this picture, but business was fair." "Not as good as some of the other Meighan pictures. Meighan well liked, however, and matinee business was particularly good." "An ordinary story put over by the star's personality. Business was good." "We label this as a good picture. The box office statement was better than average."

EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH, THE (PARAMOUNT) BILLIE BURKE.....FEB. 26
"Billie Burke has real opportunities in polite comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Women came to see Billie and the gowns. Did better than expected, as she has not done well at all of late." "A fair picture. Nothing extraordinary. Average business." "One of the star's best, bnt it only drew fair business." "Played it on the bill with 'Sunset Sprague' (Buck Jones) to extra big business two days." "Two days to average business." "The picture drags in several spots and needs improving, but the name, 'Billie Burke,' filled my house for a week."

EXTRAVAGANCE (METRO) MAY ALLISON.....MAR. 5
"Interest dulled by a too lengthy picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A program picture with nothing out of the ordinary to recommend it."

FIGHTING STRANGER, THE (CANYON PICTURES-STATE RIGHTS) FRANKLYN FARNUM.....JAN. 29
"Selig produces another thriller, with Franklyn Farnum."—M. P. News.

FIRE CAT, THE UNIVERSAL) EDITH ROBERTS.....FEB. 12
"Edith Roberts scores in Carmenesque role."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture to big business one day."

FIRST BORN, THE (HAWORTH-ROBERTSON-COLE) SESSUE HAYAKAWA.....FEB. 12
"A title, heart interest and Hayakawa's acting should attract them."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"By far the best picture that Sessue Hayakawa has ever made. It is a true conception of Oriental life."

FLAME, THE (STOLL FILM-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 5
"A good production with foreign setting."—M. P. News.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT (DE MILLE-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST..FEB. 5
"De Mille scores another ten strike; a great audience picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"DeMille's pictures always draw immense crowds. This was proved interesting, but not startling. Patrons like the atmosphere of affluence which permeates these pictures. Constantly large attendance." "This one packed the house every performance. A very fine entertaining picture and patrons semed well pleased." "A fairly good picture with business about as usual." "Drew a capacity house all week. Considered one of the best attractions that has been produced in months." "Very good. The people came the first day in response to wide advertising and they told their neighbors it was a good picture." "A very good picture. Handicapped by strong opposition." "Went over big on the second week of its run." "Gorgeous costumes and dazzling scenic effects, but the picture drags in spots. A good box office attraction." "Pleased those who saw it, but not enough saw it." "Gradually built up as run progressed, but not as big as anticipated."

FORBIDDEN LOVE (WISTARIA PRODUCTIONS-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 16
"Rather morbid, but has interesting moments."—M. P. News.

FOUR HORSEMEN, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Marvelous production reaches the heights of picture art."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Packed them in on this one. People curious to see it. Great box office attraction."

FREEZE OUT, THE (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....APR. 9
"Carey's personality its chief asset."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This got big business for us and they seemed to like it." "Just fair box office bet for us and pleased fairly well."

FRONTIER OF THE STARS, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....JAN. 22
"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Meighan is a great favorite here and will always pack a house. This vehicle is satisfactory, but a startling winner." "Picture pleased generally and drew well. Business fine." "Not up to Meighan's standard. His own work excellent, but support poor and not worthy of him. Business good, for Meighan is a great drawing card for me." "This one went over big and continued so during run. Audiences well pleased with the story." "Thomas Meighan always sure box office winner at this house and this picture, clean and wholesome throughout, was enjoyed by everyone." "This is rather an average picture. It started with big business but this decreased towards the end of the week."

GARDEN OF RESURRECTION, THE (STOLL) SPECIAL CAST.....APR.
"Poor direction makes this one mediocre."—M. P. News.

GHOST IN THE GARRET, THE (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY GISH..APR. 1
"A rollicking farce comedy with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.

GILDED LILY, THE (PARAMOUNT) MAE MURRAY.....MAR. 1
"Mae Murray's latest is a winner."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Attracted capacity audiences for a seven-day run." "This picture attracted big audiences and house was packed every performance." "The kind of picture patrons expect to see Mae Murray in. About the best she has done. Consistent business with a clientele she has built up." "Only Mae Murray's tricky costumes, and dancing held this up. Business just fair, despite heavy advertising." "Superb production. Well directed, extravagantly conceived and a good audience picture." "Held up well for a two-week run. As a whole big picture from every angle." "Star is popular and in consequence pictnre went over all right." "Went over big. Everybody liked it and said so." "This one was mediocre. Business was only fair."

GODLESS MEN (BARKER-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 1
"Unpleasant story depending on acting and unusual twist to story."—
Exhibitor Comment—"Comfortable business, which is better than expected Holy Week. Picture has great possibilities as a drawing card under normal times."

GOD'S GOOD MAN (STOLL FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 2
"A poor production from all angles."—M. P. News.

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....JAN. 2
"More interesting via the printed page."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some Barrymore pictures bnt enjoyed and full houses resulted." "A treat for those who like a good time. Honse was in a chuckle all the time. Good business. Steady all week." "A poor pictnre and business was below average during run."

GREAT DAY, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 1
"Good production given mediocre story."—M. P. News.

GREATER CLAIM, THE (METRO) ALICE LAKE.....FEB. 1
"Alice Lake scores in ordinary story."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"Average production. Business good for the first three days."

GUILE OF WOMEN, THE (GOLDWYN) WILL ROGERS.....MAR. 1
"Rogers, good story and clever titles make this fine entertainment."—M. P. News.

HANDS OFF (FOX) TOM MIX.....APR. 1
"Humorous touches make Western entertaining."—M. P. News.

HEART OF MARYLAND, THE (VITAGRAPH) CATHERINE CALVERT.....APR. 1
"Excellent picture from a sure-fire success."—M. P. News.

HER FIRST ELOPEMENT (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....JAN. 2
"Inconsequential and too vapid for feature length."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture but opposition was too strong to have any business."

HER LORD AND MASTER (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....APR. 1
"Hardly heavy enough for Alice Joyce."—M. P. News.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND (INCE-PARAMOUNT) ENID BENNETT.JAN. 2
"Rather hectic in spots, but keeps the interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played it on the bill with 'The Iron Rider,' the Fox production starring William Russell, to extra big business for two days."

HIGHEST BIDDER, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY.....APR. 3
"Often told story holds little interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Star well liked by my patrons, and picture was good, but business was only fair."

HIS OWN LAW (J. PARKER READ-GOLDWYN) HOBART BOSWORTH.....FEB. 1
"Trite story makes poor screen material."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fine picture, but did only fair bnsiness."

HOLD YOUR HORSES (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE).....FEB. 5
'Comedy titles and good incident make this fine entertainment.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Jnst ordinary picture and did jnst ordinary business." "Fairly good picture. Business about as usual." "An excellent photoplay which received a right royal welcome from patrons. An example of what screen lovers want. Capacity business." "Great! Played this with a special St. Patrick's Day program and cleaned up. Moore is immense in roles of this sort."

HUSH (GARSON-EQUITY) CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.....JAN. 29
"Interesting picture on a familiar theme."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big picture, box office receipts increasing each day." "Somewhat different to the nsual Young pictures, bnt pleased about fifty-fifty. Consider it her best, bnt my patrons didn't agree with me. She was not as pretty as nsual, bnt far more interesting." "Very fine picture which should go over well wherever Clara Kimball Young is liked. Bad weather cut down our attendance below average dnring week's run." "We thought picture np to Clara Kimball Young's standard but played to poor business for week which we attribnte to bad weather." "Uninteresting story with Clara Kimball Young as the bright spot. Business only fair." "Jnst an average picture. Abont usual business." "Greater business than usual with this delightful picture."

I AM GUILTY (ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS—J. PARKER READ, JR.) LOUISE GLAUM.....MAY. 7
"Mystery story carries a trick finish and much melodrama."—M. P. News.

ICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

F ONLY JIM (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....MAR. 5
" Corey's latest is amusing and entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Great business with this one. Capacity houses. great deal of word-of-mouth advertising." " Played this feature on tbe program witb the Paramount production 'Chickens,' featuring Douglas MacLean, to extra big business for two days."

NSIDE OF THE CUP, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 22
" Conventional melodroma effectively staged."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Good story, well done. Pleased the masses. We had a satisfactory two week run." " A good picture with which he had more than usual business." " Plot a little difficult to follow but on the whole picture was above the average and we played to good business during week it showed here." " Two days to big business." " A splendid feature which pleased both reviewers and audiences. Played to excellent business."

T ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH .....FEB. 26
" Inadequate story, but a veritable fashion show."—M. P. News.

IM THE PENMAN (WHITMAN BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....APR. 2
"Grimly realistic but artistic picture from famous stage play."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Very artistic, but too gloomy. People didn't enjoy it."

UST OUT OF COLLEGE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD.....FEB. 19
" Slender in plot but rather amusing at times."—M. P. News.

KAZAN (SELIG-HAMILTON-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST....FEB. 19
" Another Curwood story makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

KENTUCKIANS, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
" Very little drama here; backgrounds are interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Did neither draw nor satisfied. That director missed more good chances than a cat has fleas." " Not a remarkable picture in any way and played it to only average business." " Monte Blue made this one. His following increases with each picture, and business held up splendidly on this fact. An excellent picture." " A picture that proved to be about as uninteresting as its title. Had it not been for Bobby Vernon in 'Hey, Rube!' the week's attendance at my house would have been a flat failure." " Good average business."

KID, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLIE CHAPLIN.....JAN. 29
" Long heralded Chaplin six-reeler lives up to expectations."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Kept crowds standing out on the sidewalk for a week. Now on second big week." " Wonderful business from morning till night. Great picture." " A great attraction. Going big on second week of showing." " One of Chaplin's best pictures. Drew big crowds throughout the entire two weeks." " It was a storming success for two weeks, drawing 42,000 persons the first week and slightly less than that number the second week. A knockout. Booked for third week." " The record breaker for the season. Held over for a third week by a house that seldom departs from the week run custom." " Went over big on second week. May hold over for another week." " Second week to big business. Wonderful as an attraction." " Broke records first half of week, fell down at end of engagement. Audiences divided in opinion of picture." " Eight days to extra big business. Went over like a house afire."

KILLER, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 29
" Thrilling story given splendid production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" One of the best Westerns I've ever played. First day's gross surpassed anything for fifteen weeks back. My audiences demand Westerns, and they went after this!"

KNOW YOUR MEN (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....APR. 2
" Heavily emotional, but should please star's admirers."—M. P. News.

LAMPLIGHTER, THE (SHIRLEY MASON).....APR. 30
" Shirley Mason attractive, but story holds it back."—M. P. News.

LAVENDER AND OLD LACE (RENCO FILM-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST .....MAY 7
" Beauty of this delicate romance is kept intact."—M. P. News.

LITTLE CLOWN, THE (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....APR. 16
" Heart interest circus story should get over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—Very good little picture that did well for me." " Had picture indorsed by local 'Better Films' movement, and gave special matinee for school-children. Business excellent."

LITTLE FOOL, THE (C. E. SHURTLEFF-METRO) SPECIAL CAST.MAR. 26
" Should prove interesting entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Very good. The picture follows the story well and it holds an audience as only a Jack London story can."

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST .....MAR. 26
" Excellent slapstick feature with good action and incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" A splendid drawing card. Played to a packed house all week. The picture is an excellent diversion from the more serious presentations."

LOVE LIGHT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) MARY PICKFORD.....JAN. 22
" Production overshadows the star who is not any too well cast."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Drew well for about three days and then fell off considerably. Even Mary's large following in this city did not all turn ont to see it. Newspaper reviewers characterized it as 'poor' and it was dubbed as 'rotton' by many of little Mary's adorers." " Picture fairly interesting but disappointed some of the fans. Business only fair." " Moved here from another theatre of this city. A good picture but business was not up to standard. It looks as if the star is going back." " A departure from the usual Pickford picture. Miss Pickford displays that she is fitted for emotional as well as comedy roles. Good film, and excellent box office feature." " An average picture and drew only fair business."

LOVE SPECIAL, THE (PARAMOUNT) WALLACE REID.....APR. 2
" Acceptable entertainment provided by good humor and a quota of thrills." —M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Did fine business with this picture. My patrons like Wallace Reid and of course turned out strong to see his picture." " Our patrons called this a fine picture and it did big business." " A good picture. Drew good business second run." " Wallace Reid always goes great here and this picture proved to be no exception as far as box office receipts are concerned. A good house all week." " Wally Reid is a great favorite of our patrons and we did a splendid business with this feature, which seemed to please our patrons."

LURE OF CROONING WATER, THE (STOLL-PATHE) IVY DUKE-GUY NEWELL .....JAN. 15
" Interesting exposition of eternal triangle."—M. P. News.

LURE OF YOUTH (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 22
" Acting is better than the story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" This picture not up to average. The plot is weak."

LYING LIPS (INCE-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 19
" Spectacular but false in idea and characterization."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" A real picture and a splendid entertainment. People went out of their way to comment favorably on it." " Consider this one of the biggest productions of the season. Corking story, unexcelled cast, magnificently mounted, sure to please. Sorry I didn't have double my seating capacity." " Has proved so popular that it has been held over for the fourth week. This is something never before done in this city. Played to over 60,000 in three weeks' run." " Completed a four week's run here, in which it drew over 80,000 people. This is one of the greatest records in the history of the city." " Drew a good house for a week, but the picture does not justify its advance advertising. An average picture."

MAD MARRIAGE, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....FEB. 12
" Carmel Myers is appealing in Greenwich Village formula."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Pretty good picture and we had somewhat more business than usual."

MADE IN HEAVEN (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE.....APR. 30
" Fire scene best part of unreal story that fails to impress."—M. P. News.

MAGIC CUP, THE (REALART) CONSTANCE BINNEY.....MAY 7
" Pleasant little picture starring Constance Binney."—M. P. News.

MAMMA'S AFFAIR (FORST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE .....FEB. 5
" Constance Talmadge has serious moments here; picture fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Delighted our people. Box office kept busy." " Played to a capacity house the entire week, but it would not be fair to give the credit to the picture alone, as it was run in conjunction with a week's musical festival, featuring works of local composers." " Only average picture, but it took well with our patrons and we played to excellent business." " They like Constance so tbey liked this one. Big business."

MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING, THE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD .....JAN. 22
" Story and generally good production will get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Terrible. Business was fairly good but that was because the picture played the last part of the week and not because of interest in picture. Pickford unpopular in this territory." " A delightful picture, with Jack Pickford in a role for which he is well adapted."

MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE (HOLUBAR-FIRST NATIONAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS.....FEB. 12
" Propaganda and spectacular melodrama are blended here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Drew very well despite the fact that it was the week before Easter." " A regular woman's picture—result, big houses and box office returns that tripled as the engagement continued. Held over for second week." " Held over for second week to better than average business." " A somewhat rambling story. Chief interest centres about the lavish scenes. A good box-office attraction." " Continued to draw crowded houses on second run." " Opinion as to entertainment value greatly divided. Business good."

MAGNIFICENT BRUTE, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....MAR. 26
" A good Western with plenty of action."—M. P. News.

MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE, THE (METRO).....MAR. 5
" Star enlivens story of British politics."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Pleasing picture. Box office value average."

MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) PAULINE FREDERICK .....MAR. 19
" Quiet in action, yet charms with its romance and background."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" A pleasant picture which seemed to please my audiences. Fine business."

MODERN SALOME, A (HOPE HAMPTON-METRO) HOPE HAMPTON (FEB. 1).....JAN. 31
" Satisfied from all angles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" An average picture which did big business for three days." " My patrons did not like this one at all." " This is a very poor offering, and we had dull business during run."

MOTHER ETERNAL (IVAN ABRAMSON-STATE RIGHTS) VIVIAN MARTIN .....APR. 30
" Effective drama offered in appealing story of mother love."—M. P. News.

MOUNTAIN WOMAN, THE (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....FEB. 5
" An excellent Pearl White vehicle."—M. P. News.

MY LADY'S LATCHKEY (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD .....MAR. 26
" Mostly good clothes and subtitles, with little action or incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" An average picture, but poor business." " Katherine MacDonald is well liked by women patrons, so business was fair, due to patronage of feminine contingent."

NUMBER 17 (FOX) GEORGE WALSH.....MAR. 19
" Convenient melodrama carries some excitement."—M. P. News.

NUT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS.....MAR. 19
" Entertaining in spots, but needs editing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Exceptional business for week during Lent. Picture not up to Fairbanks' standard." " Fairbanks has slipped in this picture. It is much poorer than the 'Mark of Zoro,' and while many patrons came to see him the first few days, the rest of the week's business was poor." "Went over big. Some adverse criticism to the effect that it was not up to star's standard." "Fine picture which brought good business." "Brought big business. Pleased my patrons and was a drawing-card." "Find this an average picture with the usual business." "This picture went over big. It bas very good entertaining values." "Fine business with this picture. My patrons like Doug and of course turned out strong to see his picture." "The picture is not up to Douglas Fairbanks' standard, but has an appealing title and offers a good field for exploitation. A good house the entire week." "Running this a second week to big business."

OATH, THE (MAYFLOWER-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST..APR. 23
"Rather disappointing in spite of faultless production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture, but only drew our regular partons."

OFF-SHORE PIRATE, THE (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....MAR. 12
"Not enough substance for picture entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Vlola Dana always draws a good house for me, and this was no exception. An entertalning little picture. Business good."

ONE MAN TRAIL, THE (FOX) BUCK JONES.....APR. 9
"A well made, entertaining Buck Jones feature."—M. P. News.

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE, THE (RAY-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY .....MAR. 5
"Artistic presentation of Riley poem; great entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good Charles Ray picture, but failed to please majority. Played to exceptlonally poor business for seven days." "Fine picture wbich drew good business." "An unusually delightful bit of screen entertainment wbich the entire city flocked to see. Censorship would not be worrying the industry if there were more films like this." "An excellent picture from every angle and business was splendid. Went over big."

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED (HART-PARAMOUNT) WILLIAM S. HART.....FEB. 19
"Good incident and Bill Hart touches make it interesting." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best Bill Hart has done and pleased the Hart fans." "Satisfactory box office returns, but not up to usual Hart receipts." "A good picture, but a weak drawing card. Only a fair house for the week. "Business was good with this one. A good picture that pleased the usual Hart crowds."

ONE MAN IN A MILLION (BEBAN-LESSER-ROBERTSON-COLE) GEORGE BEBAN.....JAN. 29
"Character study is satisfying offering."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Plenty of atmosphere. Plenty of action. Big business, as much because of personal appearance of George Beban. But they liked tbe picture enough to go away and speak well of it." "Beban made personal appearances during the run here of the week. Absolutely capacity daily. Picture highly enjoyed." "Clean, high-grade picture which appealed strongly to patrons. Did excellent business for week."

OTHER WOMAN, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST .....APR. 9
"Story of dual personality offers interesting moments."—M. P. News.

OUT OF THE CHORUS (REALART) ALICE BRADY.....APR. 2
"Well below the average in entertainment values."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew a pleasing attendance with average results." "Used in conjunction wlth 'You Can Never Tell.' Average business, but it increased at end of week." "Nothing extraordinary about the picture, but Alice Brady is always a sure bet here. Showed in conjunction with Buster Keaton in "Neighbors." A good house all week."

OUTSIDE THE LAW (UNIVERSAL) PRISCILLA DEAN.....JAN. 22
"Best straight melodrama in many a day."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Sure did go over big. Packed them in at all performances." "Created a record for a two weeks' run heretofore untouched in this section. A picture you can go the limit on in exploitation—and the picture will bear you out in the good things you say about it." "A splendid picture with thrilling plot, which confirmed Priscilla Dean as a favorite with our patrons. Did splendid business for week." "Tremendous business all week. Will hold over for another week." "Went over big. Audiences seemed well pleased with the entertainment." "Standing up well on second week. Very good production." "Went across big. Drew fine attendance and receipts dandy." "Regarded acting and production as superior to story, but it pleased our audiences and we had a splendid week with this picture."

PARTNERS OF FATE (FOX) LOUISE LOVELY.....FEB. 26
"A good average program attraction."— M. P. News.

PARTNERS OF THE TIDE (WILLAT-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST .....APR. 2
"Entertaining sea picture here."—M. P. News.

PASSION FLOWER, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) NORMA TALMADGE .....APR. 16
"Wonderfully acted and artistically produced adaptation of stage success."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Business excellent, as it always is wben I play a Talmadge picture. This was more favorably commented on than anything Norma Talmadge has played in a year. Colorful, vivid, and realistic." "The best picture Norma Talmadge has had for a long time. Proved an excellent box-office attraction." "Nothing like a Talmadge picture to get tbe crowds but this one didn't please so well, though business was up to expectation." "A great many people were disappointed in the story but they came to see the star. Business was up to standard." "A splendid feature film which lived up to Norma Talmadge's high standard. Played to much better than average business dnring the week of its run."

PASSIONATE PILGRIM, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Better than average picture from well known novel."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Paramount seems to have fallen down here this season in its big releases. This picture did only an average gross." "The story was carried in serial form by one of the daily papers and this brougbt crowds to see tbe picture. They were not disappointed." "Very poor entertainment. Story was not clear and cast was only fair in the opinions of my people. Can't hand this one much. After Vignola's 'The World and His Wife,' this was a great disappointment." "Went over big for week. Is exceptionally good feature." "This picture was only medlocre and it brought forth only fair box office receipts." "Fair picture. Fair business. Fair performance throughont." "Found this picture highly entertaining and we had very big business during its run." "Nice picture—receipts at Parkway fine—at Wizard fair."

PAYING THE PIPER (FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORP.) DOROTHY DICKSON.....JAN. 29
"Well produced domestic drama that will please."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Ran well for the entire week. Big houses set the stamp of their approval on this picture." "Held over for second week because of tremendous business. Generally pleased." "Bnsiness held up very well for second week. Pleased our patrons." "A good picture that played to good business." "A slender story produced to bring Dorothy Dickson into pictures. Not a strong box office attraction." "Found this to be a fair picture. Business about average." "A great attraction. This one brought large box office receipts." "Second week to fair business." "Good picture played to better than average business for week." "Lavlsb but not satisfylng. Drew well but did not bulld. "Very good. Two days to extra big and big business." "Exceptionally well liked by everybody. One of tbe best opening Sundays in weeks. Kept up satisfactorily."

PEDDLER OF LIES, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO (MAR. 1) .....JAN. 31
"Good production of mechanical and unreal plot."—M. P. News.

PENNY OF TOP HILL TRAIL (FEDERATED FILM EXCHANGES) BESSIE LOVE .....MAY 7
"Bessie Love returns in worth-while romantic comedy drama."—M. P. News.

PERFECT CRIME, A (DWAN-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST.MAR. 5
"Director and star make character study interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Tbe plot of the picture is good but the production lacks pep."

PLAYTHING OF B'WAY, THE (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE .....MAR. 26
"Justine Johnstone scores in satisfactory offering."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty poor stuff. Justine doesn't live up to expectations, after all the press-agent flub-dub about her." "A fairly entertaining production that drew average business."

PRICE OF POSSESSION, THE (PARAMOUNT) ETHEL CLAYTON.MAR. 26
"Ethel Clayton gives clever performance in mild entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Does not come up to Ethel Clayton's standard. A fair house all week, but an unsatisfactory picture." "One of the poorest things Etbel Clayton has ever done." "A fair picture and fair puller."

PRINCESS JONES (VITAGRAPH) ALICE CALHOUN.....MAR. 12
"Light offering affords fair entertainment."—M. P. News.

PRISONERS OF LOVE (RELEASED BY GOLDWYN) BETTY COMPSON .....JAN. 29
"Very unusual and artistic drama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Charming, dainty picture. Opened to better Sunday in several weeks. Well liked, but no unbounded enthusiasm."

PROXIES (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 23
"Interesting picture of crooks and redemption."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Positively the worst business in several years. Notbing about it to arouse interest."

PUPPETS OF FATE (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....APR. 30
"Heart interest story with Viola Dana in a character role."—M. P. News.

RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....JAN. 29
"Gladys Walton scores in heart interest story."—M. P. News.

ROAD DEMON, THE (FOX) TOM MIX.....FEB. 26
Exhibitor Comment—"Tom Mix always a favorite here. Bnsiness good. picture fair."

ROADS OF DESTINY (GOLDWYN) PAULINE FREDERICK.....APR. 9
"Hopeless story enhanced somewhat by star's splendid acting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pauline Frederick is not up to her usnal standard in this prodnction and it can't even begin to compare with 'Madame X.'" "Artistically and dramatically, very fine, but did not get the business. Miss Frederick's admlrers did not like her in this. Sorry. for thought it was great, myself."

ROMANCE PROMOTERS, THE (VITAGRAPH) EARLE WILLIAMS.JAN. 29
"The sun shines on Earle Williams in this one."—M. P. News.

ROMANTIC ADVENTURES (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY DALTON..JAN. 29
"This one looks like a vehicle."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Two days to big business—good."

SAGE HEN, THE (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST... ...JAN. 22
"A well-produced dramatic story of the west."—M. P. News.

SAPHEAD, THE (METRO) KEATON-CRANE.....FEB. 26
"Rather spotted, but provides some good entertainment."—M. P. News.

SCOFFER, THE (DWAN-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST).....MAR. 19
"Theatrical and far-fetched in incident but interesting." M. P. News.

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST).....APR. 9
"Exceptionally artistic and undeniably human."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Reflects great credit on the producers and any theatre that shows this picture. We gained by exploiting May McAvoy as new star. Not a big box office attraction but pleases." "Great—can't say enough in its favor. Did tremendous business all week."

SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK (ROBERTSON-COLE) MAX LINDER..MAY 7
"Unquestionably Linder's best picture to date."—M. P. News.
"Good picture from entertainment standpoint and brought good returns."

Exhibitor Comment—"Failed to draw. Our spring style show saved the day."

ILVER LINING, THE (METRO) JEWEL CARMEN.....JAN. 15
"Interesting crook play brings Jewel Carmen back to the screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average crook play. Ordinary business." "Patrons did not like tbis picture. Two days to average and poor business."

KY PILOT, THE (CATHERINE CURTIS-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST .....APR. 30
"Fine western has collection of thrilling punches."—M. P. News.

MALL TOWN IDOL, A (SENNETT-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST .....FEB. 19
"Mack Sennett gives a three ring circus here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Second week to good business." "Sennett has given us one of the best comedies of the year in tbis picture and it is a laughing success from start to finish. Broke house records first week of its stay here and we are holding it for a second week." "Fairly good picture, but we had poor business with it. "Picture lived up to the advance notices given it by critics and we played to splendid business during its run." "Attracted capacity business for week's run." "Sennett has produced one of the best comedies ever screened and it did a big business at our theatre during its entire run." "Broke the house record on opening and held over for second week." "Good summer stuff. One of the funniest comedies ever made."

MART SET, THE (UNIVERSAL) EVA NOVAK.....APR. 2
"Rather frail but pleases in a mild fashion."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Our audiences called this poor. Business was not up to average either."

NOB, THE (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....MAR. 5
"Good production of commonplace story—will get by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very attractive. Just the kind of picture to appeal to high class neighbor audiences. Pleasing throughout and thoroughly proper." "A good picture and business was fine during the showing of it." "Very acceptable and pleasing picture with good cast."

OCIETY SECRETS (UNIVERSAL) EVA NOVAK.....FEB. 26
"Heart interest drama is mild but entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very poor picture. Business was much less than usual."

OMETHING DIFFERENT (REALART) CONSTANCE BINNEY....JAN. 29
"Rather frail but backgrounds save it."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture to fair business. Better crowds than usual." "A good picture. This star always draws well at this house. Fine business during run." "A very draggy piece; nothing worth while in it but star registers in some mighty pleasing scenes. Can see no excuse for making picture as poor as this one with product as good and as fine a cast as the director had." "Splendid picture. Had much favorable comment. Good direction and good back grounds."

OWING THE WIND (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART .....JAN. 29
"Powerful drama, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.

TRAIGHT IS THE WAY (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST .....MAR. 5
"Crook comedy drama is highly diverting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair. The plot of the picture weak and it does not hold the attention of the audience." "Above average of crook pictures with some excellent comedy in it bnt did not seem to pull very well." "Good picture, good cast. Slightly improbable story, bnt good entertainment value." "Good picture and good box office bet." "The title handicaps the picture, which is only an average production. Had it not been for Charlie Chaplin in "The Adventurer," I would have had a 'slim' house all week."

'ALE OF TWO WORLDS, A (EMINENT AUTHORS-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 26

WITCHING HOUR, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 12
"Weak adaptation of rich melodrama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Draggy, disconnected—somebody always going somewhere after sometbing. Shame to waste the talents of a star of Elliot Dexter's calibre in such stuff as this. Cast only fair—Mary Aiden superb—as usual!" "Elliott Dexter's best yet. The title is slightly lacking as a creator of public interest, but the picture itself is a business getter. A good house throughout the week." "A combination of hot weather and a well known play, but one not particularly well produced. Result—our crowds dwindled." "Business did not keep up well with this feature. Somehow it didn't seem to please." "This was only a fair picture and fair puller."

WITHOUT LIMIT (BAKER-METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Entertaining despite a mechanical development."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Considered one of the strongest plays of the year by critics and patrons alike. Opened to fair business but picked up steadily during the week." "Good picture that drew satisfactory business." "A good photoplay that brought good business. Well acted throughout."

YOU AND I (SWEDISH BIOGRAPH-RADIOSOUL) VICTOR SEASTROM .....MAR. 12

Stephen B. Hetteberg filed suit against Herman Eger, his associate in a partnership known as the "Central Film Company," Seventh and Main streets, seeking to have the partnership dissolved and a receiver appointed to take charge of the business. He alleges that Eger is incapable of handling the business and that he refused to make proper division of the profits. He seeks to have the court compel Eger to pay him his claimed share of the profits and to make an accounting. Attorney Albert B. Acorn has been appointed receiver of the firm.

The Theatre Amusement Company, of Cleveland, has taken a ten-year lease on the Boulevard theatre, Canal and Vine streets. For the first five years the theatre rents for $250 a month and the second five years, $500 a month.

An unusual feature of the lease provides that the Neff heirs, owners of the building, are to participate in one-third of the net profits; and in event the earnings do not come up to the expectations set forth in the lease, the lessors have the right to cancel the lease at certain stipulated periods.

SAN DIEGO

Incident to the showing of "Hush" at the Superba theatre the patrons of that popular house had the special privilege of seeing the star, Clara Kimball Young, in person. Miss Young appeared at three performances for several days, speaking briefly on each occasion. She was accorded a hearty greeting upon each appearance.

It is reported that Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, has secured a scenic site for a new country home near Escondido, in this county, and will soon erect a very handsome residence. The deal involves, as well, the ownership of some 3,000 acres of fine ranch land and a large herd of Hereford cattle. It is asserted that the deal meant a financial outlay of $150,000 on the part of Mr. Smith.

H. P. Curtis has taken the position of assistant house manager of the Superba, while Harry Armes has assumed similar responsibilities at the Broadway, both being under William Matthews, who has charge of the two houses. Mr. Robison is house manager of the Vista, the East San Diego house of the chain of Bush Theatres. The Vista puts on an amateur night once a week, this being in addition to the regular film program.

FLORIDA

"Going to Europe for a needed rest," is the announcement of H. Pitman, manager of the new Capitol theatre, at Clearwater, Fla.

Mr. Clarence Rollins, who has been operating the Dixie at Dunedin, Fla., for Mr. Pitman, will be in charge during the absence of "the boss."

L. F. Randall, of Washington, drove his big car down to Florida, and fell in love with the climate. He decided to locate, and as he has been interested in the motion picture business, he looked about to see the possibilities in that line.

He arranged to take the school auditorium at Lakeland and Auburndale, Fla., giving shows two nights weekly. He is now looking for a third location, to fill up the week.

G. E. White, of Mulberry, Fla., is branching out. He took over the Ben Ali at Dade City, and the Isis at Dunnellon, Fla. He put in quite a little new equipment, and a better line of films, and has the satisfaction of seeing the business climb, until it is now nearly double that of the former management.

DETROIT

Dave Mundstock, of Strand Features, has taken over the distribution in Michigan of the Synchronized Scenario Music Co. of Chicago.

Lew Barnes has resigned from the Goldwyn exchange to sell Strand exchange state right pictures, working under W. D. Ward.

Marcus Loew was a Detroit visitor recently to see the opening of "The Four Horsemen" at the Garrick theatre.

The new Strand theatre at Lansing has been opened. Mayor B. A. Keyes made an opening address at the initial performance on Thursday. W. S. Butterfield, owner of the new house, responded and the stage and lobby were decked with flowers. There was a large turnout of theatre and exchange men, and the managers of all Butterfield houses in the state were present. Gov. Groesbeck and members of the legislature were in attendance. The house will offer vaudeville as well as pictures.

Edward Crane has resigned as manager of the Detroit exchange for Associated Producers, and is succeeded by Emmet S. Flynn, formerly special representative for Realart and Select.

W. S. McLaren, of Jackson, has purchased the Arcade theatre, Charlotte, to add to his string.

It is reported that all contracts have now been let for John H. Kunsky, new theatre. Workmen are now tearing down the old buildings on the property.

BALTIMORE

The Goodtime motion-picture theatre has been sold at auction for $25,000, subject to a mortgage of $2,764.64, to S. Hoffman.

Strong opposition is developing to the proposed erection of a motion picture theatre at 12 and 13 East Twenty-fifth street, options on the properties being held by Louis Schlichter. Various citizens' associations are cooperating in the effort to oppose the granting of a permit for the theatre.

B. Rabinowitz has bought from Wallace High the Fairmount theatre, Fairmount avenue and Clinton street, and L. P. Rubin, manager of the Fairyland and Plaza theatres, will be in direct charge.

Leo Homand has assumed managership of the Apollo theatre, Oliver and Aisquith streets, William E. Stumpf, resigned.

A tour of Maryland counties on the Eastern Shore is being made for dates for "A Child For Sale," by M. A. Berger of Screenart.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Elmer C. Winegar, who for the past seven years, has managed the Central Park theatre, Buffalo, has handed in his resignation to Harry Marsey, president of General Theatres Corporation. It will take effect May 15. Mr. Winegar will enter the commercial film field. He will be succeeded at the Central Park by Jim Wallingford, now manager of the Star theatre on William street. Harry Dixon, who recently resigned as manager of the Rivoli theatre, has been appointed manager of the Star.

J. Davidson is manager of Buffalo's new exchange, the Lande Film Distributing company, with offices on the third floor of the building at 145 Franklin street, which houses Pioneer and Associated Producers. The Lande exchange is handling the Triangle productions. H. A. Lande of Pittsburg is president of the company. Mr. Davidson announces that the exchange will soon enter the state right field.

Buffalo exchange men sent congratulations to Henry E. Wilkinson this week. Mr. Wilkinson, who is a former buffalonian, is now general sales manager for Kane Pictures. While in Buffalo he managed the Ellen Terry theatre and the Realart exchange.

A new theatre will be built at 1636 Genesee street, Buffalo, by the Creole Amusement company. It will cost $100,000. Plans have been drawn by Joseph Geigand, who designed the Rivoli theatre.

Children from the Deaf and Dumb Institute, the Protestant Home for Unprotected Children and the Crippled Children's Guild, were the guests of Manager Arthur L. Skinner when he presented "Black Beauty," at the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, this week. The Saturday matinee was the occasion for the kiddie party.

Shea's Criterion, Buffalo, has changed its policy to two shows a week and reduced its admissions. The house is operated by the Shea Amusement company and Paramount.

The Crescent theatre at Silver Springs, N. Y., has closed its doors for the summer season.

H. D. Dygert, operator of the Rialto theatres in East Rochester and Fairport, N. Y., has taken over the Crescent theatre and Opera House in Newark, N. Y.

Word has reached Buffalo that Charlie Sesonski of Utica is planning to build a new house in Fulton, N. Y.

Earl L. Crabb, former manager of the Strand, Buffalo, and now general manager of the Buffalo Motion Picture company, with headquarters in New York, has taken over the Palace theatre in Syracuse.

E. O. Hayes, manager of the Buffalo First National exchange, has returned from a trip to Southern Tier towns, where he signed up a large amount of business. "The Kid," has been booked for an extended presentation at Nickum's Gem theatre, Olean, N. Y. Mr. Hayes also visited Rochester exhibitors on his way home.

H. C. Bissell of the Robertson-Cole exchange, visited Pennsylvania towns last week and did so much business that he ran out of contract blanks.

Bob Murphy, manager of the Pioneer exchange, Buffalo and secretary of the Buffalo F. I. L. M. club represented that organization at the Albany meeting, Thursday, May 5.

Novel Fade-Out in New Charles Ray Picture

Charles Ray, it is said, has provided something far out of the ordinary in the final fade-out of "Scrap Iron," which is soon to be released. The story is about a young man who literally battles his way to success for love of his "best girl," and the concluding scene, like the concluding scenes of most pictures, shows the two in tender embrace. In this case, though it is not the tigerish slip of a maid who had sought that place of preferment whom the hero gathers in his arms, but—his invalid mother.

Mother love and filial devotion are the basis of the heart interest pervading the whole story.

Jack Eaton Taking Over Unused Bray Negative

Jack Eaton, former manager of the Strand Theatre, New York, and one of the most successful producers of short subjects, has taken over all of the unreleased negatives in the possession of Bray Pictures Corporation and will prepare it for distribution by Goldwyn in a series of single reels beginning next September. Katharine Hilliker has been engaged to write the titles.

Super-Advertising

Few are the trade fields that can present advertising copy competing in beauty and salesmanship with that of the motion picture.

Last week's Motion Picture News presented a treasure of art and effectiveness in the Cosmopolitan eight page insert.

This week Associated Producers steps to the front to receive a Blue Ribbon.

A few weeks ago Famous Players brought forth a chorus of "Ah's!" with the startling "Deception" insert.

AN INVINCIBLE COMBINATION

WHEN the photo-play, the star, and all of the posters make a universal appeal to the public, a combination is had that makes for a vast total of box-office receipts. And that is just the combination that is offered in this Robertson-Cole release. The picture in question is "Salvage." The star is Pauline Frederick. The posters are RITCHEY posters.

The theme played upon is motherlove, and it is developed with unusual artistry and power. The posters have the advertising force that is always associated with the RITCHEY poster. The combination is unbeatable.

Seven Facts

"DECEPTION," in its first week at the Rivoli, New York, broke all records for that theatre.

In its second week it broke all records for any second week showing.

It was the first picture in history to be held over for a third week at the Rivoli.

The third Sunday was bigger than the second by $1,000.

The third week as a whole was bigger than the second.

So great was the business during the third week, in fact, that the picture was held over for a fourth week at the Rivoli!

"Deception" has just opened in Boston, at the Colonial, doing the largest picture business in the history of the city.

There are seven hard facts.

Summed up, they mean simply this:

"Deception" is the greatest money-maker ever issued in the history of motion pictures

Fifteen First Run One-Reel Specials

Some of these specials have played to the highest rentals ever paid for a short subject

BEGGARS AND FAKIRS OF INDIA

Too proud to work, many Brahmans beg. Religious fakirs deform themselves. One, self-blinded, has rolled halfway across India. One, starved helpless, moves a hand and arm unceasingly. Another holds a withered hand permanently aloft. How girl babies, found in the gutters of Chinese cities, are bought for ten cents each and brought up for useful occupations is also shown.

SOUTH SEA MAGIC

There is magic in the first glimpse of this South Sea island of Samoa. Shark fishing is an adventure no native can resist. A feast is the logical end of every shark hunt. According to the best cabarettiquette, the "younger set" (age four to fourteen) lead in dancing for the entertainment of the guests.

ANNETTE KELLERMAN

Diving Venus herself portrays all her famous dives, beautifully staged—taken in both standard and slow-motion camera analysis.

SYRIA, LAND OF RELIGIOUS HATRED

In Palestine for centuries all the creeds of the world have jostled each other disdainfully. At Easter time Russian pilgrims celebrate the Holy Flame ceremony in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Moslems, exhorted to fury, crowd about to charge upon pilgrims and blow out their candles as they start back to Russia. One wick left lighted defeats the Moslem purposes. The rioting for a few short minutes is extremely thrilling.

JUGGERNAUTS OF THE JUNGLE

In India the Juggernaut of the Jungle, when captured, is made to work. It may cost a year and the life of a man to break the Big One to burden. Obedience to his master results from respectful admiration rather than fear. All work and no play makes even an elephant rebel. Therefore there is a daily romp in the river.

POLO

Intensely interesting polo match staged before a standard and a slow-motion camera. All principal strokes are clearly shown. Every move of the magnificent horses is brought out by the slow-motion camera analysis.

BABE RUTH

A standard and slow-motion camera analysis of how Babe Ruth hits the home runs which made him King of Baseball. Actually taken during a big league game.

DIXIE

Story of the birth of the great song of the South. Portrayed with characters in costumes of the times, showing how the song which has stirred the very souls of our people first saw the light of day at Mechanics Hall, New York, 1859.

MODERN CENTAURS

Amazing stunts by a crack troop of Portuguese Cavalry. Thrilling and daring. Magnificent animals jump hazardous gullies. Pronounced one of the fastest action reels ever shown.

VALLEY OF TEN THOUSAND SMOKES

The National Geographic Society explorers' official picture of Mt. Katmai Valley in Alaska after its eruption. No other motion picture camera had ever penetrated this valley of steam-emitting fissures so intensely hot that a stick of solder is instantly melted when held to any one of them.

JAPANESE JUDO

The Jiu Jitsu practiced in Japan since the Seventh Century B. C. The science of "conquering by yielding." One's antagonist is made to turn his strength against himself—so the stronger he is, the harder he falls. Real thrills and exciting moments.

WILDERNESS FRIENDS

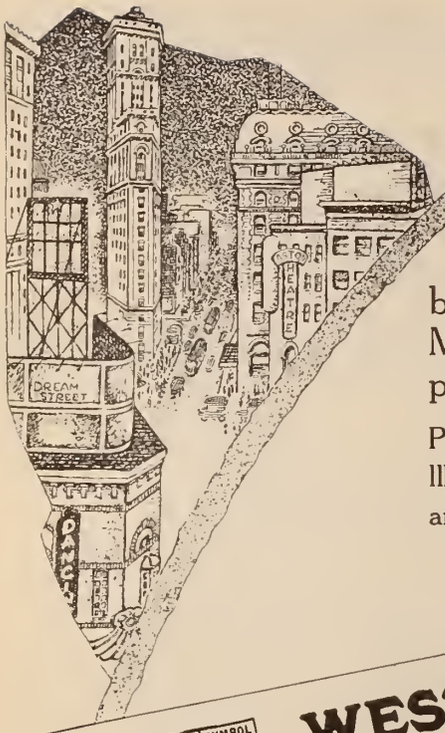
Pictures of wild animals "off their guard." Two tiny bears, a partridge, a loon, a moose, a deer, a fawn, and Jack, the 'rastling raccoon, in scenes that will delight every admirer of the outdoors.

GOLF

A slow-motion study of the great pastime, in which many former theories as to what happens to the ball when hit are proven unfounded. This picture will be of compelling interest to everyone who ever wielded a club.

IN DUTCH

The dykes and canals of Holland. Full of interesting youngsters and marvelous scenic beauty, with intimate interviews with the great cheese merchants of the world and their queer methods of handling the famous Edam delicacy.



THE QUAINT ISLE OF MARKEN

The tiny Dutch Isle seems quite apart from the rest of the world. Visitors from every land delight in Marken's peculiar customs. Much of the reel is devoted to the quaint dresses of the women and children—and especially to the children themselves—probably the most picturesque in all the world.

A TRIUMPH IN LOS ANGELES

"There will never be another Mary Pickford. She outchaplined the famous Charlie in one of the cleverest stunts ever screened. Never has the little actress been more appealing than in this play. She stands absolutely alone on her merits. She makes the most of even the slightest possibility to show her histrionism with the deepest touches of pathos and the daintiest humor, never once falling from her pedestal of feminism so difficult to maintain in comedy. Personally, I think 'Through the Back Door' is Mary's best picture by far in ages."

—Eleanor Barnes in the Los Angeles Record.

"Brings a laugh and cheer and a sigh. Mary Pickford is so thoroughly human and lovable in this story that the Pickfordian admirers will be satisfied. Its keen optimistic sanity wins favor and it will doubtless enjoy an extended run."

—Los Angeles Express.

"Heart throbs and laughs, you will find both in 'Through the Back Door.'"

—Los Angeles Herald.

"Mary Pickford has never been seen in a more appealing role. She hits the high note of comedy in one of the funniest scenes ever filmed."

—Florence Lawrence in the Los Angeles Examiner.

"Never since 'Stella Maris' has Mary revealed more exquisite and compelling power of successfully paging our smiles and our tears. After all there is only one Mary Pickford."

Grace Kingsley in Los Angeles Times.

to Hiram Abrams from Harry David, Managing Director Mission Theatre, Los Angeles.

"All hail to Mary. 'Through the Back Door', the opening day of a predicted six week run has packed the house continuously with a typical Pickford audience who have shown their delight and appreciation of her new vehicle with tears, laughs and applause. The Bull Dog editions of all morning papers are unanimous in praise of picture. Hearty congratulations."

GLADYS

WALTON

A REAL CIRCUS—real "cats"—real drama—a real girl who can't be bluffed by Men, Lions or Millionaires—that's "THE MAN TAMER", a thoroughly delightful, wholesome thriller for the whole family.

A story centering around a dauntless little Lion Tamer, hired by a worried millionaire to make a man out of his genial but perfectly useless son. Watch little GLADYS WALTON Universal's newest star, work her lash on the cats and her lashes on Benny Caldwell, Junior and you'll see why she had them both whipped to a frazzle.

Book this picture for a sure thing with any audience in the land—a great big slice of the healthy circus life they love.

"HOME TALENT"

A decidedly new and unique departure from the stereotyped comedy presentation, is this Mack Sennett special. The production is in five parts and the cast includes many well-known names such as Ben Turpin, Charlie Murray, James Finlayson, Eddie Gribbon Kalla Pasha, Phyllis Haver, Dot Farley, Harriet Hammond, and Kathryn McGuire. The story follows the adventures of a quartet of stranded actors and of course there is plenty of action including a "gorgeous" fight. Then there is the big Roman incident, photographed and directed by James Abbe. Truly, "Home Talent" is a remarkable production.

"THE BROKEN DOLL"

A picturizaton of Wilbur Hall's famous Saturday Evening Post Story, "Johnny Cucabod." Mr. Dwan never turned out a production more replete with thrills and heart-tugs than this screen classic in which Monte Blue and Mary Thurman are featured. Incidents and situations fairly alive with action make "The Broken Doll" one of the out-standing pictures of the present season. Romance, pathos and sustained suspense combine to give this vivid portrayal of a bit of life, a universal appeal and an exceptional box-office value. It was personally directed by Mr. Dwan.

Laying Bare His Soul

JERRY, aged eighteen, had come ostensibly to attend her aunt's long postponed marriage to Monty Wade, but she hadn't been in the house fifteen minutes before she discovered the following facts:*

that her aunt was in love with Peter, an old friend;

that Peter was in love with her aunt;

that Monty would prefer to face a gattling gun than the minister;

that she was madly in love with Monty!

And that is why she conceived the wild plan which began with Peter's tumble downstairs and the baring of his soul to Aunt Joan.

A Picture that will make more friends for your house than any you have ever played

It is different.

Different in its originality and vigor; different because it was made in the big Northwoods in settings you have never seen before; different in its characters which step out of the printed page and are real human men and women; different because it creates old "X K," master of logs and men, hard fisted, soft hearted, who will live as a screen classic as long as pictures last.

Do you want to see your audiences thrill first with laughter and then with tears? Play it!

Do you want to have dozens come to you and thank you for the enjoyment you have given them? Play it!

Action!

Experience has taught the exhibitor that the picture that gets the money is the picture that keeps things on the jump.

"Wet Gold" has the universal appeal of action—spine-tingling, hair-trigger action!

Things get started in the first hundred feet, and never let up till the final fade-out. And it's action that means something, with an unusual story, fine acting, and some of the most remarkable under-water photography ever taken.

If there ever was a picture that sounded like a clean-up, "Wet Gold" is its name!

They'll See—

A human torpedo launched into mid-ocean from the tube of a submarine.

A hand-to-hand fight between an unarmed man and a man-eating shark.

Exciting struggle for life in quicksands on the floor of the sea.

Death of an entire submarine crew by the release of poisonous gas while submerged.

Mr. William A. Johnston, Editor,
Motion Picture News, Inc.,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I have read with much interest and some curiosity the recent correspondence between yourself and Mr. Sherwood, motion picture critic of "Life".

What's it all about? Where does this fellow Sherwood get off to discuss trade paper reviews?

You know I am naturally prejudiced against the average newspaper and magazine reviewers. Not because they criticize too harshly -- as an exhibitor I have no interest in that. But because they are too prone to view everything from a personal angle.

They tell me and my patrons that a certain high-brow picture is "the best thing of the year" -- simply because the lofty opinion is natural to them or because they think the pose effective. They will sneer at a red-blooded melodrama apparently for the plain joy of disagreeing with ninety per cent of their readers.

Don't mistake me -- while I am prejudiced, I am open minded on the subject and I have always been waiting -- and some day expect to find -- a newspaper or magazine critic who will truly reflect the public taste for pictures.

The result heretofore has been that their reviews "don't mean a nickle in the box-office" -- as the saying goes.

Sherwood so far seems to show a broad appreciation of popular taste. With the circulation behind "Life" and the strong foundation built up by its dramatic criticisms I think they are worth quoting in newspaper advertising.

But I wonder if their picture reviews are going to continue on the present plane? Why not hit Sherwood between the eyes with that question? Is it his policy to weigh popular taste in forming judgment? Or is he apt to go off on the tangent of personal opinion any day?

What's he got to say for himself? I am more interested in that than in his views on trade paper reviews.

TONY SARG'S ALMANAC

A SENSATION!

TONY SARG'S ALMANAC, offered by the eminent artist, Tony Sarg, and "Ye Editor," Herbert M. Dawley, hailed with delight by New York and Philadelphia critics.

Tributes!

A sheer delight. Nothing like it has been done in the films. Do not miss it.—N. Y. Tribune.

Tony Sarg has introduced a new art to the screen.—Phila. Ledger.

Tony Sarg, the illustrator, brings something new to the screen so far above the "old timers" as to make a new departure in this form of entertainment.—Phila. Record.

By all odds the most entertaining picture on the new Criterion program is Tony Sarg's comedy, "The First Circus." This brand new series is called "Tony Sarg's Almanac" and is a delightful piece of foolery. "The First Circus" is the most amusing farce we have seen in many a moon.—N. Y. Evening Sun.

Tony Sarg's Almanac is not only amusing but is a collection of fine posters with its weird beauties in silhouette.—N. Y. Telegraph.

A film that will probably arouse as much interest as a feature picture is Tony Sarg's Almanac, the initial number of which is named "The First Circus." It is supposedly made after the pattern of the Chinese Shadowgraphs. If so the Chinese must have had some delightful entertainment. The animation is remarkable and the humor is clean and fresh.—N. Y. Evening Telegram.

Exceptionally clever and amusing. It promises to open a rich new field for black and white photography.—N. Y. Times.

Tony Sarg's Almanac shown in a unique silhouette form with the humor snappy but clean.—N. Y. Herald.

Unquestionably the screen novelty sensation of the season. Not merely highly artistic, but filled with rare and popular humor.

Mr. Paul Bush.

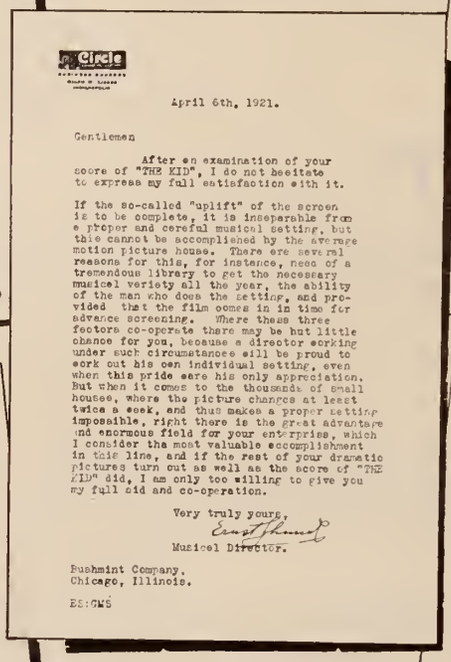
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Bush:

Just a few words to let you know what I think about your Synchronized Scenario music.

Your proposition is surely a wonderful one and in my estimation is a very much needed one for all first class theatres, or in fact any theatre that sees an organ or orchestra for enhancing the presentation of their pictures.

I looked over your score that you had prepared for the Charlie Chaplin picture "The Kid" and want to congratulate you upon the beautiful selection of music, as well as being wonderfully adapted to the picture.



I am musical director of the Stratford Theatre, one of Chicago's largest picture houses, also Orchestra Hall, where I am engaged by the manager of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra to look after the music for the presentation of the pictures during the summer. Such orchestral scores as the one I see are to be keenly considered by every musical director, as it would be impossible for the usual director to give sufficient time for such an elaborate adaption of music as you have given.

I sincerely wish you the greatest success in your undertaking and hope that others will realize its necessity.

With best wishes, I am

Yours sincerely,
Walter Blaufuss

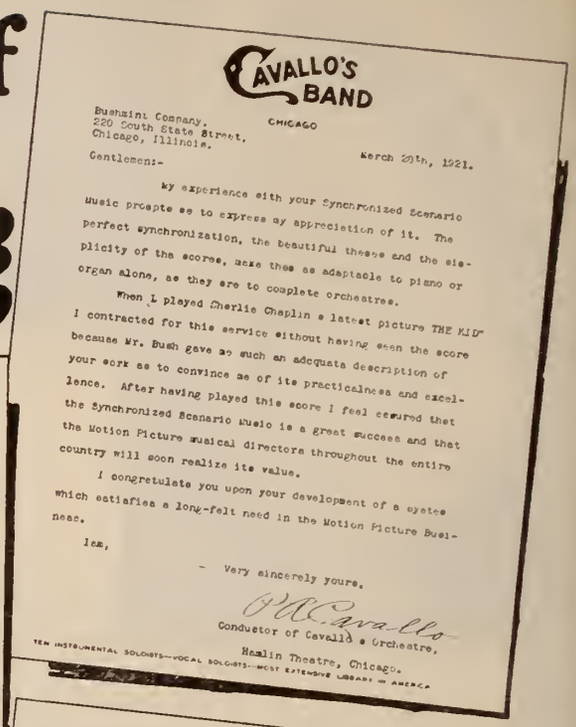
Gentlemen



After an examination of your score of "THE KID", I do not hesitate to express my full satisfaction with it.

If the so-called "uplift" of the screen is to be complete, it is inseparable from a proper and careful musical setting, but this cannot be accomplished by the average motion picture house. There are several reasons for this, for instance, need of a tremendous library to get the necessary musical variety all the year, the ability of the man who does the setting, and provided that the film comes in in time for advance screening. Where these three factors co-operate there may be but little chance for you, because a director working under such circumstances will be proud to work out his own individual setting, even when this pride were his only appreciation. But when it comes to the thousands of small houses, where the picture changes at least twice a week, and thus makes a proper setting impossible, right there is the great advantage and enormous field for your enterprise, which I consider the most valuable accomplishment in this line, and if the rest of your dramatic pictures turn out as well as the score of "THE KID" did, I am only too willing to give you my full aid and co-operation.

Very truly yours,
Ernst Hoffmann

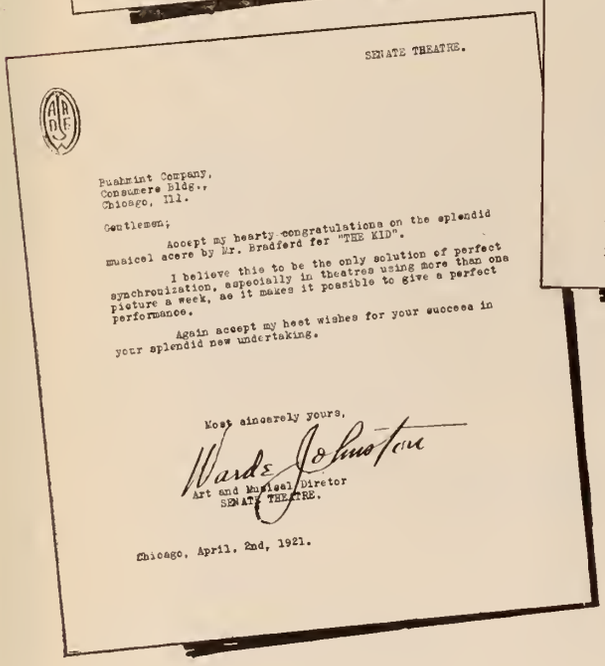
Gentlemen:-

My experience with your Synchronized Scenario music prompts me to express my appreciation of it. The perfect synchronization, the beautiful theme and the simplicity of the scores, make them so adaptable to piano or organ alone, as they are to complete orchestras.



When I played Charlie Chaplin's latest picture THE KID I contracted for this service without having seen the score because Mr. Bush gave me such an adequate description of your work as to convince me of its practicalness and excellence. After having played this score I feel assured that the Synchronized Scenario music is a great success and that the Motion Picture musical directors throughout the entire country will soon realize its value.

I congratulate you upon your development of a system which satisfies a long-felt need in the Motion Picture Business.

Very sincerely yours,

My dear Mr. Bush:

My personal experience as director of the orchestra of the Madison Square Theatre - which position calls for extreme care in arranging musical programs - has convinced me that synchronized music is the solution of the major problem confronting orchestra leaders everywhere.

To have a properly drawn musical score pre-arranged by experts who devote zealous care to each score (conforming the musical equipment to the precise movement of the picture) means the fulfillment of the average orchestra leader's most cherished dreams and I am sure that if synchronized music means half as much to other musical directors as it does to me it will soon be used by every theatre catering to exacting amusement lovers.

Assuring you of my highest personal regards, and sincerest congratulations for the success of your enterprise, I am, with best wishes,

Most appreciatively yours,

The Critics Are Unanimous:

BEST EVER SEEN

"One of the best pictures we ever saw. It is even better than 'Passion' or 'Deception.' Never have we seen such realism and Pola Negri is a powerful actress, who is fascinating, beautiful in a way that has character for its foundation, and intelligent. As Carmencita she gives a gorgeous performance. Not in the five years we have been seeing pictures have we been so delighted. We wouldn't have missed it for the world. It sets a new standard for pictures. It's a slice of life, full of fire and dash. There never could be another Carmen like Pola Negri."—New York Tribune.

VIGOROUS, GLOWING, LIVING

"A motion picture that can hold the interest and excite the discriminating admiration of intelligent people. Pola Negri has endowed a character with the attributes of reality. She is a vivid human being every moment of her performance. She has abundant personality and is expressive. The production as a whole is a vigorous, glowing, living thing that never lets the spectator's interest slacken for a moment."—New York Times.

VIVID, COLORFUL

"Pola Negri makes the role the most genuinely seductive seen in years on the screen. She puts a meaning in every line of her lithe figure. Splendidly conceived and stirring scenes. Miss Negri makes this a highly vivid and colorful photoplay."—New York Herald.

FIERY IN EMOTION

"A bright beam of light in the movie darkness. There are amorous scenes so fiery that the film seems in danger of spontaneous combustion. Mlle. Negri's fine eyes and mobile face are still on the job."—New York Sun.

BETTER THAN PASSION

"With all respect for past productions we feel that 'Carmen' has been done for the first time on the screen. In color, in sweep of action, in vivid and tense characterization, 'Gypsy Blood' surpasses both the other two Lubitsch productions, 'Passion' and 'Deception.' With a craft which the others lack, Lubitsch has caught all the savagery and lilt of this wild Romany tragedy which has held its fascination so long in legend and music. The film is a triumph of screen production."—New York Globe.

FLAME OF ENERGY

"Pola Negri is a beautiful, vehement and volcanic Carmen. She is a very flame of energy; she flings herself into the part with a turbulence and a brusque beauty that are extraordinary. She makes the illusion a perfect one, being at all times Carmen, not an actress trying to be Carmen."—New York News.

REALISTIC ACTION

"Pola Negri presents a super-emotional portrayal. The alluring eyes, the heaving bosom, the feline grace are vividly revealed. The scenario is excellent and the direction good throughout. The mountain scenes stand out splendidly and there is in every character, to the least one in the mob, a realism of appearance and action."—New York American.

STAR IS EXCELLENT

"Pola Negri was all that could be desired and at times more."—New York Journal.

VOL. XXIII MAY 21, 1921 No. XXII

Going to the Roots

A CONVENTION highly important to the motion picture was held in Washington last week. The following, from last week's issue, gives the matter in a nutshell:

> "The National Congress of Mothers and Parent Teachers Association at the final session of their annual meeting held in Washington, D. C., unanimously adopted a resolution advocating closer cooperation between their organization and the producers and exhibitors of motion pictures. This, in their opinion, rather than State Censorship, is the solution of the means to bring about a better class of motion pictures.
> "This action was the result of the activity of the delegates from Ohio and Pennsylvania who declared that legalized Censorship in these states has been a complete failure and that the right results could only be obtained by closer cooperation between these organizations and the picture industry."

First let us say that the Mothers and Parent Teachers Association is a large, widespread and powerful group of women; and they are deadly in earnest about motion pictures.

Fortunately, they are broadly and sanely constructive. They are not Mrs. Watermans. They represent an organization with an organization's aims. They view the motion picture as a powerful force in the development of the child and the social community; they have found, through practical experience, that this force can be regulated by active cooperation between those who make pictures and those who truly concern themselves with public sentiment and welfare.

It is significant to note that Mr. James Maddox of Columbus, Ohio, who was in attendance at the conference, appeared there not only as President of the Southern Ohio Exhibitors League, but also as a representative of the Parent Teachers Association itself.

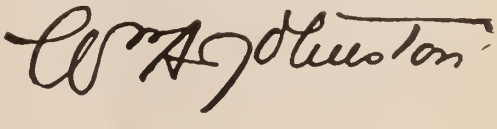
Mr. Maddox as an exhibitor has been working for some time with the Parent Teachers Association and with harmony and success. If a similar situation prevailed in all the cities and towns of this country—as in Columbus, and other Ohio towns—there would be no effort toward local censorship.

And if every state had an Indorsers' Organization, as has Indiana—which is but similar to the cooperative principle of the Parent Teachers Association—State Censorship would never have a chance to intrude its ugly head—for the very simple reason that it would have nothing to stand upon but thin air.

We have often appealed on these pages for just this kind of local and state regulation.

It goes to the root of censorship. That's the great and simple thing about it. It destroys any appeal for censorship. It replaces the footloose hair brained or utterly selfish reformer with the solid genuineness of men and women who are truly interested in their homes, their communities, their states—and the spirit of American citizenship.

And, anyway—censorship or no censorship—the exhibitor everywhere must sooner or later ally himself closely with the best interests of his community. He has got to work with public sentiment and for public welfare. He's got to do just that—or get out. And the producer has got to give him the right kind of pictures—or get out.



For the censorship that now exists, we say fight the abhorrent thing—and smash it! But for the censorship that will rise again next year, we say: begin now with the basic move that will utterly undermine it—and that is local and state regulation through cooperation with the best women's and civic organization.

Mr. Maddox, at Washington, asked for the appointment of committees from the Parent Teachers Association and from the motion picture interests to meet at once and inaugurate a national movement of cooperation.

We don't know why the opportunity wasn't grabbed at. We hope it isn't too late.

At any rate, we have offered to some of the leaders of the Parent Teachers Association the following suggestions:

Go right ahead with your excellent work. Don't wait for national cooperation with the industry at large. Keep on effecting your local cooperation with the exhibitor; make this grow into state-wide cooperation; keep up your present state organization cooperation. National cooperation will come in turn. But even if it doesn't, your work with the exhibitor will of itself bring from the producers the kind of pictures the public wants.

Decisive Action Planned Against Music Tax

Plans of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for action against the present system of taxing the theatre owners for playing any music written by members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, are reported to be rapidly taking shape. Action on this proposition will be taken by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at its executive meeting at the Hotel Washington in Washington, D. C., May 17.

The battle against the demand of some of the music publishers and composers is already under way in at least three states. The Kansas State Exhibitors' League has instructed its general counsel to make a test case and also to defend several actions now pending against members of the organization. A test case is also being prepared by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri.

Recently there have been instituted several suits against exhibitors in Eastern Pennsylvania. The members of the Motion Picture Theatres of Pennsylvania in this territory are determined to fight these cases to a finish, it is declared.

Working in conjunction with the M. P. T. O. A. is the United Theatrical Protective League, which has also launched a campaign to secured a repeal of the tax.

10 Alleged Film Thieves Are Arrested

A dragnet for film thieves is now being drawn throughout the country. During the last thirty days, ten arrests have been made in four big cities, a large number of stolen films have been recovered, and clues have developed that are expected to lead to the arrest of a large number of print burglars. The Film Theft Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its chairman, H. Minot Pitman, is broadening the campaign against the light fingered dealers in missing film.

In Cleveland a few days ago, Mr. Hawkins caused the arrest and indictment of Julius Watt, alias Jimmie Flannigan, on a charge of having stolen prints of the United Artists' production, "The Mark of Zorro," and the Universal feature, "Beautifully Trimmed." The prints were recovered at the time of Watt's arrest.

Theatre Owners' Officers Installed

William Brandt was the recipient of signal honor at the Installation Dinner of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce the night of May 11, in the Grand Ball Room of the Ritz Carlton Hotel.

With an estimated 250 present, Sydney Cohen following the dinner called an informal meeting of the body, officers were installed, and John Manheimer then made a presentation speech and tendered a chest of silver to Brandt on behalf of the Theatre Owners.

Dancing and entertainment followed.

Turner and Dahnken Sale to Famous Is Rumored

(By Wire Los Angeles, Cal., May 12th)

Rumor is current here to the effect that Turner and Dahnken's fourteen theatres in and about San Francisco have been sold to Famous Players-Lasky during the past week. Turner and Dahnken have purchased three theatres in Pasadena, Cal., including the Strand, the Florence, and Jensen's Raymond; also Jensen's Theatorium, the DeLuxe, and the Alvarado in Los Angeles; and Jensen's Glendale theatre in Glendale, Cal. Turner and Dahnken are also part owners of the Hippodrome at Taft, Cal., giving them eight houses in Southern California territory.

The rumor of the Turner and Dahnken sale to Famous Players-Lasky also has it that the First National franchise for the Northern California territory was not sold in the transaction, and the belief is current that a deal is in progress for Lesser and the Gore Brothers to buy this franchise.

Lesser went to San Francisco on last Saturday after issuing a statement that a Wall Street octopus was throwing a blanket over the independent theatre operators of the nation. An attempt will be made this week to organize an independent league among the independent exhibitors of Southern California.

Legion Protests "Caligari" Showing in Los Angeles

Fred Miller, manager of Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., took off "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," the German-made production, after an eight hours' run because of a demonstration by members of the Hollywood Post of the American Legion. This Post is made up largely of actors formerly in the service. The ex-service men formed a circle and marched past the box-office for hours for the purpose of inducing patrons from purchasing tickets for the performance. Those who bought tickets despite the demonstration were hissed and hooted, and several fights ensued. The demonstration was brought to a close when the Legion adjutant announced that Benjamin Hampton's "The Money Changers," made in Los Angeles, had been substantiated for the "Caligari" picture. The box-office was subsequently besieged by the crowd who rushed into the theatre to buy tickets as an expression of its appreciation of the change in program.

Legion members of the Equity and the Directors' Associations declare that the fight against German-made productions will be carried into every other city.

Alperstein and Golden Dissolve Partnership

Amiel Alperstein and Joseph A. Golden, formerly associated together under the trade name of A. and G. Enterprises, and interested in various producing and laboratory corporations, dissolved their co-partnership, April 27.

A. Alperstein will retain the offices formerly occupied by Allgood Pictures Corporation at 815 Longacre Building.

Nat'l Ass'n Annual Meeting in N. Y. June 6

The fifth annual meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be held on Sunday, June 6, at the association's headquarters, 1520 Broadway, New York. This date was decided upon at the monthly meeting of the association's Executive Committee on May 4, at which authorization was also given for the calling of annual meetings of the several branches of the association, including the Producers, Distributors, Supply & Equipment and General Divisions. These Divisions will meet prior to June 6 and nominate directors who will be voted upon at the annual meeting of the entire association. It is expected that the newly elected Board of Directors will immediately convene for the election of officers for the ensuing year.

Goldwyn Branch Managers at Coast Studios

Goldwyn executives from New York City and the managers of the twenty-two branch exchanges arrived at the Culver City studios, May 8, and were met by F. J. Godsol, chairman of the board of directors, who has been at the studios for several weeks, and Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production.

Maurice Wolf, of the Los Angeles exchange, presented George Hickey, Buffalo manager, with the golden key to Goldwyn Gate at the first gathering of the managers and executives, a party at the Alexandria Hotel, tendered by Mr. Lehr.

The first business session of the convention was called together May 9, at the studios, where A. S. Aronson, general sales manager, outlined the purposes of the meeting—the formulation of a sales campaign for each big feature of Goldwyn's fifth year product and bringing the branch managers, and through them the sales force, into closer touch with the production of the photoplays which they are to market.

Attractive Inserts Cause Industry to "Sit Up"

Among the leaders in point of beauty, attractiveness and marked selling force value, is the two page insert on "Rider of the King Log," appearing in this issue, the product of the Associated Exhibitors' office, of which Joseph A. Brady is now advertising manager.

Also in the forefront will be noted the insert of Associated Producers, while Cosmopolitan Productions, having been in receipt of congratulations for the exceptional insert which appeared in last week's News, has acknowledged credit in the following paragraph, an excerpt from a letter from George B. Van Cleve:

". . . congratulations, however, should be broadened to also cover the Advertising Manager I have appointed—James F. Sayles."

First Nat'l Managers to Convene May 16th

Will Hold Four-Day Conference in New York Next Week with Company's Executives

THE branch managers of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will assemble in New York City on Monday, May 16, for four days of business sessions with the executives of the company.

In many ways this promises to be the most elaborate convention held by the organization since the sessions of 1919, when the franchise holders and branch managers foregathered for a week at the Hotel Astor. For several months past the independent producing units distributing through Associated First National Pictures have been forwarding data to the main office regarding information deemed desirable as production guides and in turn these have been sent to the exchanges where special research work has been done by each organization in preparing resumes of conditions in their territories.

Economic and industrial conditions as well as the general theatrical situations have been investigated for subjects of special reports by the exchanges. Confidential reports from theatres as to the kind of productions that have been the most successful as well as those indicated as likely to be the most successful in the future have been obtained as well as the box office values of stars, directors, etc., who are releasing through the organization.

The production policy which is anticipated to be indicated by these reports will be the most comprehensive that has ever been placed in the hands of producers, declares a statement from First National home office. Not only will the reports provide a guide for the kind of stories which probably will be the most successful, but the scope of the production as well as the casting will be indicated to a certain extent, it is declared.

The production end, however, is not the only one which will receive discussion. Numerous new ideas for exhibitor aids have been developed by the First National organization during the past year and opinions have been sought from theatre managers in every territory as to their opinions of them. These things will be discussed with the opinions of the exhibitor as the predominating argument, and it is expected that several new lines of helps in selling the picture to the public will be among the outcomes of the convention.

Eight business sessions will be held, two on each day of the convention. The morning sessions will open at ten o'clock and the afternoon sessions will adjourn at 5:30 o'clock. The planned business of the session is expected to be cleared up at the first six sessions leaving the last two for the discussion of policies for the conditions peculiar to the individual exchanges.

The social side of the convention promises to be unusual. Norma and Constance Talmadge will have the delegates of the convention as their guests at a beef steak on Monday night. The place for the holding of it has not been announced. Tuesday night Jules E. Brulatour, producer of the Hope Hampton productions, will entertain at dinner at the Astor Hotel.

The Louis B. Mayer-Anita Stewart company will be the dinner hosts on Wednesday night with The Flotilla on Fifth Avenue as the place. The Katherine McDonald company will entertain the managers at a theatre party to a show as not yet selected, which will follow this dinner. From 11:30 p. m. on, the delegates will be the guests of Marshall Neilan at the Ziegfeld Midnight Follies. B. Y. O. B.

Among the exchange managers who have announced their intentions of being present are:

R. H. Clark of the New York City exchange; E. J. Hayes of the Buffalo exchange; R. C. Seery of the Chicago exchange; T. B. Spry of the Boston exchange; M. K. Keleher, New Haven; W. E. Lusk, Cleveland; R. H. Haines, Cincinnati; J. F. Cubberly, Minneapolis; H. J. Fitzgerald, Milwaukee; E. C. Rhoden and S. W. Hatch, Kansas City; S. S. Schwarz, Des Moines; H. M. Weinberg, Omaha; W. J. Heenan, Philadelphia; S. Y. Edwards, San Francisco; L. E. Tillman, St. John; A. Gorman, Montreal; W. J. Drummond, Toronto; F. Brown, Indianapolis; S. J. Baker, St. Louis; C. R. Beachem, Atlanta; F. P. Bryan, Charlotte; C. H. Feldman, Portland; L. O. Lukan, Seattle; A. M. Fabian, New Jersey; J. Skirboll, Pittsburg; H. Scott, Detroit; W. E. Callaway, Dallas; D. Bershon, Los Angeles; J. P. Anderson, Washington; S. J. Coffland, Vancouver; W. M. Mitchell, Calgary; B. Bloom, Winnipeg; L. L. Goldberg, Louisville; J. H. Ashby, Denver; L. L. Hall, Salt Lake City; C. J. Briant, New Orleans and Jack Brainard, Oklahoma City.

The Big Job Is for the Film Missionaries

By Sam Harding, President of the Associated Exhibitors

IN every business the salesman is the missionary. He carries the word. The measure of the prosperity of an industry often depends upon the mob psychology influencing the selling organizations. They are the physical contact between the middleman and the center of things, production. In the wrong spirit they can be as dangerous as the plague and in the right spirit they can be as helpful as the sun, rain and the other agencies of nature.

Aside from what they regard as their chief mission in life, the selling of films, they are the bearers of the word of prosperity. They are the custodians of policy. What they say about what the other fellow is doing makes a thousand "other fellows" and fixes the condition of things. Right now in the motion picture business there are several varieties of sales representatives and there is only room for the right varity.

I have sat in my office in Kansas City and I have listened to all sorts of salesmen. I have heard the industrous young men intent on their jobs, I have heard the clever men who study conditions and can talk intelligently about them, I have heard the rumor monger and the calamity howler. Some of the latter class may have wondered why their interview was so brief.

Thinking over all they have said I have felt some regret that exhibitors were in part responsible. Eternally preaching hard times in an effort to get down prices for film, the exhibitor has been driving the idea into the salesman's head that times were very bad and the spreading of the word has been producing something of an effect. It might help some to call the attention to the matter at this time for the particular subject of discussion at this time is price cutting.

If this is the time for retrenchment, let us start in by retrenching on the dessert. The meat of the motion picture business is the picture. If we start in by cutting prices to an extent that prevents our getting good men, we will find that living on dessert is mighty poor for the public stomach. That is where the salesman comes in and where the wise exhibitor will appreciate the truth. If more effort was made toward encouraging the picture, toward discouraging price cutting, and toward preserving profits by eliminating waste and waste only, prosperity would be much more certain in the coming months.

Any theatre owner will grant that the rest of the country seems to be in competition with Broadway in the matter of prologues, music and all sorts of accessories.. The picture itself is getting to be the least expensice feature of the theatre. The trimmings have been running into real money. Even Broadway does not find it a profitable game. How can the rest of the country expect it to make money?

With the coming hot weather attendance is going to fall off in theatres. Beyond doubt some exhibitors are going to believe that the prices are keeping people out, and then the cutting will begin. Every time they cut the price from forty cents to thirty, they cut into that part of their gross, representing their profit and they must get an increase of twenty-five per cent in attendance to make this up. Hot weather is not going to enable them to get that twenty-five per cent and the picture is going to suffer. The situation thus presented calls for careful consideration.

It can be readily understood that a reduction of fifty cents on a dollar in the Officers and Executive Committee of the M. P. T. O. of A. to Meet May 17

NATIONAL officers and executive committeemen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will meet in the Hotel Washington at Washington, D. C., beginning Tuesday, May 17, for a three-day session.

At this meeting plans will be consummated for the launching of the National legislative program during the present session of Congress. This legislation which the Motion Picture Theatre Owners will seek will be in the form of more equitable and uniform contract laws, relief from the present burdensome and unjust tax required by publishers and composers for the playing of any of their music in motion picture theatres, and moderation or elimination of the present heavy taxation system, with special reference to the five per cent film rental tax.

One of the most important events on the program will be the report of the president, Sydney S. Cohen, on the results and achievements of the organization since its inception at Cleveland last June. President Cohen will make a full report on the present status of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the states now organized, their activities, and the activities in general of the national organization.

President Cohen will also lay before the officers and committeemen complete plans for the continued growth and development of the organization.

Among other important reports that will be rendered are those of the committee on exhibitor-producer relations, laws and legislation, business relations, and ways and means.

At this meeting there will also be made full and complete plans for the National Convention of the organization to be held early in July in Minneapolis, Minn.

Educational Exhibits Code Modified in Pennsylvania

Modification of the proposed motion picture code regulating films exhibited by charitable, religious and educational institutions in the state of Pennsylvania has been agreed to by the Industrial Board, Commissioner Connelley, of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, has just announced.

Provisions of the original code that will be eliminated include those requiring that the films shown be of an educational character; prohibiting the charging of admission fees; the number of days the exhibition may be held in a week.

The changes were decided upon after two public hearings, one in Philadelphia and the other in Pittsburgh, at which the objections of the various religious, educational and welfare organizations were heard.

Francis A. Mangan Joins Allen Brothers

Announcement is made that Francis A. Mangan has been appointed production manager for the new Allen theatre in Montreal and will have charge of presentation when this new theatre, the latest addition of the Allen interests, opens its doors on Saturday, May 14. Mr. Mangan has been serving in a like capacity for the past year at Phil Gleichman's Broadway-Strand, Detroit.

Jules Burnstein Joins Celtic Photo Plays

The directors of the Celtic Photo Plays, Inc., have appointed Jules Burnstein to the position of General Representative of the company. Mr. Burnstein is one of the best known executives. He was identified with Mutual, Pathe and other large organizations.

Celtic Photo Play, Inc., is releasing two Irish pictures, "The Colleen of the Moor" and "War Torn Ireland."

New York Incorporations

The following companies, together with the amount of capitalization and the directors for the first year, have filed papers of incorporation with the Secretary of State at Albany, N. Y., during the past week, and will enter the motion picture business:

Inspiration Pictures, $550,000, Charles H. Duell, Jr., J. Boyce Smith, Jr., E. M. Brown, New York; Allart Picture Corporation, $5,000, Abe Greenstein, Charles Penser, L. M. Fox, New York; Ossining Theatres Corporation, $2,500, E. A. Reilly, L. E. McMahon, M. V. Phelan, New York; the Genesee Valley Theatre Company, Buffalo, $50,000, L. Benedict Oishei and Charles Oishei, D. Marian Gray, Buffalo; Associated Foreign Film Buyers, $5,000, S. A. Repetto, T. F. MacMahon, B. C. Elliott, New York; Warners Exchange, $10,000, A. C. Thomas, H. S. Bareford, M. H. Muller, New York; Forward Film Exchange, $5,000, Samuel Freund, Jos. Joel, Adolph Freund, New York; Crescent Cinema Corporation, $100,000, Christ Spann, Jr., Wallace Bateman, Henry Pritting, Jr., Buffalo; Inter-Globe Export Corporation, $100,000, M. L. Cohen, Oscar Tunell, Jr., Harry Lewis, New York City.

Seek Male Member of Kansas Board of Review

A resolution, urging Governor Allen of Kansas to appoint a man as business manager or inspector of the Kansas board of motion picture reviews, caused heated debate and discord among the delegates at the annual meeting of the Kansas State Federation of Women's Clubs in Parsons, Kan., last week. The state board of reviews is now comprised of three Kansas City, Kan., women. It was stated that many of the obstacles encountered by the board were of such a character that they could be more easily and effectively handled by a man.

The resolution was finally killed.

Censor Bill Fails to Pass Wisconsin Legislature

The drastic Bennett motion picture censorship bill was killed on May 4, when the Wisconsin senate by an almost unanimous vote decided to indefinitely postpone action on it. The vote for 27 for postponement and 4 against such action. The senate committee on state affairs the week before had recommended killing the bill.

The victory for the picture interest is attributed largely to the work of the Joint Legislative Committee of the Wisconsin Motion Picture Industry and Allied Crafts. This committee was representative of the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association, a state-wide organization of the F. I. L. M. Club and Operators' Union of Milwaukee.

During the four months campaign at the legislature nine separate bills against the industry were killed. Among these was a fire regulation bill, regulating the size and kind of booths and number of operators per machine, which was killed in committee. A second fire regulation bill in regard to the construction of new theatres, suffered the same fate. A child welfare bill, creating a censor board was killed in committee as was the bill prohibiting the showing of any film depicting murder or crime.

Book Available on Subject of Picture Regulation

Announcement comes from the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City, that it has issued a "Handbook on the Regulation of Motion Pictures," including two model ordinances. These relate to the regulation of films themselves and to the regulation of motion picture advertising. Other matters dealt with constructively are the problem of motion pictures with respect to young people and the principle of legalized censorship. The whole pamphlet is based on the Report of the Special Committee of the New York State Conference of Mayors and other city officials.

The pamphlet may be had from the National Board freely upon request accompanied by postage.

British Customs Authorities Grant Concessions

BY a concession granted recently by the British Customs authorities, it will be possible for prospective customers to be brought in to witness the screenings of an imported film before the payment of duty. Apart from giving importers a chance to sell a film without becoming liable for customs duty, this will also be useful where a second opinion is thought desirable.

Another concession just granted concerns importation by parcels post. If parcels are addressed to importers care of The Bonded Film Stores, of 33-35 Endell street, London, W. C., they will be sent up from the various ports more expeditiously and will be delivered without the importer being obliged to pay bond.

John C. Flinn and Whalen Address A.M.P.A.

Motion picture advertising must be kept ean if national censorship of pictures is be avoided, was the opinion expressed y John C. Flinn, formerly director of ublicity and advertising for Famous layers-Lasky Corporation and now en- ged in an executive position for the me organization, in an address before ie Associated Motion Picture Advertis- s at the Cafe Boulevard, May 5.

"There are more people going to mo- on pictures than ever before in our his- ry," Mr. Flinn declared, speaking from is observation after a few months' tour f the country. "They—the great the- regoing public—are a vast majority of mple living people who adhere to clean ving and do clear thinking. It is not a uestion of bringing advertising down to ieir level but of bringing it up to them ecause the motion picture-going public is ie cleanest minded public in the world to- ay.

Mr. Flinn followed Grover G. Whalen, ity Commissioner of Plants and Struc- ires, who spoke on the censorship prob- m as it affected New York City follow- ig the adoption of the censorship bill by ie two branches of the State Legislature.

Transportation Bulletin Embodies New Features

In a special bulletin issued by the trans- ortation committee (P. H. Stilson, chair- an), of the National Association of the lotion Picture Industry, many recent ac- vities of the committee are set forth, ncluding the revision of specifications for hipping cases adopted after lengthy con- erences between the committee and the ureau of explosives. These specifications re published in full in the bulletin. They re effective September 1 and are said to mbody many improvements over the resent shipping cases from a standpoint f durability, fire prevention and new ocking devices. Six classes of shipping ases are covered in the specifications.

The printed specifications can be btained upon application from the Na- ional Association headquarters, 1520 Broadway, New York City.

Better Film Business in Cuba Is Forecast

A steady improvement in the film busi- ess in Cuba is predicted for the remain- der of the year by A. L. Pratchett, man- ger of the Caribbean Film Co., of Ha- ana, Cuba, who spent several days in New York on business during the week of May 2, with E. E. Shauer, assistant treas- rer and manager of the Foreign Depart- ment of the Famous Players-Lasky Cor- poration. The Caribbean Film Co. is the sole representative for Paramount pictures in Cuba.

Three new theatres will be formally opened to the public in May. The two other theatres nearing completion are the Cine Neptune and the Cine Edison, both of Havana.

Louis Reeves Harrison Dead; Was One of the Pioneers of Trade Journal Field

LOUIS REEVES HARRISON, one of the pioneers of the film-press field, died Friday afternoon, May 6th, in the Memorial Hospital, New York City, following an operation for a malignant tumor. Besides being one of the oldest figures in the field of trade journalism, Mr. Harrison was the author of "Screencraft," a series of essays on various phases of film production, and of many screen adaptations, the most notable of which was that for "Paid in Full."

Funeral services for Mr. Harrison were held on Tuesday afternoon of this week at Campbell's Funeral Church, New York, and were attended by a host of his friends in the trade. Mr. Harrison was in his sixty-third year and is survived by one son. The remains were taken to Boston, Mass., for interment.

Louis Reeves Harrison was born near Keokuk, Iowa, and studied medicine in his early years. He abandoned the medical field at an early date, however, and became a staff writer of the Paris edition of the New York Herald at the time that James Gordon Bennett established the European edition of his publication. Later Mr. Harrison became interested in the manufacture of perfume and conducted a thriving business of this character on Fourteenth Street, New York. He still later managed a bicycling paper in Boston, but this venture succumbed with the waning of the "wheel craze."

Since 1908 Mr. Harrison had been almost continuously associated with the film industry, principally in the trade journal field, where his reviews and editorial writings early won recognition. He was also considered as one of the most successful story writers for the old Biograph organization. In recent years Mr. Harrison had been serving as a staff member of the Moving Picture World.

Nazimova Ends Vacation

Madam Alla Nazimova left New York for Los Angeles on Thursday, May 12, ending a brief vacation of only fifteen days. Nazimova arrived in New York in time to be one of the leading features in the big annual show of the Actors' Equity Association at the Metropolitan Opera House.

On her return to the West Coast Nazimova was accompanied by her husband, Charles Bryant, and William Muenster, her company manager. Her affairs in the East will be looked after by Robert Edgar Long, formerly of the D. W. Griffith executive staff.

Exhibitor Has Two Trials for Blue Law Violations

William C. Tracy, manager of the Gem theatre at Platteville, Wis., for the second time within a month has escaped conviction, through disagreement of the jury, of violation of the blue laws by operating his theatre Sunday.

At the first trial the jury stood three for conviction and three for acquittal. This week the jury stood four for conviction and two for acquittal.

In both cases the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has led in the attack and have filed the complaints against Mr. Tracy.

Art Levy Heads Foreign Dept. of Ass'd Players

General Manager Al Lichtman of Associated Producers Inc. announces the appointment of Arthur Levey to assume charge of the foreign sales department.

Mr. Levey comes to Associated Producers with vast experience in the motion picture industry all over the world. His association with the screen covers a period of eleven years. Best known as an exporter and pictorial representative in America for the Associated Newspapers Ltd. (Lord Northcliffe Press).

Idaho Exhibitor Ass'n to Join M.P.T.O. of A.

The most important action of the Idaho Exhibitors' Association in convention assembled at Idaho Falls, was voting to affiliate with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and a full endorsement of the national organization's policies. The other important resolution declared for cleaner pictures, and a pledge to make every effort to show only those pictures from which had been eliminated all objectionable features that meet with protest from their patrons. It was also voted not to show Clara Smith Hamon films in Idaho.

The officers of the Idaho Exhibitors' Association are president, R. D. Carruthers, Pocatello; first vice-president, C. Hendricks, Mountain Home; second vice-president, A. H. Hilton, Lewiston; secretary, A. J. Schubert, Gooding; treasurer, C. D. Bucknum, Emmett; executive committee, L. C. Gallagher, Boise; C. H. Lewis, Idaho Falls, and W. A. Mendenhall, of Boise.

Canadian Universal Film Buys Two Theatres

Word comes from the Canadian Universal Film Co. that the Canadian Theatres, Ltd., owners of the Princess theatre, Calgary, have purchased the Regent and Dreamland theatres in Edmonton, Alberta. Mr. A. H. Lawrence will be the manager of both the Edmonton houses. The statement from Canadian Universal Film further advises that this organization is planning to have theatres all through Western Canada.

Robt. Brunton Coming East with Kipling Negative

A wire from the Coast announces that Robert Brunton and Randolph Lewis left Los Angeles for New York on last Sunday, bringing with them the negative of Rudyard Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy."

Bosworth to Produce for Associated Producers

Hobart Bosworth has joined the ranks of independent producers and has already commenced work on a series of feature dramas to be released by the Associated Producers, according to an announcement just issued.

The Hobart Bosworth Productions, Inc., is the name of the new organization which has been formed to handle the star's pictures. Samuel Heyman, of San Francisco, is the president; Emory Johnson, vice president, and Max Graf, who returns to studio activities after three years' absence, will serve in the managerial capacity.

Six features are to be filmed during the coming year. Rowland V. Lee, who directed two former Bosworth features, and J. O. Taylor, who has been his cameraman for more than two years, have joined the new organization and are continuing in their former capacities. Joseph Franklin Poland has written the continuity for the initial story.

Authors in Cast of Anti-Censorship Feature

Several well known authors and playwrights have made their first personal screen appearance in an "all star" film entitled, "The Non-Sense of Censorship," which has been made for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and is now being shown in photoplay theatres of states where censorship is being agitated.

Douglas Fairbanks is the only regular screen actor in the picture. He shares star honors, however, with Rupert Hughes, Edward Knoblock, Samuel Merwin, Thomas Buchanan, Rita Weiman and Montague Glass, all of whom are declared to act like veterans.

The ridiculous as well as the serious side of censorship is dealt with in the film playlet, and it is declared to be one of the most effective arguments against legalized supervision of motion pictures that has yet been used in the National Association's campaign against censorship.

State Censorship Editorially Condemned

In an editorial calling upon Governor Miller to veto the bill creating New York state censorship of motion pictures the New York Tribune last week stated in outright fashion that such censorship is un-American, would create a precedent for censorship in every state, whereas the industry from its nature must be conducted nationally, and finally stated a far better system of regulation could be furnished.

In conclusion it said:

"The amusement of our people is a matter of most serious concern. No mistakes must be made in relation to the handling of far and away the most popular form of organized entertainment. Governor Miller may well elect to follow time-proved principles and not plunge the state into an innovation against the whole spirit of our laws and social polity."

Barthelmess Pictures for First Nat'l

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, who within the past eighteen months has become one of the most popular featured players in films, is to be a star at the head of his own company. Simultaneously with the announcement of the formation that Inspiration Pictures, Inc., had been formed for the purpose of producing feature films starring this young actor, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., announced that negotiations had been completed with Inspiration Pictures whereby the exhibitor organization would have the distribution of the Barthelmess productions for a period of three years. Twelve pictures are contemplated under the contract. Several directors are under consideration.

The new star is at present in Flower hospital recovering from the effects of an operation for mastoiditis. The starting of production work on the features starring him is entirely dependent upon his recovery to full strength.

Charles H. Duell, Jr. is responsible for the starring arrangement for Mr. Barthelmess. He conducted negotiations for both of the contracts. Inspiration Pictures has been incorporated for $1,500,000 and Mr. Duell will be in active charge of the company.

The studio location for the new productions is not announced as yet.

W. H. Jenner Vice-President of F. R. Warren Corp.

Announcement was made this week of the election to a vice-presidency of the F. B. Warren Corporation, new national motion picture distributing unit, of William H. Jenner, for six years associated with Mr. Warren in various motion picture enterprises. Mr. Jenner has resigned from Associated Producers, where he had been Mr. Warren's personal representative in Los Angeles while Warren was general manager of that company, to assume his new duties. After a trip to New York and Boston on personal business, Mr. Jenner will return to the Coast.

In his new post, Mr. Jenner will have supervision of the F. B. Warren offices in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Denver. He will make his headquarters in Los Angeles.

Membership Certificates Being Sent Exhibitors

All members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America throughout the entire country are being supplied with certificates of their membership in the organization. The certificate is an attractive one and is to be framed and placed on the front of the box office that patrons may be informed of the theatre's membership.

"J'Accuse" Shown Befor Brilliant Gathering

Before an audience composed of leading motion picture men, and city and foreign officials, including the French Consul, J'Accuse, the big French production, was shown at the Ritz Carlton Hotel the night of May 10 for the first time in this country.

Heralded as one of the great features of the year, and the equal of any foreign production which has yet seen this shore, the feature was generously acclaimed on its presentation, and appears destined to create wide comment throughout the country on its release.

A detailed review will appear in the columns of the News in the next issue.

Woolacott Co., which is to have th exclusive Oriental rights to all of the As sociated Producers pictures released dur ing the first year. "Lying Lips," Ince' spectacular drama, will be the first pro duction to be released, probably abou July 1.

F.P.-Lasky at New Hom in Kansas City

The Kansas City Branch Exchange o the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation i now housed in its own building.

Welcome to the Fold

WE welcome to the screen another eminent artist, Tony Sarg. His screen novelty, Tony Sarg's Almanac, which had its first New York showing at the Criterion last Monday, scored, according to the comments of the daily press, a striking success. We have prophesied right along the gradual enrollment within the wide circle of the picture and the picture theatre the best artists of the world. Already their work is noticeable in the output of the studio. Just recently a group of New York's leading mural painters have banded together to improve theatre decorations and stage settings and colorings. Again we see the concert singer of the Broadway picture houses going to the Metropolitan Opera. And next come posters! We want our posters made by the country's greatest poster artists; and we shall have them.

W. A. JOHNSTON.

S. California Theatre Owners Elect

At the annual election of the Theatre Owners of Southern California, held May 1, the following officers were named for the year:

J. F. Lustig, President; J. L. Lazurus, Vice President; O. W. Lewis, 2nd Vice President; Glenn Harper, Secretary; E. B. Vanderlip, Financial Secretary and B. H. Lustig, Treasurer.

Screen and Stage Stars at Drew Post's Show

The S. Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion, announces that D. W. Griffith and Frank Bacon will appear together at the Post's show, scheduled for May 15, at the Hippodrome, in New York.

Other notables of the screen who are to appear on the bill in various acts are Dorothy Gish, and James Rennie, Mae Marsh, Mae Murray and Wallace McCutcheon, Arthur Rankin, Gordon Standing, Gilbert Rooney and Betty Blythe.

The Job For the Salesman

price of a ticket to a legitimate theatre represents a saving that will be considered. That may and probably will increase the number of patrons, but I can never believe that the reduction of five or ten cents in the price of a motion picture ticket will increase patronage. It will just take away the money needed to keep the business on a high plane. The inducement represented by five or ten cents is not great enough to bring in the great number of additional patrons required to make up the loss in financial return.

Hail Veto of Censorship by Nebraska Governor

IN vetoing the censorship bill—which had been rushed through the Nebraska legislature—Governor McKelvie explained his act pointedly and with admirable logic. Responsible heads of important New York picture concerns read his veto statement with expressions of emphatic approval, which may be crystalized in one epigrammatic remark made by Paul Brunet.

"The Constitution of the United States is not yet a 'scrap of paper!'"

Some of the most appreciated utterances of Governor McKelvie, as quoted in the newspapers confirm opinions repeatedly expressed by Mr. Brunet. For example:

"I am thoroughly convinced that public opinion when it is left free and untrammeled will control the entire situation. . . . Let us then place the responsibility with the people themselves, where it belongs, realizing that if we as a nation are to be strong, virile, self-governing people we must assume the full responsibilities of citizenship without expecting the state to relieve us from the ills that are self-imposed and that are within our range to control, without the aid or direction of statutory law."

A Veto That Says It All

Governor McKelvie, of Nebraska, in vetoing the recent censorship legislation in that state, wrote a veto that is classic in its ringing of free speech, a free screen, and its vigorous opposition to attempts to curb the liberty of citizens. MOTION PICTURE NEWS in reprinting it urges every exhibitor and film man to preserve this page as a weapon of incalculable value. The veto follows:

I shall withhold my approval from H. R. No. 113. This is an act which provides for a board of reviews (censors), whose duty it shall be to determine what motion pictures may be shown in the state.

It is with the sincerest regrets that I feel impelled in this action. I do not like to set my opinion up against that of a majority of the members of the legislature, especially upon a subject that has been so thoroughly considered by it, but I feel so keenly upon the principles here involved and I am so fearful of the violence that will be done to our free institutions by legislation like this that I must waive all question of personal preference and act in accord with my conscientious belief.

There are many reasons why I think this is not good legislation. I might again refer to the danger that lurks in the creation of additional boards and agencies of government, the need for which is doubtful and the burden of taxation for the maintenance of which is ever increasing; or I might point out the fruitful field of dissension and discontent and resentment that is developed in the public mind by this sort of regulatory legislation. But these are of minor importance when compared with the larger theory of free government as it is provided in our fundamental law and as we have always cherished it and believed in it. Therefore it is upon this point that I shall dwell.

Section 5, Article 1, of our state constitution, provides that "every person may freely speak, write and publish on all subjects and being responsible for the abuses of that liberty." This is a guarantee of free action that has always been cherished by us and no one who believes in American principles of government can for a moment tolerate its abridgement. That H. R. No. 113 does promise to abridge this right is very apparent to me, as I believe also it must be to the people of the state.

It is no reflection upon any of the agencies that influence public opinion when I say that there is no criticism to be made against motion pictures in the things that they portray that might not also be made of the legitimate stage, the most popular books on fiction or the press. Indeed, the very great majority of pictures are simply the portrayal upon the screen of stories that have already been told in the press or acted upon the stage. Moreover, every item mentioned in this bill as unworthy of portrayal upon the screen is admitted without censorship or criticism to be published otherwise. Murder, manslaughter, homicide, burglary, offenses against women, fraud, embezzlement, marital infidelity, divorce, and every other crime is told and retold with all of the appending details in the columns of the daily press, but I venture the assertion that it would be a very small minority of our people who favor the censorship of this character of news. Certainly, then, you must agree with me that to be consistent it will naturally follow that censorship of motion pictures must ultimately be followed by censorship of the press.

The remedy for the evils that attend the showing of pictures that might properly be considered as subject for censorship is clearly pointed out in the paragraph of the constitution that I have already quoted wherein it says that every person shall be held responsible for the abuses of the liberty of free speech and the press. This means that offenses against the proper exercise of this liberty may be legally defined and punishment may be inflicted for violation of the law. Already we have such provisions upon the statute books and they are enforced. To go further than this and anticipate the violation is to approve conviction before the offense has been committed.

Such a procedure would be intolerable under our theory of government. It would simply mean that the state would become the guardian of the individual, directing him in his every act and depriving him of his rights of initiative and personal opinions.

But there is yet a finer and more fundamental remedy for these ills than by statutory law. It is the law of personal control, which embraces strength of character, moral rectitude, the belief in an infinite God, temperance of action, tolerance for the rights of others and the precepts of the golden rule. These, after all, are the things that shall forever determine our destiny as individuals, as a people and as a nation, and their evolution will be wrought primarily and fundamentally through those free institutions which we cherish most—the home, the church and the schools. So profoundly do I believe this to be true that I think the enactment of this law would stand as an indictment of these institutions, an admission that they have failed in their purpose and their importance would be consequently subordinated to the paternalism of the state.

I do not question the justice of the criticism that is made of the influence of some pictures upon the children, but admitting the very worst in this direction, it need not also be admitted that legislation is needed to control the situation. What shall we say of the obligation of parents to their children and the manner in which they must discharge this responsibility if we are to have a nation of independent, self-governing people?

The laws that are made in legislative halls are of only secondary importance to the laws that are formulated in the home and the same may be said of law enforcement. It is still true that 'the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world,' and it is equally true that there is no law which will repair the damage that is done when parents fail to exercise proper jurisdiction and control over their children.

There is no more reason to pass laws against the showing of pictures that do not have a strong moral influence than there is to prevent the publication of books and newspapers that carry the same stories as are shown on the screen. The right kind of parents do not permit their children to read indiscriminately. Neither should they permit them to see pictures indiscriminately. The guardianship of the child in these matters is a parental responsibility and to transmit it to the state would be simply to lessen the responsibility and minimize the importance of the home. What we want now is not that parents should be encouraged to relax their proper vigil over their children but that they should be called to realize that the state must and will not relieve them of these responsibilities.

I am thoroughly convinced that public opinion when it is left free to function untrammeled will control the entire situation. The motion picture business is young and many abuses have crept into it that are repugnant to those who have been most successful in it. These abuses will be gradually removed as the business grows, and in the same proportion will be prompt to remove that character of productions from the screen. The movement has already begun and I predict that before another legislature convenes in Nebraska, it shall have made such progress that the question of the censorship will not even be suggested here.

Let us then place the responsibility with the people themselves where it belongs, realizing that if we as a nation are to be strong, virile, self-governing people we must assume the full responsibilities of citizenship without expecting the state to relieve us from the ills that are self-imposed and that are within our range to control, without the aid or direction of statutory law.

Clark, of Robertson-Cole, Tendered Luncheon

C. Seymour Clark, director of publicity and advertising for Robertson-Cole Company, was the honor guest at a luncheon given Friday, May 6, at Keen's Old English Chop House on Forty-fourth street, for the editors and advertising managers of the motion picture trade journals of New York City.

The luncheon was given by Gordon H. Place, assistant director of publicity, that the representatives of the trade journals might meet Mr. Clark, who has only recently entered the motion picture publicity field.

Attending the luncheon, in addition to those named, were Miss Louella Parsons, New York Morning Telegraph; Wendell Milligan, Clem Kracht and Epes Winthrop Sargent, Moving Picture World; Tom Hamlin, Motion Picture Journal; Joseph Dannenberg and James Krahn, Wid's Daily; Sam Comly, Exhibitors Herald; Monte Sohn and Arthur McCosker, Exhibitors Trade Review, and Harry Osborne of Robertson-Cole Company.

European Branch of Kessel Laboratory Contemplated

Convinced that Europe is in need of an American up-to-date laboratory, Mr. Nicholas Kessel, owner of the Nicholas Kessel Laboratories, the largest in the country, is determined to open a branch somewhere on the Continent, possibly in Antwerp, Belgium. With this in view, Mr. Kessel is sending as his representative Miss Martha McCarthy to look the field over as well as the conditions.

F. B. Lasky British Studio Rounds Out Year

Five Productions Completed Since Opening; Many Difficulties Overcome

PERHAPS no one residing outside of England fully appreciated the immensity of the problem that confronted the executives of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., when it was decided to erect a British studio for the production of Paramount pictures. Building conditions were, and still are, chaotic, on account of the drastic Governmental restrictions upon new building projects and the almost prohibitive cost of labor and materials. Today, therefore, the wisdom of the company's executives in securing a building already constructed and suitable for adaptation to picture-making uses, rather than adopting the wasteful and tedious course of building from the ground up, seems fully revealed.

Within eight months from the time the old Poole Street Power station in Islington was taken over in October, 1919, it was completely dismantled and gutted, rebuilt entirely inside and made ready for production work. And now, just a year from that latter date, five productions have been completed within its walls and the sixth and seventh are under way.

The first two, namely, the Hugh Ford production, "The Call of Youth," by Henry Arthur Jones, and "The Great," by Louis N. Parker and George R. Sims, have already been released in the United States. The third, the Donald Crisp production of "Appearances," by Edward Knoblock, is due for American release in a month or so; the fourth, "The Mystery Road," directed by Paul Powell, is now past the cutting stage, and the fifth, the Donald Crisp production of Cosmo Hamilton's "The Princess of New York," is now completed.

The studios of the Famous Players-Lasky British producers at Islington, are indeed interesting and have been an eye-opener to all in the British film industry who have visited them. The place is a miniature town, self-contained and supplying its own requirements; compact in its arrangement and wonderfully rich in its resources, technical and artistic.

The large No. 1 studio is on the ground floor and is some 102 feet in length by 65 in width, and contains a water tank, 50 feet by 17 wide and 12 feet deep, offering special advantages for water scenes. It is provided with a movable cover and has windows at each end for the photographing of under-water scenes.

At one end of this studio is a scene-dock, from which scenes can be despatched as painted, either down to the No. 1 studio, or by elevator to the No. 2 studio which is on the first floor. The latter is well lighted and large enough to accommodate six scene sets at a time. At the upper end of the No. 2 studio is a closed gallery with overlooking windows, where the art director's room, and some of the principal dressing rooms are situated.

On the ground floor below the No. 2 studio is a large carpenters' shop, with the most up-to-date wood-working machinery, bandsaws, planing, moulding and mechanical morticing machines, all electrically driven. All the executive offices are very compactly arranged, almost in a straight line along one side of the building.

The studio lighting equipment is well up to American standard, including an ample supply of Kleigs, spot-lights, Meyer-Wool double arcs, double-bank and low-bank Cooper-Hewitts, half a dozen overhead domes, as well as three Sunlight arcs; while for exterior night "locations" there is a fine trolly equipment, which provides an output of 600 amps. at 120 volts, sufficient for all normal requirements.

The studio staff is numerous, well organized, enthusiastic, and there is a fine spirit of loyalty and comradeship shown throughout. Major Charles H. Bell is the general manager, with J. Sloan as the assistant manager; G. W. Budden is secretary of the company and head of the audit department; L. B. Lestocq is casting director; L. Dawson, art director; N. Gregory Arnold, assistant art director; C. McDonnell, chief cameraman; J. Rosenthal, first cameraman; B. Evans, chief scenic artist; A. Stewart, location manager; Miss M. de Saint-Martin, costume designer; J. S. Morgan, chief engineer; A. J. Moss, chief carpenter; F. Mills property master; A. Barned, draper. Two directors are at present at work in the studios, namely, Donald Crisp, with Assistant Director Claude H. Mitchell, and Miss Margaret Turnbull as scenarist, and Paul Powell, with Assistant Director R. J. Cullen and Miss Mary O'Connor as scenarist.

Fake Film Stock Promoters Curbed by New Bill

An act which it is felt will do away with false and misleading advertising calculated to promote false stock selling schemes was passed during the last session of the New York Legislature.

The act is in the nature of an amendment to the present penal law and the new stipulations incorporated, and other changes in the old law tend more specifically to render felonious the activities of a fake promoting corporation or association. Particular attention is paid to the publication in newspaper or other printed form of claims for any commodity which are untrue, deceptive or misleading. This feature, it is believed, will put a stop to the alluring and false verbiage used by promoters, calculated to entice the public into doubtful ventures.

The act if signed takes effect September 1.

"News" Commended by Wisconsin Showmen

At the close of the convention of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association, President Rhodes was unanimously re-elected. Other officers named were Jack Silliman, Milwaukee, Vice President; Jos. Winninger, Waupau, Treasurer and R. Seegert, Recording Secretary.

Delegates and alternates to the National Convention to be held at Minneapolis were named.

Among resolutions passed was one in opposition to "soul kisses" running more than five lineal feet, with the request that exhibitors withdraw support from producers making "sex" productions. Another commended MOTION PICTURE NEWS "for that magazine's service to the exhibitor."

Partington, Barton and Rorke Among the Week's Visitors

Jack Partington, co-director with Eugene Roth of the California, Imperial and Portola theatres, San Francisco, is in New York this week and a welcome visitor to Motion Picture News office.

Dan Barton, of the Bartola organ, in town looking like an oil millionaire from the West, confesses that business is so good with the Bartola organ that he can afford a short vacation in New York and an opportunity to catch up on spending some of the accumulated receipts.

Sam Rork, who made rapid strides to the front among independent producers during the past year, is in New York with the first of the Selig-Rork two-reel dramatic classics. Those who have been given private showings of the new short features, with all star casts, and based on big books, are more than enthusiastic.

Enter—Robert Edward Dickerson

Preceded by an entire lack of exploitation, thrown on the world cold for an indefinite run without a hint of advance ballyhoo—and sponsored by a man who says he knows all there is to know about those subjects—Robert Edward Dickerson got off to a flying start on Tuesday, May 11, when the first day's box office report registered ten and a half pounds.

Speaking for himself Robert Edward Dickerson declared that in as much as his father, J. S. Dickerson, conducts the Exhibitor Service Bureau of Motion Picture News, he trusted that in future he would be exploited to a greater extent than upon his advent into this merry world.

It is the sincere wish of the co-workers of the proud father on Motion Picture News, that his son, as he goes through life, achieves a popularity among his associates equal to that of his dad.—R. E. W.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Ike Von Ronkel, of Favorite Film Corporation, is arranging for some personal appearances for Miss Clara Kimball Young, who is scheduled to arrive in Chicago about May 29th. Maurice Fleckels, of New York, Mr. Von Ronkel's associate in Favorite Film Corporation, was in Chicago this week conferring with Mr. Von Ronkel on sales plans. President Snipzer, of Equity, also was a visitor at the offices of Favorite Film Corporation this week.

A remarkable clock, which is causing much comment among patrons of the Randolph Theatre, has just been installed in the State Street lobby of that house. It apparently runs without any motive power and consists of a glass dial with gold hands, but has no springs or works, but the unique thing about it is that it finds and records its own time and there is no need of resetting or correcting it. This horological freak was purchased by Jones, Linick & Schaefer direct from its inventor, a Columbus man, who has worked on the clock for eighteen years to bring it to perfection, and who hopes to revolutionize the clock business with his weird instrument.

John E. Maple, of the Northwestern Film Company, Sheridan, Wyo., was in Chicago last week on his return from New York, conferring with Harry Weiss on the sale of the United States rights for the new feature recently completed by his company.

J. B. Howard has enlarged his Isis Theatre, so that it now has a capacity of eight hundred seats. It formerly was a three hundred seat house. Among the improvements are a new front and balcony, a new pipe organ and a new motor generator.

Superior Screen Service, Inc., has purchased the state rights for Northern Illinois and Northern Indiana on "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland, the feature picture being handled by the Sunrise Picture Corporation, of New York City. Harry Weiss, of Superior, reports that "Madonnas and Men" went over so big at the Bijou Dream on State Street, that it has been held over for an additional week starting May 8th, at that house.

Rochester, Indiana, is to have a handsome new moving picture theatre, according to Clyde Wilson, owner of the Paramount Theatre there. He states that he will shortly start construction on an eight-hundred-seat house.

Sam Lutz on May 1st took possession of the Lyceum Theatre, at 39th and Cottage Grove Avenue, which he purchased from Jake Levine.

H. L. Hendricks has purchased the Isis Theatre, at Kewanna, Indiana, and plans to thoroughly renovate it and put in extensive improvements which will make it a modern and up-to-date house in every respect. When it is reopened it will be known as the Kewanna Theatre.

Norman Field, general manager of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has just appointed Jack Hunt assistant to Star Walsh, manager of the Rialto theatre.

John J. Herziger, of Menasha, Wisconsin, has just had a fifteen thousand dollar Barton organ installed in his Orpheum theatre, which has a seating capacity of six hundred. Dan Barton, of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, who personally supervised the installation, states that he believes this is the highest priced pipe organ in a theatre of this size in the country. It was necessary for Mr. Herziger to build a twenty-eight-foot addition in the rear of his theatre to provide a place for the big instrument. George Weiss, a Chicago organist, has been engaged to play the new organ.

Six thousand persons were at the Chicago motion picture machine operators' ball at the Arena May 5th, when Charlotte Stevens was announced as winner of the Chicago Journal's beauty contest, the prize of which is a job with Christie Comedies. Bryant Washburn and Lew Cody attended. Mr. Washburn and Miss Stevens led the grand march, along with Mr. Cody and Marguerite Lee, who was second choice in the contest. After the grand march were screened the film tests made in the Rothacker studio from which the winner was chosen. Tommy Malloy, T. J. Reynolds and Joseph Sullivan were the union officials in charge of the ball. Proceeds went to the union benevolent fund.

Paul Rutenhouse is planning a six hundred and fifty seat moving picture theatre to be located on Madison street, between Desplaines and Jefferson. Mr. Rutenhouse states that he hopes to have the theatre completed in time to open its doors early in September.

The past week, Universal House Warming Week for the district served by the Chicago Exchange, the entire staff of the office devoted itself to the guests of the company, the out-of-town exhibitor. Those of the exhibitors who were not at the midnight review of Priscilla Dean's latest, "Reputation," given at the Barbee's Loop Theatre with proper musical setting, at midnight Thursday, were given the opportunity of reviewing the production in Universal's new projection room as well as many of the other pictures that are giving Universal satisfaction. During their stay in the city, many of them each day were driven about the city, shown the boulevards, the theatres in various parts of the city. Good cigars were there for those who enjoy the weed, punch for those who were thirsty, flowers for the ladies, and a real good and profitable time for all. A register was kept of the guests, which indicated that a very representative crowd attended, as close to 50 per cent of the theatres in the territory were represented.

Ralph W. Crocker, owner of the Star Theatre, Elgin, is planning for the erection of a two thousand seat moving picture and vaudeville theatre in that city, and has purchased a site on Grove Avenue from I. Cohien at a reported price of fifteen thousand dollars. The property, which is 66 x 187 feet, is adjacent to the Star Theatre. According to Mr. Crocker, he hopes to have the theatre completed by the end of the year. Tentative plans already have been submitted which provide for an absolutely fireproof construction with a white stone front and exceptionally large stage.

Representative McCabe has introduced a bill for regulation of motion picture theatres in the Illinois house, which would prove very detrimental to the theatre interests and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois are taking steps to combat its passage. Sections one and two of the measure are as follows:

1. No person operating a theatre where motion pictures are shown to the general public shall permit persons to sit or stand nearer to the screen on which the motion pictures are shown than thirty feet.

2. No person operating a theatre where motion pictures are shown to the general public shall sell a ticket of admission to such theatre unless at the time of sale there is vacant in such theatre in which the purchaser of the ticket may sit.

Violation of the above sections would be considered a misdemeanor and a fine of not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars is provided for each offense.

The Allied Amusements Association held an interesting meeting at the Morrison Hotel, Friday. After a luncheon the Association was called to order by Peter J. Schaefer, its president, and some constructive legislation proposed. Various committees were appointed to visit Springfield in the interest of anti-censorship activities, to promote harmony among the exhibitors, to take up salary conditions and to bring the lines closer together to Chicago. There were seventy-five theatre managers present and rules were adopted to close the membership and to provide for scrutinizing future candidates for membership. Heretofore, it has been the rule of the Allied to secure as many members as possible. Henceforth, the membership will be limited and only those who can pass the committee investigation will be admitted to enjoy the advantages of the Association. Another Luncheon is planned in June at which time members of the National Motion Picture Industry will be present, Miss Pauline Frederick has also signified her intention of speaking at this meeting.

In furtherance of their established policy of economy, service and courtesy, the Exhibitors Supply, Inc., located at 157 N. Illinois Street, Indianapolis, Indiana, has taken over new spacious quarters at 128 W. Ohio Street. This new location will enable them to render to the exhibitor more efficient service than heretofore. Bob Gumm, manager, reports that April sales have been unusually good and predicts that he will obtain an equal amount of business, if not more, this month.

A trade showing of "The Scarab Ring," starring Alice Joyce, was held at the new Vitagraph projection room on South Wabash Avenue this week and the feature was well thought of by the large number of exhibitors who attended the review.

Plans are being perfected at Famous Players-Lasky headquarters in Chicago for Bill Gilday week, opening June 19th. Mr. Gilday has only been in charge of the Chicago office for a comparatively short time, but already is popular with exhibitors and exchange men and the week named in his honor is sure to be a success.

Manager W. C. Brimmer, of Vitagraph, has added R. E. Bolan, formerly connected with Metro and well known in the Chicago district, to his sales staff. Mr. Bolan will cover the Southwestern Wisconsin territory for Vitagraph.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of Illinois continue to show a healthy growth, fifty new members having been added to the association since the recent convention in Chicago, according to Secretary W. D. Burford, of Aurora.

Music and The Theatre

Picture Music and the Ohio Music Teachers

By Charles D. Isaacson

I HAVE just returned from the Ohio Music Teachers' Convention, held in Dayton. There were several hundred delegates from the different cities of the State, and within the progressive city, practically everybody who amounted to anything was present at some session or other.

I was one of the speakers, and during my stay in Dayton, I held forth in some ten or more meetings, discussing music in some form or other.

One of the subjects set down for me to give expression to was this: "The Matter of Music in the Picture Theatres;" and from what I have been told, the promise of somebody being able to impart some information on picture music brought to the convention the largest advance interest of any special idea. This is what I have been told by the backers of the meetings, it is what many important delegates told me personally—that they came chiefly to learn about picture music!

In fact, there is no question about the attitude of musicians today. The biggest individual matter of interest to them is motion pictures. The most conservative, dyed in the wool hang-backers are beginning to wake up to the fact that the more they know about picture opportunities, the technique of film needs, the kind of music which is desired and how it ought to be played—the more they are going to make of their own possibilities. The questions that were asked me! The kind of suggestions which were brought to me—the film managers and musicians would have been tickled to have heard it all.

It strikes me that the attitude of the Ohio Music Teachers' Convention was so significant that I can do no better than write of what I learned in Dayton. The headquarters of the delegates was at the Westminster Church and the Miami Hotel, but the special meeting where the motion picture speech occurred was in the Auditorium theatre. When I tell you that such a distinguished composer and musician as Edgar Stillman Kelley was present, those of you who know him, will be duly impressed. For those who don't know Mr. Kelley, I might say that he is considered one of America's leading composers, the man who created the music for Ben Hur, who has written many operas and light operas; he has been professor of music at Yale and at the Cincinnati Conservatory. . . . Mr. Kelley was the type of musician who came to the convention and listened intently and discussed picture music. He was one of those who declared that he came especially to learn about picture music!

The Auditorium theatre, which is the leading motion picture house, impressed me as being one of the most beautiful I have seen anywhere; large, comfortable seats, fine stage, good screen. Back stage it is thoroughly equipped with every modern device for lighting and sceneshifting. I understand that a fine orchestra plays nightly.

I found the house almost filled when I stepped upon the stage. Mrs. Frances Eliot Clark, director of the Educational Department of the Victor Talking Machine Company, had just finished an admirable address upon the work of developing the child as a musical entity.

As I launched upon my subject, literally the audience were on the edge of their seats, eager for the facts. And I am not able to say that it was due in any way to the style of my delivery, but the simple, perfect truth that I had facts to bring them on the subject which so thoroughly has aroused their curiosity and desires for more information.

My talk covered in a general way the information I have been seeking to propound through these columns: to wit, that the best musicians can find no finer outfit for their genius than the film theatre, but that no musician can hope to succeed unless he knows the special technique of the screen. I urged all to get acquainted, to throw off their false dignity to learn—to study hard. That music has a meaning in its every note—that certain phrases can be used to interpret, accentuate and give atmosphere to any film episode—this is the basic principle, I declared, of an understanding of motion picture scoring.

I told of the birth of the Association of Motion Picture Musical Interests and of the fine interest in its opportunities, of the growth of membership in such a short time—and would you believe it, practically everyone present asked if he or she might join.

The newspaper writers who talked with me, seemed to ignore almost everything I had done, excepting the film address. That's what they wanted to get down clearly in the press. All their questions were about music in the film theatre.

During my stay in Dayton I had occasion as I have remarked to speak in several other places than the Auditorium theatre. I addressed the Chamber of Commerce, including an audience of the biggest business men of the west—and they were delighted to hear of the film theatres which are "raising taste" by giving good music, in opposition to the other theatres which are "degrading taste" by giving cheap entertainment. At the home of John C. Patterson (head of the National Cash Register, Dayton's biggest industry), I was quizzed by Mr. Patterson himself, and his big executives chiefly about the music for pictures! The great man, a multi-millionaire, wanted to know how he could make his picture shows for the employees better through picture addition, and what he could do to arouse Dayton and Ohio to a furtherance of good picture music! At the Press Club the same question came up. It seemed as if I could not more than get started upon any other proposition before the Motion Picture Music Association peeped in. I felt like an author who had made a success with a certain story and thenceforward anything else he wrote had to be the same or almost the same as his winning attempt. When I spoke with the school-children, one of the youngsters of the orchestra asked—yes, about motion picture music.

Mr. Harry Wilson Proctor, the President of the Ohio Music Teachers' Association and the director of the Proctor School of Music, introduced me to the city, and was himself the authority for the information that the motion picture topic had brought a large percentage of the delegates to the meetings. Mr. Proctor is a live-wire and I hereby give freely the hint that some wise motion picture house or business will sign him up in some musical capacity. To Mr. Proctor I repeat what I said to him personally: Jump in and advertise a motion picture department, where young musicians can get the drift of the film needs in advance.

There was a Miss Adelaide O'Brien, who was managing secretary of affairs, who is the "man behind the gun" in the civic concerts, and who went all over the city of Dayton proclaiming the wonders of music in the picture theatres.

There was the highly intellectual and cultured Mrs. H. E. Talbott, one of the wealthiest women in the West, the head of the great aeroplane factories, who herself expressed a desire to aid in the motion picture development of the Dayton Idea. . . . Of the Dayton Idea I shall write some day. It ought to be in every city, and if Mrs. Talbott succeeds in making her film presentations acceptable, I shall take much pleasure in telling my readers of the News all about it. I never was so thrilled in my life as I was when Mrs. Talbott's school-children sang and played their patriotic pageant, or when the little boys and girls presented their remarkable orchestra. I told the Dayton business men that the Dayton Idea could make Dayton famous as an art and patriotic center, and I'm going to tell it to them again.

There was Mr. James MacMillen, the backer

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Love Special—

Splendid cast, good scenic effects and pleasing story. (West.)

Consensus of opinion seems to be that this is Reid's best picture. Pleased everyone. (Middle West.)

Some way this went only fair. Business was average for a Reid picture. (West.)

Picture well liked and drew good attendance. (Middle West.)

The Home Stretch—

A pleasing little picture. Business about average. (East.)

Good picture to our usual capacity business. (West.)

Clever, clean and distinctly funny. Made quite a hit with my patrons and business was excellent. (South.)

What Every Woman Knows—

A fair picture. It disappointed many, however, who came, attracted by the combined names of Barrie and De Mille and went away disappointed at the lack of action and general slowness. On the other hand it charmed an equal number. Business was brisk. (East.)

Nice picture but quiet to interest many. Hardly a normal business. (East.)

As entertainment a good picture but failed to draw for me. (West.)

Public opinion divided. Well directed and fairly good picture but has no special punch to create more than passing comment. (West.)

The City of Silent Men—

Splendid picture which gave Thomas Meighan, who is a favorite of our patrons, excellent opportunities to show his ability as an emotional actor. Played to big business. (Middle West.)

They seemed to like this one and it brought good patronage. (West.)

Record-breaking crowds. Equalled our biggest specials in drawing power. (East.)

The Frontier of the Stars—

Star is popular; fair business. Picture pleased.

Dollar a Year Man—

Arbuckle good drawing card but vehicle is very poor. Public greatly disappointed. (West.)

Good picture to good business for week run. (West.)

Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Dollar a Year Man" and Larry Semon in "The Rent Collector." Good combination and one that pleased, although attendance dropped. Arbuckle picture not as well liked as previous releases. (Middle West.)

The Gilded Lily—

Went over big for full week. (South.)

Going fine in its third week. (West.)

Proxies—

This feature proved one of the best business getters of the year and was generally liked by our patrons. (Middle West.)

Faith Healer—

As good as "Miracle Man." Created lots of talk around town and did good business considering the beautiful weather, housecleaning and moving season. (East.)

Forbidden Fruit—

Excellent picture and attendance almost a record-breaker. Patrons liked picture, much desirable comment heard. Opens second week May 8. (Middle West.)

What's Worth While—

Attracted fair business only. Audience did not enthuse over production. (East.)

Straight Is the Way—

Bully picture but drew worst box office receipts that our house has ever known. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Jim, the Penman—

Good picture which played to excellent business for week. (Middle West.)

The Old Swimmin' Hole—

The picture was shown at an opportune time, during Boys' Week, and it played to a capacity house for seven days. (Middle West.)

Charles Ray in a beloved classic—an irresistible combination. Business excellent throughout week. (South.)

The Passion Flower—

Went over fair but drew big business on account of the star. (West.)

Capacity business, which is usually the rule with a Norma Talmadge production. (East.)

Man, Woman, Marriage—

A good, strong picture which carries an appeal with it. Plenty of opportunities for exploitation. A good house all week. (Middle West.)

The Devil's Garden—

Just a fair picture which deals with a time-worn subject. "The Reckless Sex," a comedy, saved the week at my house. (Middle West.)

Sky Pilot—

Good average picture. Did as much business as we expected with it. (East.)

Not Guilty—

Only fair picture and not an exceptional box office bet. (West.)

Lessons in Love—

We regarded this as an excellent picture, but adverse newspaper criticisms had some effect on attendance, although we played to good business for week. (Middle West.)

METRO

The Offshore Pirate—

Went over big and seemed to please them all. (West.)

A mediocre picture that didn't pull very well. (East.)

Four Horsemen—

Held over for fourth week. Picture at $2 scale has played to capacity nights and good matinees. (East.)

Hard Luck—

Perhaps Buster Keaton's best effort. Good clean, snappy, high-class production. Keaton becoming great public favorite. (West.)

Extravagance—

A fair picture to fair business. (East.)

Viola Dana in "Puppets of Fate" and Buster Keaton in "Hard Luck." Two popular stars that drew well. Pictures up to standard and of type that pleased.

VITAGRAPH

Black Beauty—

Wonderful picture for the class who like this type of stuff. (West.)

Heart of Maryland—

Business not as good as we expected. War dramas seem to be thoroughly taboo. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Nut—

This picture was in no way extraordinary, but it played to big business because of the anniversary that surrounded it and the extra advertising. (East.)

Through the Back Door—

Starts out big. Picture booked for an indefinite run. (West.)

Just Out of College—

Jack Pickford not particularly popular. Business just fair. (South.)

Godless Men—

So bad that it was taken off after one day and "Lying Lips" substituted. (East.)

REALART

The House That Jazz Built—

Went over well. Business very good, and Wanda Hawley is building up quite a gallery of fans. (South.)

Wanda Hawley is not a box office attraction but picture pleased. (East.)

The Little Fool—

Our patrons called this a good picture and business was good. (West.)

Plaything of Broadway—

Good picture, well cast and directed. Public well pleased. (West.)

All Soul's Eve—

Rather weak as a drawing card. A good picture, but attractive only to a selective few. Just a fair house for the week. (Middle West.)

FOX

Over the Hill—

Going big. Picture booked for an indefinite run. (West.)

Hands Up—

Tom Mix seems to be a good box office star at this house. Business good. Picture full of pep. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Reputation—

Shows here on its first release and went over big. An alluring title which attracts interest. A full house all week. (Middle West.)

Great box office attraction. Splendid picture, although incredulous in spots. Fair business. (East.)

The Big Adventure—

Poor picture which did not have much pulling power. Played to poor business. (Middle West.)

Did more than well for us and pleased. (West.)

Dangerous Moments—

We call this a good picture and

Lobby decorations for "The Gilded Lily" by the Alhambra theatre, Utica, N. Y.

Utica Theatre Gives Picture Four Weeks Billing

The Alhambra theatre, Utica, is billing its engagement of "The Gilded Lily" four weeks in advance, especially with a lobby display shown by the accompanying cut.

Fred Hathaway, publicity director for the theatre and Harry C. Swift, Paramount exploiteer, are in charge of the campaign.

Swift suggested the four-weeks lobby display, ignoring for the time all other pictures. The management set Hathaway to work to design and execute the lobby. He used stock Paramount accessories going to extra expense only for Japanese lanterns. When patrons enter the theatre during the first weeks of May they will run into four life-size cut-outs of Miss Murray, scattered about the lobby. Two large posters on the wall announce the run of the pictures. The management claims that the under-line has already focussed attention of the picture of May 21, and at the same time has not interfered with the interim attractions.

Janisch Tries the "Tag" Stunt with A-1 Results

A new angle of the tag stunt was tried by A. C. Janisch, advertising director of the Finkelstein and Ruben theatres with great success in the exploitation of "Outside the Law" at the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, the past week.

Mr. Janisch had five thousand tags which were an almost exact duplication of the official police tag, printed up and tied to the steering wheels of autos in the downtown district. On one side the cards read, "Are you sure you are not Outside the Law. Always make sure before parking your car." On the reverse the card read, "See Priscilla Dean in 'Outside the Law' at the New Lyric Starting Saturday, April 23."

Rigid traffic and parking rules are now in effect in Minneapolis and the police daily tag many machines for violating rules. Consequently every driver was sure to read a card on his wheel. The police were inclined to be a little sore about this stunt and being unable to find the advertising director gave the New Lyric manager fifteen minutes to get the tags off the streets. The manager was unable to find the man distributing the tags and so the police department "O-k'd" the stunt finally and it was put over with satisfaction to all. Diplomatic handling of the stunt restored the good humor of the police department who feared it would encourage drivers to ignore real police summons as made by official tags.

Much comment was heard on this stunt and the picture went over in big style. The only other exploitation "Outside the Law" received was the regular newspaper advertising and special stories and one thousand two sheets sniped in good locations.

Hyman Gives Scenic Reel Special Presentation

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, gave one of his recent scenic films, "Water Trails," unusual presentation.

"Seated behind the transparent screen, and lighted from the side with a small white baby spot, the Brooklyn Mark Strand's pianist played 'Rustle of Spring', by Rinding.

"All the titles were removed and scene followed scene with only the piano to intrepret the narrative.

"This presentation was not without its humorous side, for as the title of the scenic explains, it is about waterways in all parts of the world. Many shots are of beautiful waterfalls and at times it appeared that the pianist might be swept from his stool at the piano by the flood of rushing waters."

Cobe of Lawrence Has a "Treasure Hunt"

A. J. Cobe, manager of the Rialto theatre, Lawrence, Mass., recently used the "buried treasure" stunt to exploit his engagement of "Buried Treasure."

Signs were placed in various parts of Lawrence which read: "Buried Treasure lies within 20 feet of this spot" and within the prescribed radius Mr. Cobe buried a little box containing necklaces, rings, etc. In all five "buried treasures" were planted and the announcement was made that "finders were keepers." Every kid in Lawrence borrowed some sort of a garden tool and started digging for the "buried treasure." Of course the newspapers gave Mr. Cobe plenty of publicity on the stunt and the word of mouth advertising that the children produced more than justified the expense incurred.

A decidedly artistic and effective lobby display of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," suggested by a scene in the picture, the work of the California theatre, San Diego, Cal.

Olver Pulls Steeple Jack Stunt Again

An exploitation man who has once been a steeplejack has several decided advantages over his fellow picture publicists. Such a man is Hal Olver, Goldwyn's exploitation representative in the Pittsburg, Buffalo and Cleveland territory.

In exploiting the week's showing of "What Happened to Rosa," at the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, O., he arranged with H. C. Horater, manager of the house, to perform a special stunt in person in advance of the showing. From in front of the Waldorf Hotel, at Summit street and Madison avenue, at three o'clock of the Saturday preceding the first showing, he had himself swung up to a wire stretched from the top of the hotel to a building on the opposite side of the street and there, suspended head down from the wire, he released himself from the straightjacket in which he was encased. He wore a black mask. Banners were unfurled advertising the showing of the picture at the Alhambra.

The newspapers gave liberal space to the stunt in advance, simply mentioning the fact that such a stunt would be pulled by the Man in the Mask, an ex-steeplejack who, during the war, climbed up and down the Times building in New York, in the glare of searchlights, and released himself from a straightjacket, suspended head down, from the Brooklyn bridge. The Toledo News-Bee gave the stunt a first page position; the Blade ran it inside but gave it a half column of space including a photo showing the Man in the Mask climbing up the Times building; the Times gave the advance story a quarter of a column.

Chaplin Imitators Work for "The Kid" at Baltimore

"The Kid" was exploited in Baltimore at the Garden theatre, by Louis A. DeHoff and A. Fred. Warner to the delight of thousands of people and the boosting of the theatre's proceeds.

A Charlie Chaplin test, with first, second and third prizes, was run. Each imitator walked across the stage and the applause of the audience was the sole judge of the success of the mimic. Then the first prize winner was employed to accompany a twin Jackie Coogan on advertising jaunts through the shopping district.

Striking Lobby Display for "Passion"

Striking results in a lobby display for "Passion" were achieved by J. D. Kessler, manager of the Strand theatre in Canton, O. recently.

Mr. Kessler made arches for the entrance out of beaver board. These boards were boxed together with wire screening and then paint was applied to give the arches the appearance of French marble. This effect was produced by wiping streaks on the wire to produce the shadow effects. Through the center of this boxed arch, colored lights were installed.

"Lottery Man" stunt pulled by the Regent theatre, Rome, N. Y.

Stage setting used by William Goldman, managing director of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, for his showing of "The Love Special"

Goldman, Genius at Tieing Up with Local Events

"Say It With Flowers" is the slogan of the National Floral Association of St. Louis. From this slogan William Goldman, managing director of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, conceived an idea of staging a "Say It With Flowers" week with the local florists cooperating in floral decorations for the theatre. The plan met with favor and in return for what the florists agreed to do staged a presentation number dedicated to flowers.

The florists turned the theatre into a literal "bower of flowers," lining the entire institution with plants, shrubs and fresh cut flowers of every description. The display occupied space all the way from the canopy to the foots. Attendants were on hand at all times, ready to explain anything at all about the plants or the proper manner of caring for them. The feature of the display was a group of ten baskets of American Beauty roses, placed in the center of the lobby. Each basket contained fifty blossoms.

All the ushers were supplied daily with fresh corsages and at the matinee performances ladies were given carnations. In helping to advertise the event every florists' wagon and automobile in the city carried large banners, while cards were inserted in each box of flowers sold.

In return for all this Mr. Goldman produced a presentation in which the national song of the florists was featured, Grant Kimbell, tenor, singing it to open the offering. Kimbell then introduced seven dancing girls, each representing a flower and making her entrance via a trap elevator. While this number was on the huge fans of the Missouri circulated perfume through the auditorium to create a novelty atmosphere.

In this way both the Missouri and the florists derived much satisfaction and exhibitors everywhere are assured that this tie-up will prove one of the best they can possibly arrange.

Corning Theatre Pulls Cinderella's Slipper Stunt

Prince Charming's stunt with Cinderella's slipper was appropriated by Leon J. Bamberger, Paramount exploiteer in a tie-up with a shoe store at Eau Claire, Wis., for "The Gilded Lily." The store advertised that a pair of slippers—"Mae Murray's favorite last"—would be given away Saturday evening between 7 and 9 p. m. to the first lady to try them on and making the fit.

Bamberger tied up the little movie books by inducing the Eau Claire Book and Stationery Co. to order a batch, including 50 of Miss Murray, which figured in a window display. A cut-out of the star taken from a 24-sheet poster dominated the window.

One of Eau Claire's leading jewelry stores linked up their window with the picture. They displayed a cut-out of Miss Murray taken from a 3-sheet. The figure wore a diamond brooch on the breast, necklaces around the neck and ankle—a suggestion from the stills. A vanity case was suspended from the hand. Still another tie-up was arranged with one of the largest department stores which used cut-outs from a six and one-sheets.

Goldman Does Things for "The Devil"

William Goldman, manager of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, exploited "The Devil" in a new and novel manner and was rewarded at the box office in a degree correspondingly gratifying.

Washington University, one of the leading colleges in this country, is located in St. Louis. Washington U. devotes considerable portions of its curriculum to art, especially drawing and painting. So Goldman made this offer to the students of the Art School of Washington. The offer was advertised in the newspapers and was sent directly to the school.

Three cash prizes of $50, $25, and $15 were to be awarded to the three students of the university who composed the best painted posters to be used in connection with the advertising of "The Devil." Arrangements were made for a review of the picture, which was attended by almost four hundred art students. This was all executed a week before the regular showing of the picture. On the night when "The Devil" was first shown, the lobby of the Missouri was decorated with more than 125 posters, ranging in size from one square foot to four square feet, all of which had been submitted by the artists.

The names of the winners were announced in the newspapers and all St. Louis turned out to witness the productions of art on the part of the embryo artists. Goldman had all his ushers in the red apparel of Lucifer and presented a prologue showing the devil at the gates of hell.

Kantner Dresses Up Lobby for "The Gilded Lily"

The staid lobby of the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, was dressed up for the first time by Oscar Kanter, Paramount exploiteer, for the run of "The Gilded Lily." The novelty stimulated interest in both the picture and the theatre perceptibly. Practically the only extra expense was a lattice built across the top frame of the lobby. White lilies were interwoven through the woodwork. Mr. Kantner carefully chose his posters, cut-outs to harmonize with the gold and white scheme of the display.

This is the way Frank Rembrusch's Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., decorated the lobby for the showing of "The Gilded Lily"

Schmidt's Campaign for "Love Madness"

Manager George B. Schmidt of the Alamo No. 2 theatre, Atlanta, who is one of the livest exhibitors in the southeast, is a great believer in effective, but inexpensive exploitation.

A case in point is the recent three day engagemnt of "Love Madness" at the Alamo No. 2. The usual lobby-frames with stills and photographs lined the sides of the lobby—but in the center, was a huge book—a clever imitation of a dog-eared history book that has passed through several grades of schools and been roughly handled by young seekers after knowledge.

In everything except size, the book was perfect. On pale green leaves, the questions had been written in black, and they read:

"What caused the Trojan war?

"What caused Abelard to lose his life?

"What caused Antony to lose his empire?"

There were several other questions along the same line, and at the foot of the book in flaming scarlet letters, the answer to these questions read "Love Madness!"

The picture played a three day engagement to excellent business, and the house-employees spoke of the number of people who, passing the theatre, stopped to read the questions, and their flaming answer, then went in to see the picture.

Simple, inexpensive—but effective.

Base Ball Film Goes Big at Toledo

Front page newspaper space and something to "yell" about was the result of an idea that Harold F. Wendt, publicity director for the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O., evolved recently.

Toledo has a baseball club, a member of the American Association league. For the opening game that the Toledo club played, which occurred at Louisville, the Rivoli joined forces with a local newspaper and sent a cameraman to Louisville to shoot a special film showing the contest.

Twenty-four hours later the picture was on the Rivoli screen, while both newspaper and theatre played the event up big in front page and display space.

Framed Film Herald Finds Favor at Washington

The reliable novelty herald often described and made by making a cut-out the size of the aperture plate on a cardboard throwaway over which is arranged a piece of film framed over the opening has been successfully employed by Sidney B. Lust, of the Leader theatre, Washington, D. C., in exploiting the engagement of "Western Pep." The bit of film used was a foreground shot of the star of the picture, William Fairbanks.

Above the aperture was a sentence or so explaining what the film was, and some statistics relative to how much a film is magnified on the screen.

Fashion Show Idea Invades Atlanta

Practically the first Fashion Show ever staged in Atlanta as exploitation for a motion picture, was staged by Frank Hammond, of the Rialto theatre, as exploitation for "Skirts."

On Sunday before the picture opened, the papers carried half page ads, in the picture, with generous reading, paying due attention to the fact that there would be a "bathing girl revue" in connection with the showing of the picture. The tie-up by which this revue was given, was with one of the smartest shops in town, and this store carried a line with it's usual full-page Sunday ad, about the beautiful new bathing suits, odd, distinctive, and attractive, that would be worn by the "Six Sunshine Widows" at the Rialto next week.

Also, throughout the second floor of this establishment, were large framed stills from the picture, portraits of various girls and plenty of similar press matter. One window—the center, and choicest of the three—was given up to a display of bathing suits, with pictures from "Skirts" and date cards.

The Rialto is located on a corner, and has a marquee on two streets. So, on top of each was a line of six cut-outs in the most daring suits imaginable, framed against a back-ground of painted sky and ocean. These were in a sort of built-in-box, that gave the appearance of the stage-opening of a theatre. They were backed up by brilliant lights which made them the cynosure of all eyes, during the evening, when these lights were on.

The success of the fashion show for both the theatre and the women's wear shop was phenominal. Mr. Hammond is planning to present a similar event twice each year.

Kelly Builds Excellent Lobby Setting

J. W. Kelly, manager of the Wizard theatre, York, Pa., planned and carried out a most unique and striking lobby display for the showing of "Out of the Storm," It looked quite complicated and expensive, but was in reality simple and comparatively inexpensive.

In the centre of the lobby was a large steamship, up-ending at an angle of forty-five degrees, and sinking beneath the waves. The steamship was cut out of beaverboard, with painted windows and portholes, while the ocean waves had been painted on beaverboard and then cut out.

At the right side of the lobby entrance was a lighthouse made of painted canvas and bearing the title of the photoplay and the date of showing. At the top of the lighthouse was placed a small spotlight with rays playing through a slit, cut through the canvas and shining full upon a large painted sign, "Goldwyn Week," above the sinking ship.

From the left end of this sign a jagged piece of cardboard painted white and representing a shaft of lightning extended down between the two funnels of the sinking steamship.

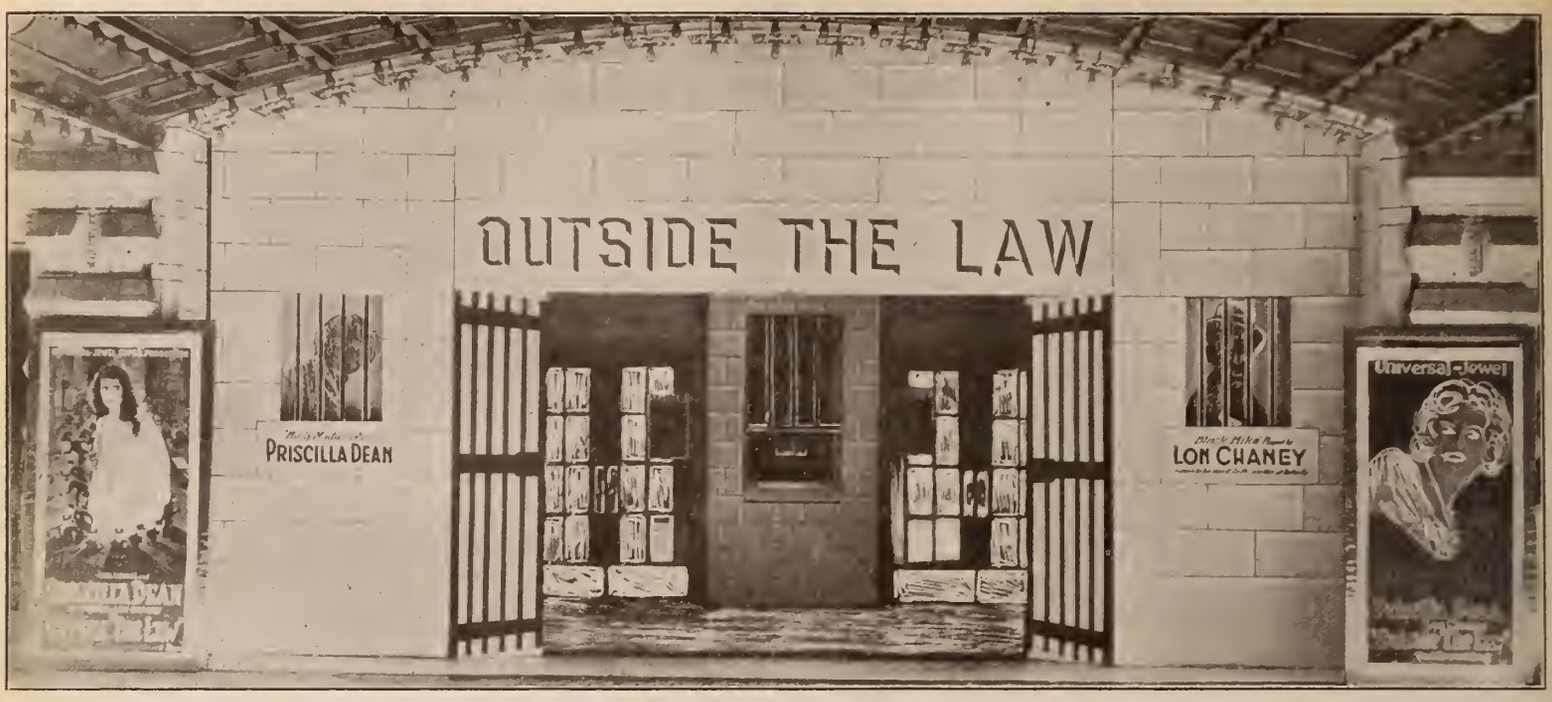
At night, with the lobby lighted only by the spotlight in the top of the lighthouse, this display was most effective. It not only drew crowds to the lobby, but gripped them so strongly that they trooped to the box office and bought tickets to see "Out of the Storm."

Mr. Kelly has tried all forms of exploitation, but has yet to hit on anything that brought him as great results for the amount expended as the "Out of the Storm" display.

Another "Tin Can" Show Successful

The now famous "tin can show" record is again boosted by an account of the fifth annual event which R. E. Falkinburg, manager of the Majestic theatre, Lexington, Neb., has recently put over.

Mr. Falkinburg garnered a pile of cans that required four big hayracks for transportation to the village dump.



For the Majestic can show, each child was required to bring fifteen cans strung on a wire in order to be furnished with a ticket for a special show. Some extras were also included this year, Mr. Falkinburg cooperating with local merchants in his clean-up day stunt. Each child that brought in a string of cans was presented with a ticket that was good for an ice cream cone at a local ice cream store. Other tickets were given away that called for big balloons donated by a drug store. The Lexington Woman's Club offered six cash prizes for the children bringing the greatest number of cans. The winner of the first prize delivered 136, receiving as a reward, $1.00.

All of Lexington was interested in the tin can show and the Majestic added to its already fine record of doing its part in civic matters. Mr. Falkinburg is president of the Chamber of Commerce besides holding other offices in organizations devoted to welfare of the city, and while there is but little financial reward in a direct way for his labors he feels sure that his interest and energy expended for the good of Lexington pays him big returns in the conduct of his theatre.

This is the fifth year that Mr. Falkinburg has staged a "tin can show," and each event has been more successful than the previous one. The kids now look forward to the show with much interest.

Schmidt's Stunts for "Half-a-Chance"

Atlanta Exploitation Is Novel and Attention Compelling

IT needed only the pounding of the surf and an occasional white-capped wave breaking on the beach to complete the realism of the "desert island" which occupied the place of honor in the lobby-display at the Alamo No. 2 theatre, Atlanta, when Manager George Schmidt played "Half-a-Chance" a few days ago.

There was barely room on each side of the "desert island" for people to enter, or leave the theatre. Small planks drawn around the "island" kept the sand from escaping—and it was sand that was that peculiar, snowy white of ocean beaches, so seldom found in inland cities. As a background to the "island" a very good painting represented the ocean rolling away to meet the horizon-line, tiny, puffy white clouds sliding across a deep, tropical-blue sky, with here and there a sea-gull or two. The painting was one of the best parts of the entire lobby.

The wreck of an ocean steamer could be seen far out at sea, and, on the beach, where the hero had been washed up, were the tracks of a bare-footed man, staggering drunkenly, as if exhausted from his swim. Beside his tracks, were the tracks of the faithful little black dog, cast up with the hero on the desert island. The man's track lead across the little beach and "off-stage," while a small, stuffed black dog, one ear cocked up enquiringly, was effectively posed, with his face towards the place where the tracks ended, as if awaiting the return of his beloved master.

At the left of the "island" was an old, battered, worn trunk, half open, out of which spilled law books as battered and hard-worn as the trunk as in "Half-a-Chance."

Down stage, two or three other law-books had been thrown carelessly.

At the right, twelve broken sticks had been set up in the sand, and over them was a sign reading "Here are the twelve jurors." Over the little dog was a sign reading, "And here is the judge." On the trunk, over the pile of books, was a sign which read, "And the accused sits here." Down-stage, was another, and larger sign reading, "And what was the verdict?"

At the back, fastened to the background of sea and sky, was a small sign reading "He had only 'Half-a-Chance'" and across from this, was another little sign reading, "Did he win?"

The entire desert island was an exact scene, lifted bodily from the picture itself, and the little teaser signs were sufficient to arouse the curiosity of any passer-by and make him wonder what it was all about. "At certain hours during the afternoon and evening, a man—the shipwrecked hero of 'Half-a-Chance,' supposedly—took his place on the Desert Island. He would stand, gazing off towards the horizon, in search of a ship; disappointed, he returned to write aimlessly in the sand, with a pointed stick, or to turn once more to his books.

He was ragged, bare-footed, the remnants of his trousers held up with a bit of ships' rope knotted about his middle. His shirt was just a rag wrapped about him, he wore four days growth of heavy stubble on his chin, and his hair was long and matted.

He was the very picture of a rum-soaked, degenerate—the sort of man who was cast up on the desert island, in the story, and left to work out his own redemption there.

Mr. Schmidt haunted the police-courts until, one day, he saw a man being discharged, following a ten days sentence on a "drunk and disorderly" charge. The man was haggard, his hair long, his beard unkempt—in short, with only the ragged sea-water drenched clothes as "make-up" he was exactly the type Mr. Schmidt wanted. And he certainly added the last picturesque touch to one of the most interesting lobby-fronts that an Atlanta theatre has seen in a long time.

Carman Theatre, Philadelphia, Builds Fine Lobby Display

As exploitation for the showing of "Partners of the Tide," the Carman theatre, Philadelphia, constructed a miniature lighthouse at the corner of the theatre.

As may be seen from the illustration it has been given very realistic treatment with provision for a flashlight on the top. In addition to the lighthouse, for their outside display, they had a man attired in a diving outfit in the vicinity of the theatre. Together these two features proved to be unusually worthy exploitation ideas and succeeded in helping to draw large crowds to the theatre.

In addition to the outside exploitation the lobby of the theatre was also decorated with very appropriate articles of sea life. In such a large city a display of such articles as are seen in the photograph proved to be of great interest to patrons of the theatre, and aided materially in creating a genuine sea atmosphere for the picture.

Here Is a New Ballyhoo Exploitation Idea

In working out an exploitation stunt for the showing of "The Magic Cup" Harold F. Wendt publicity director of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O., proved conclusively that curiosity will get the better of most everyone.

Two days before the opening of the above mentioned picture, a most unusual looking individual was seen wending his way about Toledo's main thorofare. At the intersection of the most traveled streets this character in his artist's smock, tam and flowing windsor tie—and other necessary clothing, would suddenly stop, set up his easel, arrange his drawing materials and camp stool and become deeply interested in painting some nearby building or statue. Believing all was well on the Potomac—or Maumee, as it happened to be, the police did not try to stop the man in his work, despite the fact that large crowds, in many instances several hundred, packed themselves around the artist. Traffic was tied up, and as the people looked at the mass of lines and colors on the card, which were apparently meaningless, the bluecoat became most anxious. That the artist was working along futuristic lines—or some such thing—was the common belief, and as they shoved and crowded about the artist, they awaited breathlessly for the final stroke which would complete the work and solve the mystery. But the crowds were really most considerate, at that, and held open the range of vision to the building or other object being drawn.

But just about that time said artist would whip from under his drawing a card with the inscription—See Constance Binney in The Magic Cup next week at the Rivoli—and a loud round of laughter was enjoyed by the entire gathering. They admitted that the man was clever.

Then the artist would pick up his utensils and depart for another busy spot—many times out in the street and much to the added worries of the entire Toledo police force.

But all this time Wendt sat back at ease in his office at the theatre, enjoying the fact that the day previous he had obtained the privilege of the Chief of Police to stage the stunt. The second day of the stunt was not so pleasant for the artist. The cops were all wise to the fact that he was a stuntster and hounded him from corner to corner, much to the amusement of the citizens who had enjoyed a laugh at their own expense.

Here is a stunt which any exhibitor may try for any picture at a nominal cost.

"Powder Puff" Ball Team As Exploitation

To quote from "Lighnin'" "Peoria is a town." To quote the motion picture managers of the city, it is a town with "2,000 too many seats." Consequently, the race for business is a hot one, with Dee Robinson's theatres, the Madison, Apollo, Princess, etc., among the leaders in exploitation.

Peoria exploitation as far as the Robinson theatres goes, tries hard to link up with local affairs and often times is successful.

Recently Benj. H. Serkowich, director of publicity for the Robinson houses, conceived a stunt that tied up with the opening of the baseball season in Peoria, and got the theatres a lot of publicity both in the papers and by direct contact with the public.

When Peoria's Three-Eye League ball club opened the season last week, Mr. Serkowich was a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Fans Association Publicity Committee. His contribution was the origination of the idea of a "Powder Puff League" made up of Peoria's prettiest girls, and a ball game on one of Peoria's busiest downtown corners, Saturday noon. He pulled the stunt and enthusiasm for baseball in Peoria took a big jump.

Over 15,000 persons watched his "league" play. The chief of police wouldn't let him block traffic, so some one turned in a fire alarm, and for an hour the fire wagons blocked the streets, while the game went on. Movies were taken of the stunt, and will be shown at the Madison and a "prologue" for this film will be provided by the "Powder Puff League Girls," who will do a singing and dancing novelty act preceding the film, which incidentally, shows thousands of faces of Peorians in the crowds watching the game. The newspapers printed columns about the "Powder Puff League," linking it with the originators and their theatres.

The local film, it is suggested, probably will get into the news weeklies and in this suggestion more newspaper space was garnered. Among other publicity stunts that Serkowich has successfully put over is a plan to build up the last night show by permitting dancing in the Madison lobby, and making this theatre Peoria's club house and community center.

To build up matinees, the same orchestra gives a Matinee Mezzanine Floor Musicale, just before the first matinee.

Mr. Serkowich convinced talented young leaders of Peoria's best society that they should have a dramatic league, organized to provide funds for charity, as well as to provide an interesting and entertaining hobby. They did, and now that's where the Madison's talent comes from for prologues, etc., and every time the society folk appear, the Madison does capacity business.

Everything that comes up in a civic way, the Madison is interested in.

Rogers Originates Two More Prologue Numbers

Another of the artistic prologues which E. R. Rogers, manager of the new Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., has presented, is illustrated by the accompanying cut.

The picture for which this presentation number was prepared was "The Faith Healer."

The scene opened with the "faith healer" walking across the stage to a position in the rear of the ground roll in a strong amber flood, with whistling bird effects off stage to represent a Spring afternoon. A boy on crutches approached the "faith healer" who was seated on a prop stump. As the youth came near the man the lights were dimmed down to permit a shaft of light from above to flood them. While the "faith healer" prayed over the lad, a local singer rendered "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

It was an artistic and effective presentation number that found great favor with Tivoli patrons.

"Inside the Cup" Advertisement Spatters Front Page

"The Inside of the Cup" was tied up with the Corning (N. Y.) Evening Leader of May 2 for a red-letter display doubling over the news matter on the front page. Harry L. Royster, Paramount exploiteer for the Buffalo district, made the arrangements.

When the paper was folded in half, the following appeared in box car letters: "Extra Extra Extra. Bank Teller Commits Suicide. Richard Garvin Shoots and Mortally Wounds Preston Parr, then Kills Self." The lower fold gave the hoax away reading: "The Inside of the Cup" at the Regent Theatre Tells the Story. Three Days Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Salter Profits by Tie-up with Clean-up Campaign

A tie-up with the municipal clean-up campaign tripled the business of the Liberty theatre during the run of "The Testing Block." The chief of police had been working frantically to get the citizens to remove rubbish. Arthur Salter, manager of the Liberty, announced a "Tin Can Matinee" of "The Testing Block," offering free admission to children depositing a supply of tin cans and bottles at the theatre door.

The Roswell newspapers backed the philanthropy of the Liberty theatre and gave both the matinee and the picture wide publicity. The kids cleaned their backyards, alleys, and the vacant lots and on the day of the matinee there was a truckful of refuse outside the theatre, and a house full of noisy kids inside.

Fred V. Greene, Paramount exploiteer, arranged tie-ups with music houses and clothing stores for display of posters. Roswell's merchants found Bill Hart's hats a good advertisement for their line of broad-brims.

Plunkett Gives "Bob Hampton" Great Billing

The exploitation campaign for "Bob Hampton of Placer," which Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director of the New York Strand theatre, put over began a full week ahead of the opening. A special trailer stated that real Indians who had appeared in the picture would be a part of an elaborate prologue. In addition, a special lobby frame which showed photographs of the Indian celebrities, as well as a number of poses of Wesley Barry in New York was used.

On Saturday morning, preceding the Sunday on which the feature opened, Mr. Plunkett personally escorted the Indians to the office of Mayor Hylan, where Chief Many-Tail-Feathers presented a letter which he had received from the Mayor of Boston. The Indians wore their brightly-colored regalia and the result was that a large crowd gathered on the steps of the Municipal Building to find out what all the excitement was about.

Mayor Hylan consented to pose on the steps of the building with the Indians and scores of news cameras recorded the incident. A dozen newspaper men were present at the "shooting" and got stories about the Indians, and "Bob Hampton" at the Strand, Wesley Barry and his freckles also proved a good shooting target. As a result considerable newspaper publicity was commandeered by the Mark Strand in the Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning editions.

During all the Indian's jaunts around the city they were carried on the top of a Fifth Avenue bus which carried appropriate signs identifying the passengers and announcing the engagement of the picture at the Strand.

In Sunday's newspapers, the Great Northern Railway which is cooperating with exhibitors in boosting Glacier National Park, took big space to tell of the beauties of the park, and of its ideal recommendations for a summer rendezvous.

Showing the stage setting and characters taking part in the prologue which Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director of the New York Mark Strand theatre, is presenting for "Bob Hampton of Placer"

The nine Indians formed a most picturesque background for the action of Mr. Plunkett's atmospheric prologue which preceded the feature. The Strand Male Quartette was made up as soldiers of the Custer period. First, the Indians, were seen watching a member of the tribe execute the steps of a rather intricate dance. As the Indians leave the stage, Custer's men enter and sing an original musical prologue written by Paul M. Sarazan. The quartette's score ranges all the way from the enumeration of the various kinds of Indians under the leadership of Sitting Bull, the soldiers' thoughts of home, and "The Little Girl Who's Waiting," which ends up in an operatic flash that sends the singing over in good shape. As the quartette exits, the strains of "The Little Girl Who's Waiting" growing fainter, a lone Indian steals into view and searches the horizon. The curtains draw together on the Indian in this position.

Movie Chautauqua Week Nebraska Novelty

A plan which the Tecumseh High School of Tecumseh, Neb., put over last week, in a motion picture chautauqua for a week contains a real idea for small town managers who desire to gain the good-will of a community and at the same time make a few dollars profit.

The school authorities purchased six Paramount pictures from the Omaha exchange to be shown under the auspices of the school.

Superintendent of Schools Gregory had charge of the performances and the showmanship was in the hands of R. C. Gary, Paramount exploiteer. They sold season tickets for $1.40 for six performances, and the house was subscribed out before the series began. It was named "The Paramount-Tecumseh High School Chautauqua," and Superintendent Gregory plans to make it an annual event.

"County Fair" Road Showed in Canada

In presenting "The County Fair" throughout the Dominion of Canada in the combination houses Stephenson Attractions used some novelty exploitation stunts as well as presenting same with a wonderful prologue, genuine horse race on tread mills and an interesting epilogue.

Jockey Kummer, the boy who rode "Man o' War" at Windsor against Sir Barton, was approached and was offered one thousand dollars for a week's engagement at Hamilton, Ont. This was a genuine offer and would have been a real drawing card on account of the wonderful riding he did while in Canada. This story alone got on the front page of all papers throughout Canada.

A special engagement was made with Aviators Jack Lindsay and Ted Dobbins for four weeks for the purpose of giving the picture a real county fair atmosphere, dropping heralds, doing stunts, and dropping passes for the attraction as well as passes for free trips!

A band of fourteen pieces was used made up of returned boys dressed as rubes, giving a parade at noon each day and concert in front of the theatre before each performance.

A prologue that was a complete show in itself was one of the features of the various engagements.

Stermont and Carr tabloid of fifteen people was used, assisted by a band and thirty supers. The stage was set to represent a midway with its bally hoo platforms on each side of the stage, including the wild man, five legged calf, fat woman, snake charmer, back stage. Pop corn machines, wheels in center and slide for life used as the free attraction to draw the attention of the sightseers. The two opposition speilers got into argument as to who had the best attraction on the midway which gave the opportunity of giving a thirty-minute musical and comedy offering.

A genuine race was cut in on the race scene in the picture. A gauze drop was used and as the race scene came on the screen, the picture screen was taken up and three horses are seen tearing across stage on tread mills.

Stewart Putting Over Live Wire Stunts

Above his shown cuts illustrating some of the recent exploitation stunts which G. R. Stewart, manager of the America and Isis theatres, Casper, Wyoming, has put over.

For the engagement of "Hands Off" two men were hired to carry the mysterious looking box shown above about the city. The men would drop the box on the sidewalk ostensibly to rest and a curious crowd would gather around to see what was inside. On the bottom of the box was pasted an ordinary one-sheet on the picture.

On the "Buried Treasure" exploitation illustrated by the above mentioned cut, a local newspaper was persuaded to stage the event in the usual way, announcing prizes of baseball goods and a $5.00 cash prize, not to mention a hundred free tickets for the "treasure hunters." A "pirate" was added for good measure and at an appointed time, "pirate" and hunters proceeded through the main streets on the first leg of the search. Treasures were hidden all over town and the hunt lasted for two hours.

The picture of Mr. Stewart's ballyhoo for "The Little Clown" is self-explanatory.

"Brewster's Millions" Well Advertised at St. Louis

"You have been named one of the heirs to "Brewster's Millions," was the statement which was printed on 10,000 distributed envelopes and which started a novel exploitation campaign at the Majestic theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., under the direction of Charles Raymond, exploitation manager for the St. Louis offices of Paramount.

The announcement was printed on the sealed envelopes which contained a stage-money $1,000 bill. The bill entitled the holder not to a $1,000 but to a 1000 laughs, and so greatly resembled a real paper bill that many were picked up on the streets in all seriousness. Printed also on the envelope was a picture of Fatty Arbuckle casting money to the winds and seemingly enjoying it.

Then for several days prior to the opening of the production at the Majestic, a tie-up was effected with a local truck dealer to the advertising advantage of both parties. A large two-ton truck was loaded was large sacks of supposed money, much of which bulged out at the openings, and in addition to the driver an armed guard was stationed at the rear of the vehicle.

"Cawn Likker" Still Used for Lobby Display at Atlanta

Schmidt Puts Over Great Stunt in Exploiting "The Moonshine Trail"

A RATHER heavy odor of what is variously known, South of the Mason-Dixon, as "Cawn Likker," "mountain dew," "moonshine," or "squirrel-likker," and what the revenue officers speak of as "illicit distilled juice of the corn" wafted on the evening breeze sounds like a pretty good "puller" for an exploitation stunt, and Manager George Schmidt of the Alamo, No. 2 Theatre, Atlanta, proved the efficacy of this stunt when he played "The Moonshine Trail," with some sure-fire exploitation of which the aforesaid odor was a large part.

In the first place, Atlanta, being the capitol of the State of Georgia, every moonshiner captured in the entire state, is tried in Atlanta, and the trial usually brings to the city a silent, but somewhat ominous group of mountaineers, with their worn clothes, heavy boots, and slouch hats making them noticeable and picturesque figures on the streets of the city.

Hard on the heels of the capture and speedy conviction of John Harden, who has ruled the Georgia end of the Blue Ridge Mountains for many years, as "King of the Moonshiners" and whose life-story reads like a "dime-novel," when the streets were filled with the deposed King's friends, and when the people of the city themselves were somewhat aroused over it all, Mr. Schmidt booked his picture, and announced a speedy play-date.

He began his campaign with the usual clever, snappily written "teaser slides," for a week before the play date—which was Friday and Saturday. On Wednesday, a middle-aged moonshiner, clad in the usual "butter-nut" trousers, a much washed, much faded and somewhat soiled blue "hickory" shirt, barefooted, and carrying a "squirrel rifle" slung carelessly in the crook of his arm, appeared on the streets, eyeing the sights with an interested, unfeigned curiosity. He attracted some attention, because only the week before "King John" had been convicted and carried away to begin his twenty years sentence and some of his friends were still in town, muttering threats of rescue.

Across the moonshiner's back was a crudely lettered sign, reading, simply, "The Moonshine Trail."

On Friday, when the special lobby of the Alamo No. 2 was erected, the old moonshiner took his place there, beside the copper-kettle, where he seemed a rather pathetic old man, earning a precarious living with the product of his rocky little farm.

This special lobby was one of the best Mr. Schmidt has designed yet. The feature of it was a 35-gallon copper still, taken by the revenue officers in a raid in the North Georgia mountains, not so very far from King John's domain, and by far the finest they had yet captured. Mr. Schmidt put up a heavy cash bond, in order to get the use of it for the two days, and he promised not to put water in it. That was one of the stipulations made by the revenue officers—so the big still occupied the center of the lobby. At the back, was a crude little mountain cabin, such as are occupied by the mountaineers, and on the floor of the lobby was a thick, heavy carpet of pine needles, leaves and twigs. The old moonshiner sat in his chair watching the "brew," occasionally testing it, and was quite absorbed in his work—as were the crowds of people, who had to be held back by a huge rope stretched around the "set." The aforesaid odor was quite plainly in evidence, and when some interested, and thirsty friend showed his curiosity, Mr. Schmidt grinned and replied, non-committally, that he had promised the revenuers not to put water in the still.

The stunt worked to excellent advantage, but late Saturday afternoon, Mr. Schmidt began to wonder whether it was so good, after all, for the crowd had grown so dense, and so determined in their efforts to "sample" the moonshiner's brew, or at any rate learn more about it, that it was difficult to get into the theatre.

A good deal of attention was given, later, in Mr. Schmidt's story of the stunt, to the man who played the role of the moonshiner, so that this man, romantic and picturesque as his make-up was, proved to be even more interesting without the crepe hair and grease paint—for he was One-Eye Connell, world-famous news-boy, globe-trotter. He has been around the world many times, and is known for his almost uncanny appearance at every prize-fight of any consequence in any part of the world. He is probably one of the greatest authorities on the subject, despite his barely twenty-eight or thirty years. And when it was learned that the famous One-Eye, in town to be present at a prize-fight of less-than-usual-importance, but considerable interest, had consented to "guard" Mr. Schmidt's still, and be a moonshiner, people were even more interested in the lobby.

The whole thing was relatively inexpensive, and it certainly brought in the money, putting this picture, which is very old, and a second- or third-run, over with more punch than the first run theatres in town that week.

Here is Manager Schmidt's lobby display for "The Moonshine Trail" as told in the accompanying story

Novel Exploitation Stunts

"Baby Parade" on Busy Broadway Helps Exploit Abramson Picture

A DOZEN young "mothers" who would do credit to the finest girl show in town invaded Broadway one day last week and startled the Rialto by the fact that each one of the beauties furnished power for a regulation baby carriage in which was seated a real, live, open-eyed youngster.

The pedestrians in the largest city's most congested thoroughfare gave the right of way to the young women and incidentally learned that "Mother Eternal wants to see you at the Casino theatre, Broadway and Thirty-ninth street," this last from a placard held firmly by the various occupants of the carriages.

The "Baby Parade," which was repeated several times last week, was only one of a number of novel publicity stunts which were put into operation to exploit "Mother Eternal" and made payable to the individual to whom the letters were addressed. These checks were mailed out to President Harding and to all of the members of the cabinet in Washington as well as to city and state officials. Others on "Mother Eternal's" mailing list included men in all walks of life. John D. Rockefeller and J. P. Morgan were among those who received checks.

So far, neither Morgan nor Rockefeller have cashed their checks, but many others have. Checks have been cashed in states as far west as Kansas. Many of those who received checks sent "Mother" a personal letter of thanks. All of these letters were extremely interesting.

Among the prominent New Yorkers who wrote to "Mother" was Judge Moses H. Grossman who in deply to "Mother's" letter sent a note of appreciation.

Tony Sarg's New Invention

Noted Illustrator Offers Single Reel Novelty at Criterion in N. Y.

THE first of Tony Sarg's series, entitled "Tony Sarg's Almanac" was presented at the Criterion Theatre, New York, on Sunday, May 9th for the first time. Many other prominent theatres throughout the country, it is reported are booking the entire series.

Mr. Sarg is best known to the American public because of his numerous illustrations in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines. This new series of single reel novelties is said to be made by an entirely different method or process than any heretofore employed. The invention, it is claimed, is entirely revolutionary, for it does away with the tiresome, tedious methods of drawing thousands of pictures on celluloid for a 500 foot reel.

The important part of his invention, it is said, is the exceedingly low cost of production. It was through his intimate knowledge of shadowgraphy and his former experiments with marionettes that Mr. Sarg stumbled upon his new invention. Associated with him is Herbert M. Dawley, the maker of films showing the actions and movements of prehistoric animal effigies. Mr. Sarg and Mr. Dawley combined their inventive minds and with the help of half a dozen devices which were partly adaptations of Mr. Dawley's prehistoric animal effigies and through several new mechanical devices, Mr. Sarg produced his first number, "Tony Sarg's Almanac."

Kineto Will Release "Swat the Fly"

CHARLES URBAN, president of the Kineto Company of America, will very shortly release a "Swat the Fly" motion picture in two separate editions. One is the popular edition, the other the technical. The popular edition will be released through the theatres; the technical one through boards of health all over the country.

Both editions, which are in one reel each, bear the same title, "Swat the Fly," and both have the same story, the difference being entirely in their treatment.

This is not the first time that Mr. Urban has put out such a reel. When he was still resident in London he produced a similar picture—and distributed it all over the world.

Amer. Film Announces Wm. Russell Picture

"High-Gear Jeffrey" is the current offering of the American Film Company in its series of twelve reconstructed features for the state rights market. William Russell is the star of this production, the original name of which was "The Frame-Up."

The story is a comedy-drama with a society atmosphere. It is an automobile story and moves along in quick action style, one sequence following another.

Boy Scout Picture to Be Released Soon

"Boy Scouts of America," a Kineto Review, will soon be released for theatres throughout the United States. This is a motion picture, not only of entertainment value, but also of real historical value, for it records the visit of 301 picked Boy Scouts to the International "Jamboree" in England last July.

New Hallroom Announced

Many Exploitation Angles on This New Federated Comedy

THE third of the Federated Hallroom Boys Comedies, featuring Sid Smith, was titled this week, "Circus Heroes," which advance announcements have been trickling in from the Coast, and which has been described as a comedy that will tickle the hearts of youngsters everywhere and of all ages, owing to the fact that a real circus was used in its making. Prints of the picture arrived from the Coast this week, and after final editing at the New York offices of Hallroom Boys' Photoplays, were turned over to Federated Film Exchanges, Inc., for release.

According to Federated and to the producers of these comedy, "Circus Heroes" lends itself wonderfully well to special exploitation; and that everything may be in readiness for the release of the comedy, a special exploitation chart has been sent to all the exchanges who will handle it, calling attention to special angles that may be played up to "put this comedy" across.

The main point of exploitation is the fact that a real traveling circus was used in the making of "Circus Heroes," and the added fact that this has a special appeal of timeliness. Everyone, says Harry Cohn, producer of these comedies, who returning to the Coast last week, loves a circus and of course everyone knows that the spring and summer is "circus time." The circus scenes in this comedy were not "faked," as a real circus being called in to lend local color.

Jungle Serial Starts Well

Many Bookings Already on Federated's "Miracles of the Jungle"

A VOLUME of early booking which bids fair to break all previous records for animal productions is reported by Federated Film Exchanges on "Miracles of the Jungle," which is to be released shortly throughout this company's twenty-two exchanges.

Exhibitors who reaped a harvest with "The Lost City," the successful animal production produced at the Selig Studios for Warner Brothers, also responsible for "Miracles of the Jungle," were, it is said, the first to place their signatures to contracts, after seeing the production at a private viewing.

In all parts of the country, according to reports received at the Federated exchanges, plans are completed for elaborate campaigns of exploitation, costing thousands of dollars, to precede the opening of "Miracles of the Jungle."

Striking newspaper campaigns, stunt features, animal circus parades and other exploitation aids will mark the preliminary drive, which is considered by Federated one of the most complete and efficient campaigns to "put over" a big production. A large range of novelties, including animal cut-outs, caps, a book of animal stories, will be used to arouse interest in the production. In addition, there will be a twenty-page press book, in three colors, filled with reproductions of banners, posters, heralds, window cards and scene cuts, ready-made advertisements and synopses and newspaper stories.

"The Shadow" Is Ready for Release

"The Shadow," the first of the star series with Muriel Ostriche, made by Salient Films, Inc., and released by Forward Film Distributors, Inc., is ready for distribution. Press books, accessories and other advertising and exploitation material has been sent to the independent buyers, and J. Joseph Sameth, president of the Forward, is leaving no stone unturned to sweep the country with the production.

Advertising a Necessity

Chas. Urban States Experiment With Kinetos Proved Success

DISCUSSING the venture of furnishing complete publicity and exploitation material on Kineto Reviews, Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, pointed out this week that what started out as an experiment has proven itself to be a necessity.

"It was never done before," Mr. Urban said, "and we were told that it would never would be successful. And what do we find? The very reverse. All the exchanges which are handling the Kineto Reviews are writing us enthusiastic letters and backing up their enthusiasm with repeat orders.

"What is especially gratifying is the way the exchanges are following up our national advertising with their local advertising. Full page advertisements are now appearing regularly in the regional trade papers with the Kineto Reviews as their subjects. These regional advertisements are inserted and paid for by the distributors and not by us, a proof that the distributors are willing to back up their opinions with real, sound promotion.

"I have always believed in advertising and it is a point of pride with me that I helped finance one of the first trade papers ever started in the motion picture industry. That was the Kinematograph in England, now one of the greatest of trade journals. I was their first advertiser.

"There is no use in having a good thing unless one lets the public know about it. The way the various franchiseholders of the National Exchanges, Inc. are handling the Kineto Reviews is excellent.

"Some of our best ideas in furnishing publicity and exploitation aids to the exchanges for their use in contact with exhibitors has come from the exchanges themselves. We are only too glad to accept them and put them into operation. From the exchange managers we learn what is really wanted and then we supply it.

"The most decided impression I have received from our experiment in furnishing complete publicity aids on the Kineto Reviews has been that distributors are quick to endorse anything that is really helpful. Furthermore, they are quick to cooperate. They have realized, as we did, that the Kineto Reviews were released at the ideal time when the demand for Better Films was needing attention and in a very brief space of time they have established the Kineto Reviews as their ability merited."

V. B. Fisher Back in N. Y.

Associated Photo-Plays Manager Brings Two Negatives from Coast

VICTOR B. FISHER, general manager of Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., has returned to New York City after spending a month on the Coast conferring with his working companies for releases for the ensuing year.

Besides bringing with him, the negatives of "Western Hearts," a Cliff Smith production and "The Wolverine," starring Helen Gibson and made by Spencer Productions, Inc., Mr. Fisher ridicules the hard time story and declares that prospects are brighter for the coming year than ever before in the State Right Market.

"It is true that money is a little tight on the Coast," said Mr. Fisher, "but every one I talked to was bubbling over with enthusiasm for the summer and fall months. It is also true that there is very little production going on at the western studios, but I believe and those with whom I discussed the matter coincide with my views that this lack of production and stringency of money will be of material value to the motion picture industry for it will bring bigger and better pictures and the man who is in the fly-by-night class will be a "has been" with the coming of good times.

"The best proof that the state right market is to get the best in the motion picture industry is best evidenced by the plans outlined for fall production. Spencer Productions, Inc., and Cliff Smith and his staff of experts have bigger and better plans for this year than ever before."

Mr. Fisher has outlined a program of pictures for Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., release that fortifies them for the coming twelve months. At the present time "Western Hearts," a western of thrills and moments, a product from the Cliff Smith studios is being rushed for an early release.

Active Supply Co. in Larger Quarters

DAVID SILVERMAN, vice president and general manager of the Active Supply Co., announces that the company are now located in their new quarters on the sixth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, New York City. The growth of this company compelled them to seek larger quarters than they had occupied at 753 Eighth avenue. Likewise they have installed their own delivery service and are now equipped to render the highest type of service to their many exhibitor patrons. Paper, photos and slides on all important features are carried by Active Supply Co. and with added members to their sales and service staff they are ready for a greater volume of business.

Federated Will Double Its Capitalization

AT a well-attended meeting of directors of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., held at the Hotel Traymore, Atlantic City, beginning Saturday, April 30, a number of important steps were taken looking towards the development and growth of that organization.

The present capitalization of the corporation will be doubled, it was decided by the board of directors, who came from all parts of the country to attend the conference. Together with this announcement came it was formally stated that "Screen Snapshots" would be added to the list of features, animal productions, and comedies which Federated offers for the coming year.

Among those who attended the meeting were: J. L. Friedman, of Chicago, president of Federated; Harry Charnas and M. A. Liebensberger, of Cleveland; Sam V. Grand and C. W. Dimock, of Boston; Samuel Bischoff, of Boston; Bobby North and Abe Warner, of New York; Ben Amsterdam, of Phila.; P. Oletsky, of Baltimore; J. Eugene Pierce, of New Orleans; H. P. Baldwin and L. E. Ouimet, of Montreal; W. E. Greene, of New York, and George H. Wiley, general manager. The next meeting will be held in Chicago early in June.

"Tricked" Is New Irving Cummings Picture

The Producers' Security Corporation is following up its initial Irving Cummings release of a new series of "art tabloid superfeatures" with the second subject entitled "Tricked." The first was "On the Trail."

Pinnacle Holds Convention

Close of First Successful Season Marked by Home Office Meeting

TO mark the close of its first successful season, Pinnacle Productions, Incorporated, held its first annual convention on April 28, 29, and 30, at its home office, Indianapolis.

Practically everyone connected with the making of Pinnacle pictures attended the meeting and were greatly impressed and pleased with the plans for future production as outlined.

Paul Hurst, the new director for Pinnacle, in the course of a talk, told of his picture production ideas and sounded the keynote of Pinnacle's policy. He laid stress on the fact that motion pictures were a commercial proposition and should be produced with the same carefulness and economy that is used in producing a commercial article, so that the finished product can be put on the market at a price which will mean profit to exchangeman and exhibitor as well as producer. He promised the film world the kind of Western pictures it has been waiting for, pictures which will not be an insult to the intelligence of thinking people, and was backed up by Pinnacle's star, Neal Hart, who declared that the forthcoming "Black Sheep" is the best picture of his career, and one in which he felt the greatest satisfaction in having appeared.

A pleasant feature of the convention was the dinner on Saturday night at the Claypole Hotel, at which Richard Robertson, of Pinnacle, presided as toast master, and which was attended by many Chicago men, as well as the Indiana officers and stockholders of Pinnacle.

Among the prominent guests at the dinner were: Senator Ray M. Southworth, of Indiana; Neal Hart, Director Paul Hurst, Nate Woody, Arthur Jenkins, all of Pinnacle Productions, and O. B. DePue, of Burton-Holmes Laboratories, Chicago, who has charge of making all Pinnacle prints; Attorney Drucker, Chicago; Sam Gold, of Master Advertisers, Chicago, who has charge of Pinnacle's publicity, including press books, etc.; Howard Robertson, manager of Pinnacle's Chicago office; Arthur Lowy, manager of the Illinois and Indiana film exchange, Chicago; L. H. Mason, Motion Picture News, Chicago; and J. T. McCoy, of Trade Review.

Arrow Reports Record Sale

Twenty-six Features Are Sold to Newly Opened Exchange on Coast

BREAKING recent records for sales in independent film circles, and standing out as one of the most cheerful signs yet noted that conditions in the industry are trending back to "normalcy" again, is the announcement from the Arrow Film Corporation that E. H. Emmick, head of the Peerless Film Service, Inc., of San Francisco, while in New York during the past week, signed up for Arrow's entire new list of twenty-six feature productions, paying, it is announced a record breaking price in excess of $100,000 to close the deal. This will give Emmick for his territory the four big James Oliver Curwood productions; the four pictures of the Neva Gerber series; the entire Jack Hoxies and the following other features: "The Golden Trail;" "Bitter Fruit;" "Woman's Man;" "The Tame Cat;" "The Deceiver;" "The Chamber;" "The Stranger in Canyon Valley;" "Bachelor Apartments" and "The Man who Trifled."

All of these productions will be booked through the new Progress Features exchange at 'Frisco, recently organized by Mr. Emmick, together with W. C. Edmunds, formerly of the Hodkinson Service. This new exchange was opened for the exclusive purpose of handling first class State rights' features, the Peerless exchange having always distributed nothing but short subjects. The first feature release will be, "The Golden Trail" and the territory for distribution is; California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands.

W. O. Edmunds, Emmick's partner in the new Progress exchange, has spent the last three years as manager of the Hodkinson branch at 'Frisco.

New Forward Exchange Opens in N. Y.

J. JOSEPH SAMETH, president of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., is receiving congratulations from leading exchangemen from all parts of the United States upon the opening of the first of the Forward Exchanges.

The first of these exchanges, the Forward Film Exchange, Inc., with offices at 126 West 46th street, was thrown open to the public last week with Samuel Freund as its manager and Joseph Joel as his assistant.

Although the New York exchange has been opened but one week, Mr. Freund reports a number of bookings on "The Shadow," starring Muriel Ostriche, and "Hearts o' the Range." Mr. Sameth has also arranged to secure the New York rights to several other program features in the very near future.

Moore Extends Run of 'Madonnas and Men"

Tom Moore's Garden Theatre, Washington, D. C., enjoyed such a good business during the week of May 1st in its presentation of Jans Pictures, Inc., "Madonnas and Men," that it has extended the run for another week. The super-feature received very flattering criticisms in Washington, and was witnessed by many of the notables from the Capitol.

Kansas City Buyer Due in New York

M. R. Fink, general manager of Peacock Productions. Inc., of Kansas City, Mo., is due in New York on or about May 20th, to look over the independent field. He will make his headquarters at the Hotel Astor.

Illinois Buyer in N. Y. Week of May 16

R. C. Seery, general manager of the Associated First National Pictures of Illinois, Inc., will be in New York on May 16th to look over the independent market. Mr. Seery will stop at the Hotel Astor and will be pleased to meet independent producers and inspect their product. He wishes to purchase several independent pictures.

R-C Releases Booked by Big Buffalo Theatres

The Olympic theatre, one of the leading vaudeville theatres of Buffalo, has announced a change of policy, from straight vaudeville to vaudeville and motion pictures, effective May 15. Feature productions and short subjects will be shown. The opening attraction, on the new policy, will be the Robertson-Cole super-special, "Good Women" by C. Gardner Sullivan, directed by Gasnier. This will be followed by "The Stealers," William Christy Cabanne's powerful human document, "813," an Arsene Lupin story by Maurice Leblanc, directed by Scott Sidney; "See My Lawyer," by Max Marcin, presented by Christie Film Company; "What's A Wife Worth?," William Christy Cabanne's leaf from a woman's soul; "Seven Years Bad Luck," said to be the funniest five-reel comedy ever made, with Max Linder, and "If Women Only Knew," by Gardner Hunting, directed by E. H. Griffith. All these releases are through Robertson-Cole.

Dallas Fitzgerald Heads New Metro Unit

Dallas Fitzgerald, whose name is so closely associated with Viola Dana's most successful pictures, will head the new Metro producing unit that will film her forthcoming features.

Mr. Fitzgerald was selected for this important task because of his long and successful association with the little star as well as his varied experience in every phase of the directorial branch of picture making. He will begin preparations for the first of Miss Dana's new picture immediately.

"Wild Goose" Commended

New York Press Critics Write in Approving Terms About Production

IN a statement just received from the headquarters of the Cosmopolitan Productions, excerpts of the press criticisms rendered in connection with its production, "The Wild Goose," are submitted. "The Wild Goose" is the current feature attraction at the Rialto Theatre, New York City, this week, opening there on last Sunday, May 8th. According to the Cosmopolitan statement, the local press reviewers were highly favorable in their reports on the various phases of the production.

"On the whole, it is extremely well done, with a good appreciation of the dramatic values of the plot and the important scenes well worked out. . .the story is an interesting one, containing plenty of thrills and tense moments," said the critic of "The Evening Mail."

"It is a full-blooded story," was the verdict of "The Evening Telegram" critic. Alan Dale, the famous dramatic critic, is quoted as expressing the opinion that in "The Wild Goose" is to be found a timely picture dealing with domestic problems of the first magnitude.

"The Wild Goose" is from the novel by Gouverneur Morris, which appeared serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and is familiar to many readers in book form. The picture was directed by Albert Capellani, who directed for Cosmopolitan Productions "The Inside of the Cup." Donnah Darrell wrote the scenario. Mary MacLaren, Norman Kerry and Holmes E. Herbert play the leading parts, and they are supported by Dorothy Bernard, Joseph Smiley, Mrs. L. B. Segar, D. J. Flanagan and Rita Rogan, the five year old actress, who won praise from the critics for her excellent acting in this picture.

"Foreigner" for Hodkinson

Distribution Rights of Ralph Connor's Story Are Obtained

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that they have acquired the distribution rights of "The Foreigner," which was recently completed by Winnipeg Productions, Inc.

"The Foreigner" was made in and about Winnipeg under the direction of Henry Alexander McRae, formerly director general of Universal City for the Universal Company. At all times Ralph Connor, the author, was working in collaboration with Mr. McRae in the making of this production, as a result of which "The Foreigner" stands today as a distinct triumph in cinematographic art.

A remarkable cast is seen in the production. In what may be called the title role is seen Gaston Glass. He is seen as a young Russian whose ability as a violinist finally wins him fame and the girl of his heart, who in this particular instance happens to be Gladys Coburn, last seen in Hugo Ballin's "East Lynne."

The role of Gaston Glass' father is played by Wilton Lackaye, for many years one of the leading lights of the stage. Mr. Lackaye stands in the very front rank of present-day actors, and has contributed some remarkable characterizations to the American stage.

Also included in the cast is Kate Price, while William Colvin paints a polished portrait of villainy. Bradley Baker handles another important role.

"The Foreigner" is perhaps the best known of all Ralph Connor's famous books. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that they will place behind "The Foreigner" a strong selling, advertising, and exploitation campaign.

President Harding Sees "Four Horsemen"

President and Mrs. Harding witnessed a private showing of the Rex Ingram production for Metro of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at the I street residence of Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. McLean in Washington, Tuesday evening, April 26.

The entertainment, whose feature was the special exhibition of the picturization of the masterpiece of Vicente Blasco Ibanez, was an exclusive one. Among the few other guests, besides President and Mrs. Harding, were Attorney General and Mrs. Dougherty.

The comments of the President upon the picture's merit were distinctly favorable, says Metro, and those of the other guests no less so.

Preparing for 3 More First Nat'l Weeks

SOUTHERN OHIO and Eastern Kentucky will celebrate First National Week, beginning May 15, the center of celebration being Cincinnati. R. H. Haines, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, is all set for the biggest week of service in the history of the territory.

Associated First National Pictures of Louisiana will stage a First National Week in the New Orleans territory beginning July 3. Eugene V. Richards, Jr., the head of the company, and C. J. Briant, the manager of the exchange, are collaborating on plans to roll up new records throughout the district in bookings for that week.

The week of June 12 to 18 will mark the first observance of First National Week in Indiana, according to word received from Floyd Brown, manager of the First National Exchange in Indianapolis. Advance indications point to the fact that more than 350 theatres in the state will play First National Pictures during the week. Approximately thirty theatres in Indianapolis alone will show First National productions the entire week, it is declared, and this includes four first-run houses in the downtown district.

Lichtman Publishes Schedule for May and June

MAY and June promise to be red letter months for Association Producers, Inc., according to announcement of activities made by general manager Al Lichtman. Eight pictures are scheduled for release. They represent the best efforts of the various producing units aligned with Associated Producers, Inc., and stand, it is declared, as the top achievement of such producers as Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, J. Parker Read, Jr., Allan Dwan, Maurice Tourneur, and J. L. Frothingham.

"I feel that in presenting this array of motion pictures for the consideration of the exhibitors, I am offering them a high type of screen entertainment," said Mr. Lichtman. "Each of the pictures scheduled for release in May and June is essentially a box-office picture containing all the elements of popular appeal and limitless possibilities for local exhibitor exploitation.

"It is with a feeling of pride that I announce such productions as J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, 'I am Guilty!' starring Louise Glaum; Mack Sennett's 'Home Talent'; Thomas H. Ince's 'Mother O' Mine'; Allan Dwan's 'The Broken Doll'; Maurice Tourneur's 'Foolish Matrons,' and J. T. Frothingham's 'The Ten Dollar Raise,' besides two short reel subjects by Mack Sennett, 'She Sighed By The Seaside,' and Ben Turpin's first starring picture, 'Love's Outcast.'

"Each of these pictures will be sold strictly on its own merits. This is, I believe, the fairest way and makes for sounder business methods. Confident in the quality of our product, I know that exhibitors who will see these pictures at our exchanges will agree with me that they deserve the highest commendation and that their value as attractions at the box-office is very high."

This is declared to be the opening salvo in a barrage of high-class productions which Associated Producers, Inc., are scheduling for release this year. While the pace set by the releases just announced is fast, general manager Al Lichtman declares that the production plans of the various producing units in Associated Producers, Inc., provide for pictures of consistent quality and excellence.

Mr. Lichtman's announcement gives an idea of what exhibitors may expect from Associated Producers, Inc., henceforth. His organization plans which are being launched now are ambitious and will cause this young organization to function as never before, it is said. Backed up by productions of undoubted merit and by the best efforts of world famous producers whose genius has placed them at the forefront of the industry, Mr. Lichtman's plans bear promise of fulfillment.

Charles Ray's Next to Be Released May 30

Announcement was made this week of the release of "Scrap Iron," Charles Ray's next picture, on May 30. This is the fifth of the star's personally produced offerings, in which he will be presented by Arthur S. Kane, through First National release.

Since the success of "The Old Swimmin' Hole," with its absence of subtitles, the public has come to look more than ever to Mr. Ray for innovations, and that it will not be disappointed in this next picture is the assurance of officials of the First National and of the Kane Corporation, and of those of laymen who have seen pre-views. This film marks Mr. Ray's debut as a director.

Playgoers to Release Through Pathe

IT is announced that Playgoers Pictures, Inc., will release through Pathe Exchange, several independently made productions. The first of these productions is "The Butterfly Girl," starring Marjorie Daw. It will be released on June 12. The production is described as a splendid comedy drama. Fritzi Brunette and King Baggot have important roles.

Charles O. Weston, the producer of the picture, arranged for the release in negotiations conducted through the office of Arthur S. Kane. Negotiations are under way for the release of another independent produced picture acquired by Mr. Weston and it is probable that a series of such releases for Playgoers Pictures will be announced in the near future.

Goldwyn to Handle Big Italian Spectacles

WHILE in Rome during his recent trip abroad, arrangements were concluded by Samuel Goldwyn with the Unione Cinematografica Italiana—known as the U. C. I.—whereby what are declared to be the greatest spectacles made by this company will be distributed in the United States by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

The Goldwyn Company is now making plans to release the first two great pictures of the group.. The first one will be "Theodora," based upon Victorien Sardou's drama and picturized upon a vast scale. This picture has been two years in the making, declares Goldwyn. The cast contains ten thousand people and the complete field of Italian art has been combed to contribute to the picturization of "Theodora."

Mr. Goldwyn, who saw the picture in Rome, says:

"'Theodora' is the greatest spectacle I have ever seen on the screen. The same people, headed by Mr. Ambrosio, who produced 'Quo Vadis' and 'Cabiria,' have made it possible for America to see this epic picture."

"Theodora" will be followed by "The Ship," founded on D'Annunzio's famous novel, "La Nave." Mr. Goldwyn says that in this picture Ida Rubinstein, the great Russian dancer, gives the most imaginative and dramatic performance he has ever seen. The picture was directed by the son of the poet, Gabrielle D'Annunzio, Jr. It took a year to produce "The Ship," according to the Goldwyn statement. The story rests upon the foundation of the City of Venice.

Hodkinson Releases in Force in Detroit

According to reports received from Ralph Peckham, Hodkinson representative in Detroit, three Hodkinson released productions are running simultaneously in first run theatres in that city. At Fox's theatre "East Lynne" is playing, while "The Spenders" holds the screen at the Regent, and "The Other Woman" is offered as the featured attraction at the Miles.

Universal Employes Will Stage Show

Employes of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will present to the public a three-act musical comedy entitled, "Black and White" at the Hunt's Point Palace, 163d street and Southern Boulevard, New York City, Saturday evening, May 14. The principals and members of the chorus all are young men and women employed at Universal Fort Lee laboratory or in the home office. The revue was written and produced by H. R. Parsons, a member of the staff of Universal's laboratory superintendent.

Marie Prevost, the former bathing beauty, who is to be starred in Universal pictures, will make a personal appearance during the performance.

The show will include the following scenes and stunts: Melodia Land, the Rehearsal, Nothing from Nothing Leaves Nothing, Before the Final Fade Out, and Thank You Mr. Volstead. A dance will follow.

The proceeds will be devoted to the welfare work being conducted by mutual welfare association of Universal employes.

Equity Picture Corp. Report Busy Week

EQUITY Pictures Corp., of New York, reports last week was one of the most successful that the company has ever had. With Joseph I. Schnitzer, president of Equity, was finding that the Clara Kimball Young pictures were meeting with success in Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburgh, where he has been visiting, Sales Manager Louis Baum was kept busy in New York answering inquiries from buyers in regard to the Florence Reed picture, "The Black Panther's Cub."

This last named picture, it appears, has won considerable interest among the state right buyers.

"Reputation" in Great Demand

Author Commends the Screen Version of Her Story

CHARLES ROSENZWEIG, manager of the Big U exchange of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is busily reaping the benefits derived from the highly successful showing of "Reputation," Priscilla Dean's new Universal-Jewel picture, at the Astor Hotel last week, according to a statement from Universal headquarters. The Grand Ball Room was crowded and in order to show the picture in comfort to those who were already in, the doors had to be closed before the picture could start. Exhibitors present liked the picture so well that Mr. Rosenzweig has been busy signing up contracts on "Reputation" ever since, it is stated.

The bookings for the first week exceed in number and in prices the record made by any previous picture made by Universal, it is announced by the home office. Up to this time "Outside the Law" had held the record for fast and furious Universal bookings, but "Reputation" in its first week, are declared to have far exceeded the booking on "Outside the Law."

For instance, the picture was booked over the Fox Circuit of theatres, starting with the Academy of Music on May 15th, following at the Audubon and so on through the whole string. In all, the Fox time is about one hundred days, seventy of which are in New York.

The Consolidated Amusement Houses have booked the picture; the S. R. S. Circuit; Sydney Cohen's two houses, the Empire and McKinley; the Grand Opera House on Eighth Avenue; and Olympic Theatre in Brooklyn; also the Stone and the Sheffield, have early dates. One of the bookings over which Mr. Rosenzweig is particularly proud is the Majestic Theatre, 17 Second Avenue, Manhattan, which has booked the picture for a week with an option of three days more. The Fifth Avenue Theatre at 110th Street is trying an experiment with this picture. They have never played a feature for a full week before, it is stated, and "Reputation" is going to be the first picture which will show for a full week at this house, which has been open for five years.

Among the many expressions of commendation received on Prisilla Dean's latest production is one from the author of the story, Miss Edwina Levin. Miss Levin witnessed the showing of "Reputation" at the Hotel Astor, New York, last week, and voiced her entire satisfaction with the way in which her story has been handled.

"Having written the story" says Miss Levin, "I did not expect to experience any emotion nor be thrilled by any suspense at situations, the ending of which I knew of in advance. But I was agreeably surprised and amazed at the effect the picture had on me." I was conversant with the mechanics of the play and I knew just how each situation was to be worked out and yet I felt a lump in my throat and tears came to my eyes as I watched Priscilla Dean unfold the story of Reputation.

"No story of mine that has ever been filmed has had such an effect upon me, and I was in mortal fear that my friends would think I was 'acting' and pretending until I saw that they too were making use of their handkerchiefs."

Medal for Year's Best Film

Photoplay Establishes Annual Award; Public to Be the Judge

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that Photoplay Magazine has adopted a plan of awarding annually a medal of honor to the producer of the best picture of the year. It is further stated in the announcement that the judge as to what is "the best picture of the year" will be "the Public." The competition opened this year on May 1st and will close on October 1st, accordto the announcement. This plan "will afford ample time for the fullest distribution of the big features released first in 1920 that most likely will be the leading competitors for the Photoplay medal," declares the statement. Accordingly, the all important question presented for decision by motion-picture devotees is: "What was the best photoplay released during 1920?" The medal will be awarded to the producer winning the verdict of the great number of Photoplay readers.

The statement issued by Photoplay in connection with the launching of this new competition is submitted in part as follows:

"The medal itself is a beautiful affair, designed and executed by Tiffany of New York. It is two and a half inches in diameter, and on one side bears the classic marks of comedy and tragedy, the laurel wreath and in the center a real symbol of the motion picture. On the other side will be engraved a tribute to the successful producer.

"One important fact in connection with the regulations governing the PHOTOPLAY contest, is that the medal will be awarded to the producer—not to the director, not to the distributor—but to the producer whose vision, faith, and organization made the best photoplay a possibility.

"No doubt considerable good in the field of production will develop from these annual Photoplay Magazine Medal of Honor contests. In almost every other field of endeavor highest merit is rewarded recognition by some sort of honor medal. War has its crosses, the exhibition its ribbons, the athlete his palm and literature its Nobel prize. All these awards make for better efforts.

"Thus far, good pictures have received their reward at the box offices of the various theatres only.

"It was this fact that impelled PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE to permanently establish its award of merit, a figurative winning post, comparable to the dignified and greatly coveted prizes of war and art.

"It isn't always the picture that brings the biggest box office returns that wins the public sentiment. Good exploitation and advertising frequently accomplish that result. Its the picture that stays with one—that makes one know he has been thoroughly entertained—that is in the best picture category."

Washburn Film On June 19

"The Road to London," Filmed in England, on Ass'd. Exhib. Schedule

IT has been announced by Associated Exhibitors that "The Road to London," starring Bryant Washburn will be released on June 19th. Prints will be shipped to the branch offices in the next few days, and exhibitors will have an opportunity to see the picture made by Washburn on his trip to England.

The picture will introduce to America one of the most attractive personalities on the English screen, Miss Joan Morgan, a well-known English beauty who took up screen acting a year ago and who has rapidly advanced to the front rank in England. Her work opposite Mr. Washburn has won her the most favorable comment both for her talent and her beauty, it is declared.

Mr. Washburn is now making personal appearances throughout the country telling the story of his personal experiences on the trip. It is reported that he has been meeting with popular ovations everywhere. He was at Barbee's Loop Theatre, Chicago, last week and is reported to have scored a hit with the audience. Many exhibitors in exchange centers have been anxious to obtain the personal appearance of Washburn with the first run of the picture, and in some instances it is understood this will be arranged.

Praise Realart Production

"Birthday Special" Described to Be Feature of Unusual Qualities

AS previously announced, Realart Pictures Corporation is preparing to celebrate its second anniversary in the near future. One of the features of the program being planned on for the event is the release of a special production referred to by the Realart officials as the "Birthday Production." According to a statement issued during the week from the Realart headquarters, officials of the organization are enthusiastic over the character of its birthday release, which is described to be unusual as to the story, cast ensemble, direction and production.

Hector Turnbull wrote the story. Mr. Turnbull has already contributed some successful stories to the screen, notable among which is "The Cheat." Chester Franklin is directing the production. Some of Mr. Franklin's work in the past include such features as "You Never Can Tell," starring Bebe Daniels; and "All Soul's Eve," starring Mary Miles Minter.

May McAvoy, who played the part of Grizel in Paramount's release, "Sentimental Tommy," will appear in the leading feminine role in this picture. The supporting cast

One Reel Comedies for Educational Release

ADVICE as to the titles and casts of four new one-reel comedies, three to be released under the Vanity Comedy's brand and one under the Gayety Comedy's brand, were received from the Christie Film Company at Los Angeles this week, as announced by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

The four comedies now being filmed are:

Vanity Comedy, "How She Lied," featuring Irene Dalton and Francis Feeney, filmed under the direction of Scott Sidney; Vanity Comedy, "Ninety Days or Life," featuring Irene Dalton with Francis Feeney, made under the direction of William Beaudine; Gayety Comedy, "Hero—Pro Tem," just completed, features Teddy Sampson and Henry Murdock, directed by William Beaudine; Vanity Comedy, "It's Your Move," featuring Charlotte Merriam and Francis Feeney, has just been started and is being directed by Allen Watt.

"Mutt and Jeff" Prove Popular Abroad

The William Fox offices state that the number of Mutt and Jeff prints necessary to supply the foreign trade has been quadrupled in the past year, with a corresponding enlargement of the output for home consumption.

Rothacker Co. Celebrates Eleventh Anniversary

DAD TIME chalked another mark against Waterson R. Rothacker's account May 6. Three days after Mr. Rothacker was 36 years old came the eleventh anniversary of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's founding.

Eleven years ago the Rothacker Company consisted of Mr. Rothacker and a rented desk in a small Chicago downtown office. Today the company has two film laboratories—the Chicago plant and the new Rothacker-Aller laboratory in Hollywood.

In June Mr. Rothacker goes to Europe to start a laboratory in London. By the time the company is twelve years old he plans to have a fourth plant under construction in New York.

And the practical picture division of the Rothacker Company has kept pace with the laboratory end. When in 1910 Mr. Rothacker resigned as Western manager of The Billboard to get into the film business he became the pioneer practical picture producer. Today the practical picture division has branch offices in New York, St. Louis, Peoria and Milwaukee. A survey made recently by a projection machine manufacturer revealed that the Rothacker Company is the world's largest producer of practical films.

Geo. Baker Leaves for Metro Coast Studio

To complete arrangements for his next feature picture, George D. Baker, who directed "Without Limit," a Metro release for S-L Pictures, has left for the West Coast and will start work at an early date at the Hollywood (Cal.) studios of Metro Pictures Corporation. Arthur Sawyer, of S-L (Arthur Sawyer-Herbert Lubin), and Charles Hunt, the director's assistant, accompanied Mr. Baker.

Two stories are under consideration by Mr. Baker, both of which it is stated, require large settings with casts of greater magnitude than could be conveniently handled in Metro's New York studio.

JUNE, 1921

MOTION PICTURE CLASSIC

We now turn to Corinne Griffith's "What's Your Reputation Worth?" (Vitagraph), and words fail us. They always do, when we endeavor to comment upon the radiant Corinne. We understand that the story deals with a wealthy chap who hires his beautiful stenog to pose as co-respondent in his divorce case—and then falls in love with the co-respondent. All we recall are the radiant glimpses of Miss Griffith. Right here let us go on record once more as declaring her the most beautiful of our favorite stars.

Late Chicago News

Cecil Maberry, Chicago manager for Goldwyn, left Thursday for California, in company with a number of Goldwyn officials, to attend a convention of his company to be held at the studios. Mr. Maberry had some tough luck before leaving as his big roadster caught fire from a short circuit and went up in smoke while driving through a southside park Monday night.

The Wisconsin Senate last week killed the Bennett censorship bill by a vote of twenty-nine to three, an even greater majority against the measure than had been hoped for by the joint legislative committee of the motion picture industry, which had put up a hard fight against the measure.

Oscar Doob, of the Lake & Export Coal Company, who was widely known in the film circles of the central west as publicity director for Famous Players-Lasky, was a Chicago visitor this week, and was given a hearty welcome by his old friends in film circles. Mr. Doob reports that his company, of which Harris P. Wolfberg is vice-president and general salesmanager, is doing a large business with theatres through the dealers which handle Lake and Export coal.

General Manager Charles R. Rogers presided at a sales conference of Robertson-Cole managers in Chicago Monday, those present being Manager Lucas, of Chicago; Klar, of Milwaukee; Flagler, of Indianapolis; Desberger, of St. Louis, and Churchill of Kansas City. Plans for an active campaign were mapped out, and following the meeting Mr. Rogers left for Los Angeles.

Carl Mueller, of the Spencer Square Theatre, Rock Island, was one of those who attended the Derby at Louisville this week.

Harold Lloyd

"Among Those Present"

PERSONAL—To the man who does not show the Lloyd Comedies

Have you ever—?

Have you ever heard roars of laughter coming from a competing theatre and wished that you could hear such sounds of joy in your own?

Have you ever thought that such laughter was a sure sign that "someone is picking them right"? That it's a proof of prosperity?

Have you ever taken the trouble to find out what the picture was that was "knocking them off their seats"? If you have, the chances are about 100 to 1 that it was a Harold Lloyd. And it doesn't take a lot of thought to figure it out that a Harold Lloyd in your neighbor's theatre doesn't pay any profits in your own.

There isn't a comedian today whose pictures average as sky high as Harold Lloyd; there isn't one who means any more at the box-offices of these United States; there isn't one that is more truly loved by the men, women and children of this nation. And there isn't one who gives the censors less to bother about.

Friend, you can't evade the facts. You are losing money every time there is a Harold Lloyd you don't show.

Look at his latest, "Among Those Present." If you see, you're sold!

Ray Recruits Big Cast for "Scrap Iron"

For the production of his adaptation of Charles E. Van Loan's "Scrap Iron," soon to be released, Charles Ray surrounded himself with a notable cast of players. Picture fans will welcome the information that Lydia Knott, who filled a similar role in "Peaceful Valley" appears as the mother, a characterization in which she gives a touching performance. Vera Stedman, who plays opposite the star, is the fourth actress whom Mr. Ray has taken from the field of comedy, having borrowed her, like the three others, from Al and Charles Christie. Tom Wilson, as Bill Dugan, a tin-eared ex-pugilist, is declared to give in "Scrap Iron" the best bit of acting he has ever done.

Tom O' Brien, who, as Battling Burke, is Steel's opponent in the ring, was a well known amateur boxer for years before he became an actor. Stanton Heck, taking the part of Tim Riley, owner of an athletic club, was engaged for a week but showed such adaptability that he remained with the company six weeks.

Author Approves Screen Version of His Story

Irving Bacheller, author of "Keeping Up with Lizzie," which was produced for the screen by the Rockett Film Corporation under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, had the following to say about the completed screen version of his story, after he had viewed the picture in a private showing at Winter Park, Fla.:

"'Keeping Up With Lizzie' is a big picture or I am a dead Prophet. The picture made a profound impression on me and my friends here.

"People have been coming to my door and calling on the phone to report a feeling in their hearts like that in my own.

"I am proud to have Rockett Brothers' picturization of 'Keeping Up With Lazzie' as my first story to reach the screen."

"Keeping Up With Lizzie" is on in the W. W. Hodkinson release schedule.

"The Passion Flower" Has Novel Song Feature

Irving Berlin has written a song entitled "The Passion Flower" in conjunction with the Norma Talmadge picture of the same title, released as a First National attraction. During the run of the picture both the words and the music of this song are shown on the screen at three different times.

When this picture was shown at the Strand theatre, New York, the management engaged a singer, who appeared in Spanish costume and sang the song just before the pictuhe began, so that when the last note of the song ended the first scene of the picture was flashed on the screen. The singer also repeated the first verse of the song each time that the words and music were shown on the screen. Joseph M. Scheneck, head of the Norma Talmadge Productions, has arranged to send an orchestration and the words of this song to the First National sub-franchise holders.

Hammons Issues Statement

Educational's President Submits Findings of Sales-Mgr's. Survey

THE following announcement was made this week by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., as the result of a trip over a large portion of the country by Henry Ginsberg, manager of the domestic sales department of Educational.

"The following cities were visited, during which time the sales analyses were made of an entire territory; exhibitors were interviewed and salesmen called in from their various territories with the purpose of holding sales meetings, getting views on our individual products and their sales possibilities for next year. All the districts surrounding these cities were studied: Atlanta, Dallas, New Orleans, St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines, Denver, Omaha, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago, Indianapolis.

"In the majority of territories it was found that the exhibitor was in a very good frame of mind. Although much talk of depression and loss of business was in the air, still this condition they realize is prompted by the fact that we are coming back to normal times. Of course, industrial conditions in some of the very small towns are forcing the exhibitor to cut down the number of days that he gives his shows and in some cases have forced him to discontinue operating altogether.

"I honestly believe that Educational is less effected by present conditions confronting the industry because we are to-day in a class by ourselves, namely, handling the highest class of program of short reel subjects on the market with very little opposition, making it possible for us to find business for some portion of our product in whatever theatre we may attempt to sell. The present conditions are affecting the feature concerns entirely because of the alleged overproduction of feature pictures."

Select's Summer Releases

Star-Series Features, Talmadge Revivals, and a Special on List

THE arrangement of star-series features and special attractions to be distributed through Select branches for May, June, July and August have been completed.

Elaine Hammerstein is scheduled for two releases during the summer. They are "The Girl From Nowhere" and "Handcuffs or Kisses." George Archainbaud directed both of these features. In "The Girl From Nowhere," Miss Hammerstein's leading man will be William B. Davison, and in "Handcuffs or Kisses" Robert Ellis will head the supporting company.

Conway Tearle will present "The Fighter," made from Albert Payson Terhune's novel of the same title. Winifred Westover will lead the supporting company in a presentation directed by Henry Kolker. Eugene O'Brien will have Martha Mansfield as his leading woman in "The Last Door" (directed by William P. S. Earle), while Winifred Westover will support him in the Alan Crosland presentation now temporarily titled "Six Shots." Miss Mansfield will make her final appearance as a screen leading woman in "The Last Door," preceding her introduction as a Selznick star.

Owen Moore is scheduled for two releases during the term in question, the first of which is "A Divorce of Convenience," directed by Robert Ellis in which Kathryn Perry will again lead the support. Victor Heerman, author of "The Chicken in the Case" also furnished "A Divorce of Convenience" to Mr. Moore's repertory of farce-features.

Constance Talmadge in "Up the Road With Sallie" and Norma Talmadge in "The Moth," will be returned to the screen in newly created presentations, edited and retitled.

Then there will be "Who Am I?" a mystery story by Max Brand, directed by Henry Kolker. In the presenting company Claire Anderson and Miles Welch will have the leads with Gertrude Aster and Josef Swickard in prominent roles.

New Pathe Serial Said to Be in Big Demand

The Pathe headquarters announces that the bookings on its new serial release "The Sky Ranger," are unusually heavy and that present prospects point to a big success for the chapter-picture. The critics, according to Pathe, who have already seen the first three episodes of the new serial have commented especially on the novelty as well as the rapid action found in the introductory chapters of "The Sky Ranger." Several critics described the "censor-proof" character of the production as represented by the opening episodes. George B. Seitz and June Caprice are co-stared in the new serial.

Bookings Increase on "The Wonder Man"

Advices from the Robertson-Cole headquarters state that the arrival of Georges Carpentier in this country for his coming fistic encounter with Jack Dempsey is having a most favorable reaction on the bookings of "The Wonder Man," in which the French pugilist is starred. The contract-getting competition inaugurated by general manager Charles R. Rogers in connection with "The Wonder Man" is reported to be registering immediate effects, "and contracts are coming into home-office in gratifying volume."

Educational Announces Sales Competition

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION announces that a sales competition will be held from June 5 to July 3 inclusive. According to the announcement, a gold watch will be awarded to every member of the office winning the competition. In the event of a tie, awards identical in character with those offered will be given to each office so tied.

In making this announcement Mr. E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, said:

"We have set aside the period from June 5 to July 3 as competition period for our sales organization, and in order that the contest may be eminently fair and that every member of the office organization may participate, not only the office manager and the salesmen themselves but the bookers and other members of the office organization all have been given an equal opportunity to secure a handsome gold watch. All of our branches will go into competition and the branch which wins by making the finest showing in the sales period indicated will secure for every one of its members the allotted prize. If, for example, an office with a manager, booker and two or three other members of the sales force, is successful in putting their office to the front in this sales drive, every single member of that organization will be awarded a prize."

Sam Sax in Successful Trip Thru Mid-West

Samuel Sax, general sales manager of Select Pictures Corporation, returned, April 29, from a trip combining inspection and sales promotion in which he visited branches in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Chicago, with a side trip to Toledo. The latter visit was for the purpose of planting the Selznick service with the Rivoli Theatre, which he succeeded in doing.

The State Theatre, in Cleveland, for the first time in its history, has booked a reissue for this week. It is "Ghosts of Yesterday." This has been Selznick week in Cleveland, therefore, the Mall has been showing Elaine Hammerstein in "The Miracle of Manhattan," and the Park has run Eugene O'Brien in "Gilded Lies."

Shirley Mason Placed on Church's List

A statement from the William Fox headquarters announces that the motion-picture committee of the Methodist Episcopal church has placed on its list of "wholesome entertainers" the name of Shirley Mason, "whose offerings can be recommended to the church's membership throughout the country." Miss Mason is shortly to appear in "The Mother Heart."

Mother O' Mine" Has Dramatic Story

"Mother O' Mine," the Thomas H. Ince special which Associated Producers, Inc., will release June 5, was adapted by C. Gardner Sullivan from Charles Belmont Davis' novel, "The Octopus," and was directed by Fred Niblo. "Mother O' Mine" is the story of a boy who is wrongfully convicted of murder and sentenced to die in the electric chair. All the evidence points towards his guilt, but his mother, believing his plea of innocence, fights for him and by an ingenious method succeeds in establishing his innocence and saving him from death.

The cast includes Lloyd Hughes, Betty Rose Clarke, Betty Blythe, Joseph Kilgour, Claire McDowell, Andrew Robson and Andrew Arbuckle.

Goldwyn Film at Monster Benefit Show

"A Tale of Two Worlds," distributed by Goldwyn, was the feature attraction at a monster benefit performance given in Chicago in Orchestra Hall on the evening of May 3. The proceeds were devoted to the relief of the destitute children of Poland. A great sum was realized, according to the Goldwyn report. The Goldwyn production was selected by the National Polish Committee of America, represented by Ignace Paderewski, the famous pianist, honorary chairman, and John F. Smulski, chairman of the executive committee. According to Goldwyn, tickets to the performance brought in as high as $50 a piece from hundreds of those who attended.

Anita Stewart Finishing New Feature

The Anita Stewart company will finish "shooting" this week "The Price of Happiness," which Edwin Carewe is directing for Louis B. Mayer as a future First National attraction. Over five weeks have been put in on the picture so far. Walter McGrail, who was Miss Stewart's leading man in "Playthings of Destiny" and "The Invisible Fear," again has the principal role in her supporting cast. Other important parts are taken by Arthur Edmund Carew, Gertrude Astor, Ernest Buttersworth, Adele Farrington, Percy Challenger, William Badger and Margaret McWade.

"Wet Gold" Booked for Capitol, New York

New York's first showing of the new J. Ernest Williamson undersea feature film, "Wet Gold," which Goldwyn has acquired for distribution, is to be at the Capitol. The showing will be held within a few weeks.

The film has been booked in a number of key cities for early showing. Outside of New York the larger cities where it will soon be screened include the Lyric theatre, Reading, Pa.; the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, Mo.; the Casino, Salt Lake City; the Strand, Atlanta, Ga.; Poli's, Scranton, Pa., and Poli's, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Alice Calhoun in a scene from her newest Vitagraph production, "Closed Doors"

A. E. Smith Returns to N. Y.

Vitagraph President Announces Jean Paige Special; Studios Busy

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has returned from California where he has been giving his personal attention to new productions now under way at the Hollywood studios, and incidentally giving instructions for extensive improvements to the big ranch he recently purchased in Southern California. Mr. Smith probably will remain in New York throughout the summer.

Mr. Smith is exceedingly optimistic over the motion picture outlook and predicted a big year. Vitagraph is speeding up its productions to the utmost capacity and this activity already has necessitated three trips across the continent since the new year. With every unit busily engaged on new productions at the Hollywood studio, with the special production, "The Son of Wallingford," considerably more than half completed under the direction of George Randolph Chester, the author, and another special James Oliver Curwood production now being cast, Mr. Smith feels privileged to make his stay in the East a lengthy one. Alice Joyce, Corinne Griffith, Alice Calhoun and Catherine Calvert, Vitagraph stars, are all busy at the Brooklyn studio, and while here Mr. Smith will not only plan new productions for them, but will arrange a special production which will be a worthy successor to "Black Beauty," for Jean Paige.

"There will be no let-up during the summer months," said Mr. Smith. "Of course we will make hay while the sun shines—that is one of the golden rules in motion picture industry—and do our best to meet the constantly growing demand for our pictures. All of our units have been busy during the winter months, those at the West coast studio in particular. Big things have been planned for the summer months, and it will depend only on the weather and human capabilities whether they can be carried out."

Mr. Smith said that the general improvements begun at the Hollywood studio nearly a year ago were now practically completed, greatly increasing its capacity.

The Brooklyn studio, Mr. Smith predicted, would see one of the busiest sessions in its history. Several changes already have been made in the personnel of the studio, among others Williams Wright, formerly of the general offices, having become studio manager, and William R. Dunn having been engaged as casting director.

Mr. Smith, in speaking of the Brooklyn Studio activities, announced that Alice Calhoun, the young star, had been placed under a long term contract.

Music Score a Feature of Big Premier

The showing of "Reputation" at the Hotel Astor, New York City, last week brought out more strongly than ever the value of a synchronized music score in enhancing the presentation of a picture. This is the opinion expressed by many in the trade who were on hand to view the, premiere of the Universal-Jewel production, in which Priscilla Dean is starred. Besides being regarded as a distinctive achievement for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the showing was considered to be also a triumph for the Music Score Service Corporation, which organization, through one of its staff members, James C. Bradford, was responsible for the synchronized musical entertainment. Mr. Bradford led the orchestra of twenty-seven pieces during the Hotel Astor showing of "Reputation" on Monday of last week.

International Studios Are Renovated

International Film Studios, at 127th street and Second avenue, where Cosmopolitan Productions are made, has undergone improvements.

The large lobby at the Second avenue entrance has been entirely redecorated, the walls being panelled with monk's cloth and woodwork. Around the sides, wall benches have been placed for the accommodation of visitors waiting to call on department heads. The general manager's office has also been done over, and new offices have been established on the ground floor for the casting director and purchasing agent.

Reports Heavy Bookings for Black Roses

Bookings for "Black Roses," in which Robertson-Cole presents Sessue Hayakawa in a super-special production written by Richard Schayer, are coming into the sales department of the distributing organization at an unusually rapid rate, according to G. M. Sharrard, sales manager. The production was directed by Colin Campbell, with Robert Ellis as art director. The bookers include the United Booking Offices, Loew's, Fox and Poli Circuits in Greater New York and surrounding territory. Among the larger first-run houses are included Loew's State, Cleveland; the Strand, Buffalo; the Valentine, Toledo; and the Palace, Washington.

"The Gossamer Web" a Photoplay Story

"The Gossamer Web," by John Moroso, recently announced to be purchased by Universal for screen adaptation, appeared in the January issue of Photoplay Magazine, and was one of the first two stories published in the Photoplay's $14,000 fiction competition.

100,000 Men to Boost "Zane Grey Week"

ONE interesting angle on Zane Grey Week and one which should furnish proof as to just how massive a promotion scheme this is, is indicated in the announcement from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, that there will be 100,000 men behind the plan to boost it. As has been stated, Zane Grey Week which will be June 2nd to 9th, will be promoted by a triple alliance: The Curtis Publishing Company, publishers of "The Saturday Evening Post," "The Ladies' Home Journal," and "The Country Gentleman"; Harper & Brothers, who publish the Zane Grey novels; and Grosset & Dunlap, who publish the cheaper edition of the famous author's works.

These 100,000 men who will boost the project are divided as follows: 50,000 of them are local Curtis Agents who will bring the campaign direct to the home of the American people; 22,000 are District Agents of the Curtis Company who supervise the sale of their publications all over the United States; 25,000 are newsdealers who are selling the three Curtis Publications mentioned above.

The Hodkinson organization and its affiliated units have approximately 3,000 men in the field boosting Zane Grey Week.

Pathe Starts Big Competition

Winners to Be Given Seats for Dempsey-Carpentier Bout

FOUR Pathe salesmen are going to see Jack Dempsey defend his heavyweight crown against Georges Carpentier on July 2nd—and without cost to themselves. Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just announced the terms of what is promised to be one of the most popular competitions the organization has ever staged. The awards will be four ringside tickets to the Dempsey-Carpentier bout, railroad tickets, and vacation on full pay, it is announced. In the event of any ties, all contestants thus tieing, will receive the full award.

The winners will be the salesmen in each of four divisions—Eastern, Central, Southern and Western—who from May 7th until midnight, June 18, write the greatest amount of business on the Jack Dempsey pictures distributed by Pathe, declares the Pathe statement. These are the record-breaking serial, "Daredevil Jack," and the one-reeler "A Day With Jack Dempsey," the only authentic pictures to be made of the heavyweight champion during his training for Carpentier.

All acceptable contracts written up to midnight, June 18th, and mailed to the Home Office before that hour, will be counted in the contest, it is explained.

Wires informing the branches of the inauguration of this contest, had hardly been received in the different offices, when the home office began to be flooded with wires hailing the competition. Every member of the Pathe sales force—along with several million other persons—have been figuring for many moons on how they could get to Jersey City and the fight.

Salesmanship will get them there now.

The contest is going to be one swiftly waged, desperately fought, for the stake is probably the most attractive ever offered by Pathe.

Jack Kearns, manager of Jack Dempsey, is offering the ringside tickets to the four winners. It was Kearns, through Fred Quimby, who arranged last week to have Pathe distribute "A Day With Jack Dempsey." Kearns himself guarantees that this will be the only motion picture of the champion to be taken during his training for Carpentier.

The one-reeler shows every activity of the title holder, from the time he gets up in the morning, until he goes to bed, after a hard day's work, topped off by an hour at billiards and a little reading.

Pathe looks for a tremendous spurt in Dempsey contracts right from the inauguration of the competition. As a matter of fact, the coming championship bout has already naturally stimulated the interest of exhibitors in "Daredevil Jack" and "A Day With Jack Dempsey."

Hundreds of exhibitors who successfully campaigned with "Daredevil Jack" are rebooking the serial. It is interesting to note that many of them are planning to run the serial within one week—three episodes a night. This is an exploitation stunt that they rely on bringing them wonderful returns to the box office.

From the competition point of view, every salesman on the Pathe force stands an equal chance of getting to the fight, it is stated. It is just a matter of getting the business. Results will be determined in amount of money in bookings not on the number of contracts, it is explained.

Offering Synchronized Music

New Firm to Render Needed Musical Service

THE Music Score Service Corporation with headquarters at 1600 B'way, New York City, announces that it has now available for distribution synchronized music scores for feature attractions bearing release dates subsequent to April 30th. The musical staff of this new service organization is headed by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rivoli, the Rialto and the Criterion theatres, New York. Other musical authorities engaged in the preparation of the synchronized music scores handled by the Music Score Service Corporation are: Carl Edourde, director of the New York Strand orchestra; James C. Bradford, author of over 300 musical scores for screen productions, and Joseph Carl Briel, well-known for his musical interpretations of the D. W. Griffith features.

The following statement has been issued from the New York headquarters regarding the character of service offered exhibitors by the new organization:

"Up to date, the exhibitor has been required to spend a great deal of time and money to assemble the various pieces of sheet music, necessary to properly interpret their screenings from the orchestra pit. Rehearsals of music had to be held, and the best possible scores that could be obtained through various avenues of supply had to be used whether they fitted the picture or not. Now, through the service offered the exhibitors by Music Score Service Corporation for a small rental fee, all these exhibitor handicaps have been overcome.

"Perfectly Synchronized Musical Scores are an actual fact. They are so laid out so that whether an exhibitor uses a piano or an organ, or a symphony orchestra, he can be supplied with the necessary score at a moment's notice. These scores are bound and printed especially for use of the exhibitor, and every title that appears on the screen, appears in the score. The director has but to follow the titles as they appear on the score, to know that the music he is playing, will blend perfectly with the action of the screen. Much time and energy were needed to perfect this idea. The best talent obtainable has worked unceasingly, to make Synchronized Music Scores the success they now are.

"An interesting exploitation booklet has been prepared by the Music Score Corporation, and exhibitors should send for it. Its contents will point the way to perfect Motion Picture presentations, and satisfy patrons of your theatre. The booklet explains in detail the service offered by this enterprising company. An outstanding feature of the service, is that the weekly rental fee remains the same, even if the theatre has a daily change in program, or runs a double feature each day.

"Aside from the home office and exchange at 1600 Broadway, branch offices and exchanges have been opened at 142 Berkley street, Boston, Mass., 414 Mather Building, Washington, D. C., and 1333 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa. A competent staff of salesmen are ready to serve the exhibitor at all offices.

"Bookings can now be made on all the important May releases, prominent among which are: 'Gipsy Blood,' 'Bob Hampton of Placer,' 'Lessons in Love,' 'The City of Silent Men,' 'Sentimental Tommy,' 'Deception,' 'Black Roses,' 'The Miracle of Manhattan,' 'Made in Heaven,' 'Snowblind,' 'Reputation,' 'The House That Jazz Built,' 'Coincidence,' 'The Lamplighter,' 'I Am Guilty,' and 'Lavender and Old Lace.'"

"Home Talent" Scores High Praise

Harry Davis, managing director of the Mission theatre of Los Angeles, has wired Al Lichtman of Associated Producers as follows, in regard to Mack Sennett's new five-reeler, "Home Talent":

"After running Four Horsemen eight weeks I opened to-day with Mack Sennett's new five reel comedy 'Home Talent' with Ben Turpin, Charlie Murray, Phyllis Haver and all the well known favorites. I ran 'A Small Town Idol' five weeks. I predict not less than six for 'Home Talent.' It is one of the most original and laugh provoking comedies Mr. Sennett has yet produced. It can safely be styled a tornado of fun."

Newcomer in Cast of Cosmopolitan Film

Cosmopolitan Productions announces an addition to the cast of "Back Pay," a Fannie Hurst story being directed by Frank Borzage, in the person of Ethel Dura, an actress new to the screen. Miss Dura is a product of one of the New York dramatic schools.

"Pathe Screen Studies" to Cover Interesting Subjects

PATHE announces for early release the first subject of a series of "Pathe Screen Studies," which will embrace in all seven groups of educational and scenic reels. The subjects to be included in the series have been announced in the following order:

1.—"Athletic Movements Analyzed." This number will present views of common athletic exercises as photographed by the ultra-speed camera. Walking, running, jumping, pole-vaulting, shot-putting, etc., will be some of the sports shown. Well-known athletes, such as George S. Bronder, Ralph Runyan, J. P. Pearman, Fred W. Kelly, etc., will be shown in action.

2.—"Yosemite, the Valley of Enchantment."—This subject will include views of scenic grandeur unparalleled throughout the world. A feature of this number will be the presentation of the views in Pathecolor.

3.—"Felling Forest Giants."—Attractive "shots" of the lumbering industry as carried on in the timber country of North Carolina and the Northwest are comprised in this number.

Four of the series are devoted to an interesting camera study of the wonders of plant and animal life. The fourth number of the series is called "Br'er Rabbit and His Pals." This is an intimate study of the rodents, including the squirrel, prairie-dog, mice jerboas and marmots. The fifth subject is "Animal Camouflage," which picturizes the power of protective covering as possessed by the crab, worm, "walking-stick," caterpillars, butterflies, etc. The sixth number presents "Birds of Prey," and the last of the series deals with the highest class of invertebrates—the oyster, cuttlefish, octopus, and the snail—under the title of "Molluscs."

The Pathe home-office issues the following statement in connection with its new series:

"To combine in the happiest manner entertainment with educational value through the medium of the motion picture screen, is the avowed purpose of the series of 'Pathe Screen Studies," the first seven of which are announced for early release. The collection makes a comprehensive library of popular science and biology. The animal life section represents every branch of zoology from protoplasm and one-cells up to mammals. Much of this nature material has passed through the Pathe laboratories in France to receive the beautiful and faithful 'Pathecolor,' whose natural tints lend so much to the absolute verity of the screened result."

"Deception" Issued May 15

Has Run Four Weeks in New York Rivoli; Syd Chaplin's Film Due

MAY 15 is the date set for the general relcase of Paramount's big European production, "Deception," and likewise that of Sydney Chaplin's first special super-comedy, "King, Queen, Joker."

When "Deception" formally starts on its way according to schedule in the first-run houses, it will have completed the fourth week of one of the most remarkable pre-release engagements ever played by a motion picture in New York City. On its opening day, all previous Sunday records at the Rivoli were broken, the picture playing to more than 9,200 paid admission, it is reported. The total for the first week exceeded the former record, held by Cecil B. DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit," by approximately 400, declared a statement from the Paramount headquarters. Then another record fell the second week, when the former second week record, also held by "Forbidden Fruit," was exceeded by 750, it is stated. When it was seen that this remarkable achievement was likely to be realized, it was decided to hold the picture a third week, something never before done at this New York house. The third Sunday exactly 1,200 more people passed through the Rivoli doors than the preceding Sunday, and by the middle of the week the decision was made to hold it four full weeks in deference to public demand.

The Sydney Chaplin production, "King, Queen, Joker," is also a pretentious spectacle, although of a decidedly different type, for comedy is the keynote. But here as in "Deception" are huge sets and backgrounds of surpassing beauty. It will be recalled that Mr. Chaplin went to Europe for most of his exteriors, filming many scenes in France and some in England. So elaborate is this production that Paramount calls it "The 'Ben Hur' of Screen Comedy."

Mr. Chaplin plays a dual role, that of a king and a barber, and with plots and counter-plots against the dynasty and against the plotters, there is said to be many a thrill sandwiched between the grotesque comedy situations. Lottie MacPherson plays opposite the star, in the role of the queen.

A Real Novelty in This One

"Woman God Changed" Introduces Cast in Novel Way; Due for Rivoli

"THE Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan production, will be given a prerelease showing at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, Sunday, May 22nd, and then will be released by Paramount throughout the country.

One of the many unusual features of "The Woman God Changed" is the manner of the introduction of the characters. The entire story is laid in a court room and told in the first person. The main characters are introduced by means of the conversation of the spectators in the court room. The attorney for the defense is shown on the screen, and then the picture flashes to two men among the spectators who in their conversation reveal the character and qualities of the attorney. In like manner two women spectators of the trial point out Anna Janssen, the woman who is on trial for her life.

This novelty makes the picture more compelling than if the characters were introduced in the usual manner, before the main action of the picture. Throughout the production the audience feels itself part of the audience in the court room, in fact part of the jury, sitting in on a great murder trial, declares a statement from Cosmopolitan.

"The Woman God Changed" is a story by Donn Byrne which appeared in Hearst's Magazine. The scenario was written by Doty Hobart. Robert G. Vignola directed the picture.

Many of the scenes in "The Woman God Changed" were taken on the island of Nassau in the Bahama Islands. The interiors were taken in the International Film Studios in New York. The story calls for the tropical atmosphere of the South Sea Islands, which is represented perfectly by the Island of Nassau in the Bahamas, where the exteriors were "shot." Tahitian girls were assembled in New York for the dance hall scenes supposed to be laid in Tahiti, the South Sea Islands.

F. A. Dahme Doing Prizma Colored Titles

Colored titles seem to be becoming a fad. Now the Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., are going to use Prizma titles in their new production "Hearts of the Northland." F. A. A. Dahme, otherwise known in the title game as "FAAD," is painting the illustrations.

Mid-West Stages Gala Week

Four States Unite in Celebrating Founding of First Nat'l Franchise

LEADING theatres in four separate Middle West states united in a celebration of the founding of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. during the first week in May by the showing of productions distributed by the organization. The states are Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and that portion of Missouri which is outside the St. Louis exchange territory. Two hundred and twenty-one theatres took part in the celebration and provided 1326 playing dates for First National releases, it is declared by First National's home office.

The A. H. Blank Enterprises which controls the distribution of First National releases in the two territories represented in the celebration with an exchange at Omaha and another at Kansas City, sponsored the affair which commemorated the ending of the first year of operation of the franchise plan in the territories.

The Omaha and Kansas City newspapers were used with full page spaces by the exchanges to advertise the various theatres in the two districts which were co-operating in the event with the productions each used during the week.

Of the five first run seven day houses in the two largest cities in the territories two chose Charles Ray in "The Old Swimmin' Hole" as their attraction. These were the Rialto Theatre in Omaha and the Royal in Kansas City. The Strand in Omaha ran Norma Talmadge in "The Passion Flower," and the other two in Kansas City, The Newman showed Holubar's "Man-Woman-Marriage" starring Dorothy Phillips, and the New Twelfth Street had the Whitman Bennett production, starring Lionel Barrymore, "The Devil's Garden."

Among "The Big Five," "Passion," the Pola Negri special, led all the others in bookings, in the Omaha territory. "The Kid," and "Man-Woman-Marriage" were tied for second place. "Sowing the Wind" ran third, with "The Oath" which has only just begun to play the theatres there, bringing up the rear.

San Antonio Will Have "Bebe Daniels Week"

The motion-picture interests of San Antonio, Tex., supported by the local merchants and other residents, are preparing to put over a "Bebe Daniels Week" in the near future, according to an announcement just made from the Realart headquarters. Miss Daniels is a Texan by birth.

Fox Expedition to Europe

Production Work in Italy Starts June 10; Edwards to Direct "Nero"

WILLIAM FOX announces the sailing of the first contingent of Fox officials who are to carry on production activities under the Fox banner in Italy. J. Gordon Edwards and Abraham Carlos, and their wives sailed aboard the Aquitania, which left New York May 3rd for England. The Fox party are to go directly to Paris after reaching Cherbourg, and after a few weeks' stay in the French capital they will journey to Rome, where the first Fox production in Italian soil is to be made.

A second party is scheduled to leave on Thursday of this week on the S. S. Patria, proceding directly to Naples. This contingent includes H. G. Plimpton, head cameraman; Benjamin Higgins, second cameraman; Louis Loeffler, film cutter; Edward Roos, auditor, and Henry Armetta, who will be the official interpreter for the expedition.

The members of the second party are to report to Mr. Carlos in Rome on May 25th. As soon as both parties combine forces in the Italian capital, preparations are to begin at once for the filming of "Nero." Actual filming is expected to begin about June 10th. The activities of the Fox producing expedition abroad will be conducted under the direction of Mr. Carlos. Mr. Edwards will direct the production of "Nero."

A large studio has been engaged in Rome, and advices from the Fox headquarters in New York declare that "Nero" will when completed be one of the most spectacular and elaborate productions ever presented on the screen. An Italian circus with its entire menagerie and several leading animal trainers, have been engaged to take part in the picture, it is stated, and Mr. Edwards has expressed his determination to "shoot" scenes of Mt. Vesuvius, which is now in active eruption. It is also his plan to incorporate many of the Italian locations noted for their scenic or historic interest.

Francesca da Rimini, Alexander the Great (probably to be filmed in Greece), the concluding scenes for "Mary Queen of Scots" (to be made in France), and "Joseph and His Brethren" (to be staged in Egypt) are some of the subjects contemplated by the Fox expedition for filming before its return to the United States.

Geo. Beban Completes Tour

To Start Work on a New Subject Following Long Trip

GEORGE BEBAN'S triumphant trans-continental tour, in which he has been appearing personally in connection with his own production "One Man in a Million," has taken him to the coast, where he will rest briefly before resuming work on a new subject.

In point of mileage traveled, Mr. Beban's trip was perhaps the longest ever undertaken by a screen star in making personal appearances. Other stars have made extended trips from time to time, but no prominent player has ever covered so much territory at one time with his own motion picture feature.

Mr. Beban's splendid receptions in every city he visited have convinced him of the value of the "personal appearance" as an exploitation aid, and he will probably take other trips with his productions of the future.

Exhibitors who booked "One Man in a Million" with Mr. Beban appearing personally, appreciate how much this popular player is admired by the thousands who patronize motion picture theatres. Starting in Newark on January 8th, Mr. Beban appeared with "One Man in a Million" at the Branford Theatre for one week. From there Mr. Beban jumped to Atlanta, where his reception was no less gratifying.

Mr. Beban's itinerary then took him West. He stopped at Indianapolis for one week and made a three weeks' stay in Chicago.

His full itinerary was as follows: Saturday, January 8 to 15, Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J.; Monday, January 17 to 19, Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.; Thursday, January 20, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Friday, January 21 and 22, Orpheum Theatre, Nashville, Tenn.; Sunday, January 23 to 26, Memphis, Tenn. (Strand Theatre); Thursday, January 27 to 29, Strand Theatre, Louisville, Ky.; Sunday, January 30 to February 5, Circule Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.; Sunday, February 6 to 12, Met. and Strand, Cleveland, Ohio; Sunday, February 13 to 16, Madison Theatre, Detroit, Mich.; Sunday, February 20 to 26, Ascher's Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.; Monday, February 28 to March 6, Riveria Theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Monday, March 7 to 13, Tivoli Theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Monday, March 14 to 23, Ascher's Circuit, Chicago, Ill.; Sunday, March 27 to April 2, Capitol Theatre, St. Paul, Minn.; Sunday, April 3 to 9, State Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.; Saturday, April 23 to 29, Liberty Theatre, Seattle, Wash.; Saturday, April 30 to May 5, Portland, Ore.; Sunday, May 8 to 14, Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, Cal.; Sunday, May 15 to 17, T. & D. Theatre, Oakland, Cal.; Sunday, May 22 to 28, Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.

Ibanez Film In Pittsburg

"Four Horsemen" Opens at the Pitt Theatre; Received Enthusiastically

WITH that same enthusiasm which marked its presentation in other large cities, Pittsburg welcomed "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," a Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation, which opened at the Pitt Theatre, Monday night before a brilliant audience composed of leaders in the social and business life of the smoky city.

The success which this film version of the great story of Vicente Blasco Ibanez as adapted by June Mathis, had scored in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Detroit, caused its premiers in Pittsburg, to be eagerly awaited. The great popularity of this million dollar production was attested by the big advance sale, the demand for seats indicating that it will prove as popular in Pittsburg as elsewhere.

Both the critics and public warmly commended the Metro version of the greatest novel of the century, the newspapers being unanimous in their indorsement of this presentation. Even standing room was at a premium. Hundreds were unable to get nearer the box office than the lobby of the theatre.

Following the Pittsburg opening Pennsylvania wil soon have another city seeing "The Four Horsemen." Arrangements are being completed for presenting the picture in one of the large theatres in Philadelphia.

With Pittsburg adding its tribute to the growing list of cities enjoying "The Four Horsemen," Boston placed its seal of approval on the production Sunday night, May 1, when it was viewed for the first time at the Tremont Temple Theatre.

Educational's Canadian Office in Big Drive

Announcement was made by the executive offices of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week that the Canadian branches of the corporation, including Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Calgary and Winnipeg, had completed their week's drive for the sale of Educational pictures in Canada.

In making announcement of the completion of the drive E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., said:

"The total contracts closed for our Canadian branches in one week's selling effort was slightly over $40,000. The total business lined up for Educational Pictures Week looks even more encouraging. Our Toronto office alone reports that over 80% of the motion picture theatres in the province of Ontario will be using some of Educational's product during Educational Pictures Week and that the general outlook of the motion picture business in Canada is most optimistic.

"The figures given above do not cover our complete returns, and more are to be received from our Calgary and Vancouver branches. It is believed that when the final returns are known the figures will fall not far short of $50,000 as gross contracts written by our Canadian branches during the sales drive for Educational Pictures Week."

Talmadge Film Titled "Regeneration Isle"

Norma Talmadge's next First National release, formerly titled "Satan's Paradise," founded on the book "On Principle" by Andrew Soutar, and adapted for the screen by Anthony Paul Kelly, has now been definitely titled "Regeneration Isle," and will be released early in August. In this picture, Harrison Ford will be seen in support of Norma Talmadge, and others prominent in the cast are: Montagu Love, Cooper Cliffe, Mabel Bert, Michael M. Barnes, E. Fernandez and Fraser Coulter. Albert Parker directed the production.

The exteriors for "Regeneration Isle" were made in the West Indies, and interesting interiors and exteriors of a big rubber plantation will be shown.

Pickford's New Film Opens

"Thru the Back Door," at Mission Theatre, Hailed as Mary's Best

THE first reports that have been received from California, from both exhibitors and newspaper sources, declare that Mary Pickford's latest United Artists production, "Through the Back Door," which has been announced for release by Hiram Abrams on May 15th, is the high point in her career.

Harry David, Managing Director of the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., where "Through the Back Door" has just started on an indefinite run, wired Mr. Abrams, immediately after his opening day:

"All hail to Mary. 'Through the Back Door,' the opening day of a predicted six-week run, has packed the house continuously with a typical Pickford audience, who have shown their delight and appreciation of her new vehicle with tears, laughs and applause. All morning papers are unanimous in their praise of the picture. Hearty congratulations."

Eleanor Barnes, in the Los Angeles Record, said:

"There will never be another Mary Pickford. Mary out-Chaplined the famous Charlie in one of the cleverest stunts ever screened. Never has the little actress been more appealing than in this play. She stands absolutely alone on her merits. Personally, I think 'Through the Back Door' is Mary's best picture by far, in ages."

The Los Angeles Express said:

"The photodrama brings a laugh and cheer and a sigh to the onlooker. Mary Pickford is so thoroughly human and lovable in this story that Pickfordian admirers will be satisfied. Its keen optimistic sanity wins favor, and it will doubtless enjoy an extended run."

The Los Angeles Herald said:

"Heart throbs and laughs, you will find both in 'Through the Back Door,' Mary Pickford's latest film."

Florence Lawrence, of the Los Angeles Examiner, said:

"Mary Pickford has never been seen in a more appealing role than as Jeanne in 'Through the Back Door.' She hits the high note of comedy in one of the funniest scenes ever filmed."

A. P. Release Wins Tribute

"Life" Lists "Last of Mohicans" as One of "Ten Best" of the Year

"THE Last of the Mohicans," Maurice Tourneur's unusual production of James Fenimore Cooper's famous novel which is being distributed by Associated Producers, Inc., has been honored by "Life" in being chosen as one of the ten best pictures that this year has so far brought to the screen.

In a year which has made great forward strides in the artistic development of the industry, officials of Associated Producers feel gratified that this production should have made such a success. Characterizing it as "an exceedingly well done production," "Life" placed "The Last of the Mohicans" on the highest pedestal of motion picture achievements.

"'Life's' decision merely confirms the reports we have been getting from every section of the country concerning this unusual box office attraction," said Mr. Al Lichtman, general manager of Associated Producers, inc. "The test of a motion picture is in its performance at the box-office," "However fine or artistic it may be, if it does not draw, it means that it has no public favor and that, in my opinion, makes a picture a failure; but 'The Last of the Mohicans' has proven that a motion picture can be not only an artistic success but a commercial success as well and we are constantly in receipt of communications from exhibitors throughout the country who demand more pictures of this caliber."

He declares they are invaluable to any leader who wishes to give perfect musical presentation of features. Robert Morgan, organist at this theatre is also enthusiastic about the scores.

"HEART OF MARYLAND", IS SPLENDID CIVIL WAR FILM

(From the Cleveland Plain Dealer)

Naturally there are great possibilities in making a photoplay from "The Heart of Maryland," and the edition disclosed yesterday at the Allen proved as convincing a war drama as any since "The Birth of a Nation." Tom Terriss, who directed this Vitagraph production with Catherine Calvert in the title role, deserves all credit for his work. He has chosen a cast that is balanced in every detail; he has some tremendous battle scenes; and there is no flagging of interest from the first peaceful scene showing the valley of the Potomac to the final stirring climax —there are many of them—and the closing fade-out.

Of course every Civil War play has about the same general plot—the division of family ties and the shattering of embryonic romances with the division of North and South. Belasco gained his big effect in the stage production with a dramatization of "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight." The heroine clung to the bell clapper of the country church to still the alarm while her Northern lover escaped through the Confederate lines. This remains, naturally, the big moment; but there are others, with effective battle scenes outstanding in contrast against bits of Southern scenery and some particularly pleasing interiors.

The play has been followed in detail—the love of Maryland Calvert for Alan Kendrick; the romance of Spitfire Nanny and her Southern swain, Bob; and the tragedy of Maryland's brother, sent into his own home as a member of the Northern secret service; and, of course, the villainous Thorpe, who betrays both North and South, doing double duty as a spy.

As a matter of fact, "The Heart of Maryland" proves even a better picture than a drama—though it brought first substantial recognition to Belasco and fame to Mrs. Carter. Lincoln, Lee and Grant are introduced for a moment at various times. Artistic touches are found in legitimate comedy relief; and the effectiveness of the offering is enhanced by the musical setting by Philip Spitalney and his overture, "The Spirit of '61," which prepares the audience for it.

Miss Calvert makes a striking Maryland, and Crane Wilbur is a pleasing figure as the Northern lover. William Collier, Jr., makes much of the ill-fated brother, and Felix Krembs is convincingly villainous as Thorpe. The Nanny of Victoria White and the Gen. Kendrick of Henry Hallam, veteran of the screen, deserve a word of commendation. Elaborately staged, there is a multitude of infantry and cavalry, and the period dress is historically correct. It is an artistic achievement and one that reflects great credit upon Mr. Terriss.

A touch of novelty in the overture is found in the introduction of banjos and a male quartet, and the rendition of "Maryland, My Maryland," as a quartet number, as the first scenes unfold.

Hughes Original for Moore

Goldwyn Star in "From the Ground Up"; Other Production Activities

RUPERT HUGHES is the author of the next Goldwyn starring vehicle for Tom Moore, it is entitled "From the Ground Up." It is an original screen story and Mr. Hughes prepared the continuity as well as writing the scenario. Moore has just completed the photography on "Beating the Game," by Charles Kenyon, under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. The film is now being edited.

Reginald Barker has started production on "Poverty of Riches," the Leroy Scott original previously announced as "The Mother." Leatrice Joy has been assigned to play the lead. Others in the cast are DeWitt C. Jennings, David Winter and Roy Laidlaw, Arthur F. Statter prepared the continuity.

Director Frank Lloyd returned to the cast last week with Phoebe Hunt, Jack Holt, John Harron and Gloria Hope from New York where the Times Square scenes for Rita Weiman's "The Grim Comedian" were photographed. The photography on that photoplay has now been finished and Director Lloyd is preparing to get under way with Katherine Newlin Burt's first original screen story, "The Man from Lost River." Lambert Hillyer has prepared the continuity for this story and House Peters has been engaged for the leading role. No other members of the cast have as yet been selected.

Patricia Palmer and George Cooper have been added to the cast of the Mary Roberts Rinehart original temporarily called "The Glorious Fool," which E. Mason Hopper is directing.

Wallace MacDonald, who plays an important role in support of Will Rogers in the picturization of Edward E. Kidder's famous old comedy, "A Poor Relation," was married on May 5 to Doris May. Their honeymoon will be delayed until after the photography on "A Poor Relation" has been completed.

Dempsey Trains in Studio

Title Holder in Callahan Studio; Production Not to Be Delayed

JIMMY CALLAHAN who has formed the Callahan Comedy Co., in Atlantic City six weeks ago and immediately leased as a studio a piece of the Curtis Airport at Atlantic City with its tremendous acreage, announces what he terms "Irish Luck."

Two weeks ago he took his company to Atlantic City and went to work on the interiors for three comedies which he began while in New York. A week later good luck strode into the picture in the person of Jack Kearns, manager for Jack Dempsey who will fight Carpentier for the world's title.

Kearns wanted a place where Dempsey could train for this fight. The Curtis Airport was just the place. The two officers' houses could be utilized for Dempsey's official family—manager, trainers, boxing partners, etc.; one of the big hangars would serve admirably for a gymnasium and the spacious grounds would furnish Jack with ample room for his track and open-air training.

So the Callahan Comedy Company will give way to Jack Dempsey at the Curtis Airport station till the 15th of June, and Jimmy will be several thousand dollars the richer as the result of his quick decision.

His acceptance of the Kearns-Dempsey proposition will in no way interfere with his productions or his releases, the first of which, "Jimmy's Last Night Out," will be released Decoration Day.

Refuses to Photograph Clara Homan Film

PETE SMITH in a wire just received from the Coast declares that Rene Guissart, chief photographer for the Marion Fairfax production, "The Lying Truth," refused a record salary of $500 a week to photograph a Clara Smith Hamon picture.

"It is evident," says the telegram, "that persons interested in the Hamon enterprise are going through with the production of the picture, starring the slayer of the Oklahoma oil man, despite the protest of practically everyone in the industry. Guissart states he will not be a party to the production of this picture which is against the best interests of the business. Marion Fairfax awarded Guissart a long-term contract today as a result of his stand. Guissart was approached on the matter by John Gorman who, it is understood, will direct the Hamon picture and who has recently produced a number of pictures here."

Reports Thriving Conditions in Mexico

Returning from a thirteen months' trip through Central and South America, N. A. Reichlin, Goldwyn's representative in Latin America, arrived last week in New York.

Mr. Reichlin made a prolonged stay in Mexico City which was his last stop before returning to New York, and had a new slant to report upon the motion picture industry there.

"Mexico," he said, "has never been so prosperous as at the present time, due to the confidence of the public in the present administration, and the favorable rate of exchange between that country and the United States. The Mexican people are inveterate movie patrons, and support their cinemas wholeheartedly.

"It is my opinion, from observation, that it takes the distributor in Argentine and Brazil two or three times as long to take in their initial outlay for a picture as it does the distributor in Mexico. The country is now rich and thriving, having awakened from the coma of past decades, and this, together with the fact that American productions are in popular demand at this time, seems to me to forecast the 'fall of low prices.'"

"Caligari" Showing at $1 Top in Chicago

"The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," which Goldwyn is releasing in this country, has been booked for an indefinite run at Chicago's handsome theatre, the new Ziegfeld, on Michigan Boulevard, right near the Blackstone, at $1 top scale. The first showing took place Saturday night, May 7, and drew a capacity audience.

"Caligari" has also been booked at Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo and Miller's theatre, Los Angeles.

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE FILM CENTRES

With "News" Correspondents

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

FLORIDA

Paul Gilmore has started work on a motion picture, which will be known as "Florida First." Scenes will be taken all over the State, and many of the Florida industries will be given space in the picture.

The Sans Souci theatre, of Tampa, Fla., which has been closed since last September, reopened Sunday, April 10, with pictures and tabloid.

Special performances are being advertised in several of the Tampa, Fla., theatres for the benefit of the China Famine Relief. Special pictures, with Norma Talmadge, and four minute speakers, will be the attraction.

The ministers of St. Augustine, Fla., held a meeting recently and protested against the showing of motion pictures on Sunday. Baseball and golf also received a rap.

Braxton Beacham, the former owner of the three theatres of Orlando, Fla., now controlled by the S. A. Lyncb Enterprises, will get back in the game, so it is reported.

DETROIT

Dave Mundstock, of Strand Features, a state rights exchange, has purchased enough product to keep his force of salesmen busy for months. He has contract for three Curwood pictures, "The Heart of the Northlands." "Jacqueline," and "Love and the Law," "Are You Legally Married?" starring Irving Cummings, "You Find It Everywhere," starring Herbert Rawlinson, 52 Twee Dee comedies, 52 comedies with Bud Duncan, and all Reelcraft pictures.

It is reported that Bert Williams, manager of the La Salle Garden and Palace theatres, will act in a supervisory capacity over the new Macomb theatre in Mt. Clemens, which will offer vaudeville and photoplays, opening some time in July.

Larry Hayes has joined the Standard Film exchange forces to handle "The Son of Tarzan" serial. Art Hoganson, formerly of Pathe, and more recently manager of the Koppin circuit of theatres, is now with Robertson-Cole as city salesman.

Clara Kimball Young visited Detroit Wednesday and Thursday and appeared at the Madison theatre. In between she spoke at the Rotary Club, addressed a woman's club, presented Ty Cobb with a roll of film and visited police court. The police reserves were called out to restore traffic in Grand Circus Park in front of the theatre, the crowds were so great.

Price reductions seem to be the order of the day in Detroit theatres. Recently the Miles, Orpheum, Regent and Colonial theatres dropped from 60 to 50 cents for the best seats at night. Now the Liberty has dropped to 20 cents and the Strand on Grand River avenue to 25 cents. The Palace on Monroe avenue and other theatres in this district have taken 10 cents off their prices.

SAN FRANCISCO

Most of the bookers in San Francisco exchanges have joined a social organization which they have formed.

Metro executives of the Western territory will convene in the new Metro exchange building in San Francisco on May 13. W. E. Atkinson, general manager of the Metro exchanges, and Harry Lustig, Western district manager, will see the exchange building for the first time when they come to the conference. F. W. Voigt, manager of the San Francisco exchange, has returned from a trip in the San Joaquin valley and reports prospects good there, although there has been a slump in that district for a few weeks. Mr. Voigt returned along the coast territory from Los Angeles with Frank Costello, general manager of the Turner and Dahnkin circuit.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" opens at the Current theatre, a legitimate house, in June. The second round of Buster Keaton comedies has been sold to the California theatre at double their first round price, it was learned at the Metro exchange.

M. Lowry, former manager of Emmick's Peerless Film Exchange, is now manager of the Garden theatre in Burlingame.

NEW ORLEANS

The Blizzard Sales Co., of Los Angeles, is opening a Southern distributing agency at 228 Baronne street, New Orleans. A. B. Carpenter and T. W. Frost, formerly Texas exhibitors, are to be in charge.

A. Harrison, Jr., president of the Harcol Film Company, has returned from Chicago where he attended the meeting of the Safety Council. While north he arranged to make an industrial lumber film and another industrial film, both for national distribution. On his way back he established some agencies of his firm in Tennessee and Arkansas. The Harcol Film Co. has just completed three reels for the Norwegian Seamen's Mission of New Orleans, Gulfport and Mobile. The picture shows the facilities of the three ports and is titled in Norwegian. One of the prints will be shown all over Norway with a DeVry projector.

Eugene Pearce has gone to the Federation convention in Atlantic City. He is expected to return in ten days.

"The Saenger," the Saenger Amusement Co.'s new $250,000 theatre in Monroe, La., was opened last week. Officials of the company attended the opening.

WESTERN NEW YORK

The Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association will stage a big benefit performance in Elmwood music hall, June 6, for the Starving Children of Ireland fund. Such stars as Norma Talmadge and Thomas Meighan and a number of stage luminaries are expected to attend.

Charles R. Rogers, general sales manager for Robertson-Cole, was in Buffalo last week. He visited the local exchange, where he was besieged by a large number of exhibitors and exchangemen who were anxious to congratulate the former Buffalonian on his ascendancy in the film world. While in town, Mr. Rogers and Howard F. Brink closed seven of the company's biggest productions with M. Slotkin, manager of the Olympic theatre.

"The Kid" will be shown at the Shubert-Teck theatre, Buffalo, for a week run, commencing Sunday, May 29, according to an announcement by E. J. Hayes, local First National exchange manager. The Teck is one of Buffalo's big legitimate houses. Ben Davis will come to town to exploit the comedy. Mr. Hayes has signed the Rialto, Piccadilly, Fay's and Victoria, Rochester, for "The Kid," for week runs day and date. Jackie Coogan in "Peck's Bad Boy" will be shown at the Buffalo Mark-Strand soon.

The Carroll theatre, Rome, N. Y., will be enlarged to 1,400 seats and remodeled under its new owners and incorporators, Joseph Schwartzwalder, C. D. Blessing and Joseph Kallett. These three have purchased the Carroll building. Mr. Kallett will be resident manager.

Burglars attempted to enter the Maxine theatre in South Buffalo one morning last week, but were frightened away at the approach of a patrolman. Thirteen holes were bored in one of the side doors. George Hannv, Jr., is manager of the Maxine.

Among Western New York theatres which will close for the summer are the Arcade, Newfane; Clinton, Clinton; Y. M. C. A., Painted Post and Camillus Cutlery Co. theatre, Camillus.

ST. LOUIS

Jack Weil, manager of the Goldwyn Exchange, left this week for Los Angeles to attend the Goldwyn convention.

The New Grand Central, Skouras Brothers' leading first run house, will show Mary Pickford's latest release, "Through the Back Door," day and date with the West End Lyric for a week's run beginning May 21.

The United Artist Corporation has contracted with William Fox for the showing of D. W. Griffith's latest production, "Dream Street," for an indefinite run in the Liberty theatre at an advance scale of prices.

The daylight saving ordinance which threatened St. Louis exhibitors has been quashed by the City Board of Aldermen. The bill, if passed, would have prevented exhibitors who operate open air theatres from giving more than one nightly show. The movement was backed by the Chamber of Commerce and numerous leading local industries, but met defeat at the hands of the St. Louis Motion Picture Owners' League.

RICHMOND

Hopewell, the little Virginia town which sprung up "over night" during the war, has set the pace for both large and small cities of this State by declaring, through its corporation court, that Sunday moving pictures are a necessity.

Since the ban was lifted last week, authorizing Sunday pictures, managers of both houses declare that they played to capacity houses all day Sunday.

During the closing session of the Women's Missionary Council of the Methodist Church, South, last week, an endorsement of a federal censorship of moving pictures was overwhelmingly voted.

SAN DIEGO

The Garden theatre at La Jolla, a suburb of this city, has been sold by Charles Welstead, the Shepherd block, in which it is located, having been bought by Dr. L. N. Isaacs and Louis A. Stutz. Mr. Stutz, who is now operating the Palace theatre in this city, will also manage the Garden. Two of the latest types of Power's machines have been installed and the theatre has been equipped with a $5,000 organ. The Garden has a seating capacity of 500, and the new management will open it for six nights a week, closing it on Sundays only, which is an increase of three nights over the former program. "Behold My Wife" was the opening picture shown by the new management on the night of April 29, it being presented to a packed house.

Clara Smith Hamon has been a recent visitor here, and while in the city announced that she would produce a series of films if she could secure the desired location. Not getting any enthusiastic encouragement from local interests she returned to Los Angeles, and no further announcement has been forthcoming.

Miss Mabel Van Buren, in private life, Mrs. E. C. Joy, who is now playing in films at the Lasky Studio, has been visiting her daughter, Miss Katherine Van Buren, the new star at the Strand theatre.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Ed. C. Foy, head of the Foy Neighborhood theatres in Dallas, Texas, has added another house to his string of four strongholds, having purchased the Blue Bird theatre at Oak Cliff.

Alexander Hughes, formerly assistant manager, has been promoted to active manager of the Ideal theatre at Corsicana, Texas, and has taken charge.

Giles & Ewing have bought the interest of W. T. McQuade in the National theatre at Leonard, Texas.

H. A. Brownlee has resigned as manager of the Orpheum theatre at Waco, Texas, and has been succeeded by Guy C. Harrison, temporarily.

The Queen theatre at Meridian, Texas, has been purchased by Jas. D. Knight and Creston Hernbuckle. The house will be remodelled both inside and out.

R. L. Walker and Lee Walker have purchased the Rex theatre at Lampass, Texas, from J. D. Cassell and associates and will make many improvements.

Last Tuesday in the corporation court at Burkburnet, Texas, the case of the State vs. H. D. Hord, charged with operating a moving picture theatre on Sunday, resulted in a hung jury. There are several other cases still pending against Mr. Hord on the same charge.

The Capital theatre was completely destroyed by fire at Newton, Ark., last week, entailing a loss of about $10,000 fully insured. The Capital will be rebuilt as soon as possible. Fire is supposed to be of incendiary origin.

ABOUT PLAYERS

NORMA TALMADGE, for the first time, made an appearance upon the legitimate stage at the performance given by the Actors' Equity Association, recently. Miss Talmadge commenced where many never reach, by impersonating a Shakespearean character, "Mistress Ford," one of the "Merry Wives of Windsor." Marion Davies, who had not appeared upon the stage since her withdrawal from the Zeigfeld Follies in 1917, also impersonated another of the lively ladies who amused "Falstaff," the character assumed by Tom Wise. Miss Davies was cast for "Mistress Page" and the three carried their important part of the great all star pageant to perfection. Both Miss Talmadge and Miss Davies believe that Hazzard Short would be an ideal director of motion pictures.

Lucy Fox, an added attraction to the Pathe serial offerings produced and directed by George B. Seitz, recently had her first experience on a "serial location" near Ausable Chasm. From a twenty-two foot bridge, she was directed to jump. She thought the cavity spanned by the structure was a wicked looking landing place, but with necessary pluck, she took the first thrilling venture. Having safely returned to New York, Miss Fox is of the opinion that the thrills one gets from watching a Seitz serial are trivial. She recommends working in one, to know what a breath-holding episode is really like.

Ethel Dwyer, upon return from Porto Rico to New York, in early spring, was immediately engaged to play a prominent role in "Temptation," the working title of a picture made in Gloversville, New York, for the Blazed Trail Productions, which work she has now completed.

Gladys Valerie was of the opinion that "types" were only selected for motion pictures. But to her amazement, while waiting in the office of a motion picture producer regarding a part recently, she learned that the reason a strange man kept looking intently at her was that she was "just the type" for a part in musical comedy, which he was casting. Finally, he secured an introduction and voiced his opinion to Miss Valerie. "Now, if you can sing, the engagement is open to you." Miss Valerie, possessed of an unusually good voice, therefore, will accept the offer, unless the competition for her services in the motion picture proves too strong.

Two screen actresses who aided in making a success of the Actors' Equity show, Norma Talmadge, First National star, and Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan's featured player

Maude Malcolm, a forthcoming popular ingenue is making rapid strides for one of the tender age of seventeen. She was engaged by Director Edward José for a small part in "Desperate Heritage," a Vitagraph production starring Alice Joyce, but made such an impression when rehearsing, that she was given a much more important role, which is said to have been played to perfection. Miss Malcolm is a slender, dark eyed and dark haired youngster with evident possibilities. Perhaps one might point out that she is peculiarly like May MacAvoy, who recently scored a hit in the John S. Robertson production of "Sentimental Tommy."

Having completed her work in "The Lotus Eaters," in the distinguished company headed by John Barrymore, Anna Q. Nillson has left her home, in Sweden for a trip which will also include places in Norway, after which she will visit in Paris and London before returning to America.

Theodore von Eltz has been about the busiest young man in the California film colony recently. While he was playing at the Goldwyn studios in the day time in a Mary Roberts Rinehart picture tentatively called "The Glorious Fool," he was also appearing at night at the Community Playhouse in "The Boy Comes Home;" and while both of these were under way he was asked to play in "Mrs. Dane's Defense" with the Vagabond Players. He had to learn his part for this between Friday and Monday. Mr. von Eltz should qualify, we think, for the job of efficiency expert.

Another screen celebrity has joined the Actors Equity Association, Robert Gordon, whose membership immediately mustered him into service in one of the musical numbers, in which he found many of his screen player friends could sing and dance as well as follow direction before a motion picture camera.

The Katherine MacDonald Company this week began filming "Man's Game" under the direction of J. A. Berry. Part of the cast has been selected to date and consists of Eddie Burns, Henry A. Barrows, Dwight Crittendon, Wade Boteler.. . ...

ABOUT DIRECTORS

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, director of specials for Cosmopolitan, released by Paramount, is nearing completion at International studios of "Enchantment," starring Marion Davies. This is Mr. Vignola's first production with Miss Davies, although he has directed "The World and His Wife," "The Passionate Pilgrim," "Straight Is the Way" and "The Woman God Changed" for Cosmopolitan.

"Enchantment" was adapted by Luther Reed from the story by Frank R. Adams. It is the story of a love-sick girl of the flapper age and is ideally suited to Miss Davies' unusual talents. Beautifully invested with special sets designed by Joseph Urban, "Enchantment" is the type of story at which Mr. Vignola excels. It is a light comedy with a little touch of pathos here and there varying the smooth flow of humor, and while it is still in process of production it promises to be one of the finest things that Mr. Vignola has yet done.

Nothing has been spared to make this production a big one. Marvelous settings of a richness seldom equalled and never surpassed on the screen, are one of the many features. One particular episode dealing with a fairyland pageant is declared to be the most gorgeous presentation of scenery, costumes and life ever portrayed in motion pictures.

Mr. Vignola's handling of this stupendous production is highly creditable and brings new honors to a director who is already numbered among the few really great artists of the screen.

Charles Giblyn, upon arrival in Hollywood, after an absence of many months, was immediately pressed into service as acting president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, which, so it happens, he was instrumental in founding. William Desmond Taylor, who was popularly elected as director of the Hollywood organization for 1921-22, is temporarily incapacitated to preside at the meetings, spending his time, against his will and the best wishes of all his friends and admirers, in the hospital. Mr. Giblyn took up the work at a time when there is plenty to do, the M. P. D. A. being among those active organizations to sift to the bottom the situation regarding the importation of German made films into America. Mr. Giblyn is still under contract to direct pictures for William Fox, having made four starring Pearl White, including "Tiger's Cub," "The Mountain Woman," "The Thief" and one not yet released.

Unusual significance became attached to rumors that Elmer Clifton was leaving the David Wark Griffith organization to launch his own producing company, when it became known that he had purchased three stories for film production. This, indeed, looked like business.

Mr. Clifton himself admits that he has purchased Gerald Chittenden's "Latch Strings," the story of which has its locale in Central America, where the author spent much time. Mr. Chittenden's romance deals with the turbulent topics of ten years ago when the few white men were adventurers and even fewer white women were hardly pioneers. These women, like the pioneers of our own west, brought courage and something of the homeland to their men. The director-producer believes Mr. Chittenden's story to be an epic of the real American in a foreign land, touching, as it does upon our own empire builders.

Mr. Chittenden himself, a New Yorker, and a graduate of Yale, was at one time a teacher. Traveling abroad, he contributed to the better magazines and found time to write a novel, "The Anvil of Chance," but "Latch Strings" has been widely read and favorably received. Director Clifton has other plans, which he has yet to announce, including the titles of two other purchases he has made, of moment.

Frank Lloyd, when here from the coast filming New York scenes for "The Grim Comedian," Rita Weiman's first photoplay for Goldwyn, had a large problem on his hands when he went to take scenes in front of the Gaiety theatre. Before the cameras had been set up, a crowd had collected, and the problem was to keep them out of the way so the director and cameramen would have room to work.

Mr. Lloyd first employed gentle-toned requests. Then he became firmer and finally, threats proving unavailing, he drew a shiny something from an inside pocket and flashed it in the faces of those in the front ranks with an order to stand back, please. It was only a bunch of keys, but it did the trick. Lloyd hoped they would mistake it for a police badge, but its possible, he says, they thought it was a gun.

John Joseph Harvey will start directing June 1, upon productions for the Invincible Photoplays, Inc., and is already busily engaged upon preliminary preparations. The stories, written by Arthur B. Reeve, will be written with a view to starring "Pauline," the noted hypnotist.

A one-minute interview with Director Tod Browning, which he admits was on nothing in particular, brought out the following startling answers to the questions put to him:

Q. Why is the silent drama played on the silver sheet?

A. I dunno—I always thought silence was golden.

Q. What is the death rate in Hollywood?

A. The good die young, but the ambitious dye blonde.

Q. What are the nine wonders of motion pictures?

A. The soft-focus lens, an ingenue without a "mommah." "I wonder if——" and six birds without an alibi.

Q. What do you think of censorship?

A. Reply censored. ! ! (!!

Director Browning is producing "Fanny, Herself," in three shifts, planning, shooting and cutting. He is working on a one-act play for vaudeville, in his spare time.

Seen among other enthusiastic spectators who attend the second annual entertainment given by the Actors' Equity Association, were Directors Robert G. Vignola and Robert Ellis. The travesty upon the taking of scenes on location with Frank Craven as director and Thomas Meighan as cameraman, seemed to have some particular humor for the two bona fide directors, especially when John Emerson, a member of M. P. D. A., as well as president of the Equity, appeared as an unimportant member of the motion picture company. There were many more directors of motion pictures in attendance, which alone could have assured Mr. Craven of enough laughs to carry his part of the entertainment. But players, familiar with directorial methods also found considerable amusement in the burlesque.

Leroy Scott, of the Eminent Authors group, has completed his first original photoplay for Goldwyn, "Poverty of Riches," and Reginald Barker is preparing to put it into production immediately. "Partners of the Night," Mr. Scott's first Goldwyn picture, was a screen adaptation of his story of the same name, directed by Paul Scardon.

The S. Rankin Drew Post Show

Being the theatrical unit of the American Legion, The S. Rankin Drew Post is naturally in a position to reach into the firmament of stars and make its choice. This being the base, its annual show has become one of the big events of the season, which is scheduled to take place at the New York Hippodrome Sunday evening, May 15th. This post, named in memory of the first actor killed in the World War, Sidney Rankin Drew, the son of the famous comedienne, comprises in its membership the men of the allied amusements, who were in active service. It maintains quarters, looks after the employment of men in its line of profession, and takes care of the wounded.

One of the outstanding features of the bill will be the appearance of Miss Ethel Barrymore, which will be notable from the fact that she will be seen in the play of "Carrots," supported by Bruce McRae. Others on the bill will be: D. W. Griffith, Frank Bacon, Dorothy Jardon, Dorothy Gish, James Rennie, Tom Lewis, Mary Hay, Marion Davies, six Brown Bros., Duncan Sisters, Montague Love, Gus Edwards & Co., the Dumbells Co., Helene Grenelle, Maurice Summers, Arthur Rankin, Johnny Hines, Gordon Standing, Gilbert Rooney, Geo. Lynch, Roy Lloyd, Eugene O'Brien.

The sketch, "A Bit of Eighteen," which was played with great success on the other side, will be presented by a cast made up entirely of men of the post who had overseas duty.

Fox's Albermarle Opened March 16 to Brooklyn Public

New Theatre Given Close Attention By Projection Engineers

William Fox's Albemarle theatre, which opened on March 16, is easily one of the most beautiful theatres ever erected for the presentation of motion pictures and vaudeville.

Built at a cost of nearly a million dollars by Barr Bros. and John Manheimer in the beautiful Flatbush section of Brooklyn, it contains many new features of more than average interest to the exhibitor.

The theatre seats 2800 people and is planned throughout with an eye to the comfort and enjoyment of its patrons. Its sumptuous appointments and elegant furnishings being the equal of any of the Broadway houses.

The decorative treatment of the interior is especially pleasing, being carried out in what might be termed a modern handling of the style of the French Empire and marking a successful attempt on the part of the designer to get away from the general lines and the almost traditional over-elaboration of the average movie palace. One is immeasurably impressed by the singular beauty and monumental character of the architectural treatment which gives the auditorium an air of spaciousness and elegance rarely met with.

The treatment of the boxes, sounding board and proscenium is distinctly different. Its simplicity really enhances its beauty and is a welcome relief from the expensive elliptical arches, pendentives and vaulted ceilings so commonly used. A careful inspection also reveals a more sparing use of ornamental plaster than we have become accustomed to without any apparent loss in effectiveness or beauty. The ornate character and loveliness of the whole being maintained almost silely by the careful placing balance and character of the ornaments used.

The color scheme is an unusual and exceptionally pleasing combination of rich varying tones of gray and old gold relieved with old blue and occasional accents of bright color, which lends itself to the architectural treatment and adds to the beauty of the whole, while the mulberry and old gold wall coverings and drapes create an impression of quiet elegance and is seldom found.

The lobby is monumental in size and is quite distinctive. Most of it is two stories high and the walls are beautifully done in black and gold marble on a grand scale. The lobby display is cleverly handled by using velour panels inserted in the marble walls as a background, instead of the familiar heavy frames. This is a pleasing innovation which does not detract in any way from the decorative beauty of the whole. At the right of the lobby as you enter is a charming and beautiful lounging room for the use of the patrons, which in addition to its beautiful furnishings houses a splendid portrait of the first "Earle of Albemarle," for whom the theatre was named, painted by the well known artist, Mr. Wm. D. L. Dodge.

The most striking feature of the entire treatment is the location of the projection booth. The booth is located underneath the balcony, as shown on the diagram, and is concealed by the architectural treatment that most people would fail to discover its location, without being told. The arrangement and the location of the booth was designed by the architect, Mr. Harrison G. Wiseman, who collaborated with Mr. E. S. Porter, of the Precision Machine Co., Inc.

Lack of space prevents calling attention of many fine details in connection with various rooms in the theatre, and it is suffice to say that they are all carried out in the same style, and in keeping with the rest of the house.

The dressing rooms are larger than the average, all of them having outside light and ventilation. They are equipped with mirrors and the latest appliances of all kinds.

The stage is noteworthy, owing to its arrangement and location of the switchboard, which permits the electrician to handle the lights without encroaching on any of the working space on the stage. The electrical equipment of the stage is up to the minute in all respects, and all of the apparatus and appliances are of the latest models and designs. Large parking space has been provided in the rear for the automobiles of the patrons.

Rialto Theatre in Milwaukee

AN ideal small house suitable for the "grind" variety becoming so popular in the downtown districts of our large cities is the new Rialto theatre in Milwaukee. The structure, which seats 871 persons, is also well adapted as a model for a small town motion picture theatre.

The Rialto has a 55-foot frontage on Milwaukee's principal thoroughfare. It is a continuous house, running from 8 a. m. to 1 a. m., and naturally depends a great deal upon its flashy front for attracting patrons. The huge canopy, which covers the entire sidewalk in front of the theatre, has provisions for two rows of electric letters on three sides. A number of these letters is also located across the entire front of the theatre, directly above the entrance. The inside ceiling of the canopy is one mass of nitrogen lamps, which in itself results in a splendid flash. A large electric sign above the canopy contains running lights in thre colors, with the name of the theatre in large nitrogen lamps.

Because of the "grind" variety of business which the Rialto caters to, it was felt that a large lobby was unnecessary. The entire front of the theatre is composed of glass doors which lead into a foyer about 5 feet wide. From this foyer two doors lead into the auditorium and two stairways to the balcony.

White glazed Terra Cotta

"AS a building material for theatres, Terra Cotta has no equal." That's what Mr. C. W. Diebel says. Mr. Diebel owns the Liberty Theatre, at Youngstown, Ohio, pictured above.

You know at a glance that Liberty Theatre does a good business. It looks successful. The clean, handsome exterior invites the public to go inside. It's the kind of a theatre people like to go to—that has its own appeal outside of its program.

Now look closely at the picture; note the unusual beauty and simplicity of the facade. Designed in the conservative Adam style, it is executed in lustrous white glazed Terra Cotta. The pilasters, the graceful garlands and mouldings, the urns that adorn the parapet—all these, with their variety of shape and form, are in this durable, beautiful material.

Terra Cotta is permanent. Neither time nor weather will mar or change Terra Cotta in any way. Should dirt accumulate, it can easily be washed off with soap and water.

Terra Cotta is equally well suited to the construction of large and small theatres. And when used for re-facing the front of old theatres it gives all the attractiveness of a new building for the mere cost of a new front.

Ask your architect to show you how Terra Cotta can improve your motion picture theatre. He can specify any shape, color or texture he desires. Terra Cotta expresses them all.

You will be interested in our brochure, "The Theatre." It shows pictures of successful motion picture theatres the country over. "Terra Cotta Defined" will tell you the whole interesting story of Terra Cotta. You may have both these brochures for the asking. Gold-Seal Cork Carpet, soft and quiet as a deep woven carpet and less expensive, makes an ideal and sanitary floor. Made in ten attractive shades. Extremely durable and wear-resisting.

For your lobby, Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum, made in brown or green. It is good looking, sanitary, easy to clean, and impervious to the wear of heavy foot-traffic.

A Guaranteed Satisfactory Floor for Your Theatre—

LIGHTS flash on. With a great scuffling of feet, the audience trudges out. An eager throng, impatiently waiting for the "Second Show," rushes in pell mell to take their places.

Day after day, year in and year out, this grinding foot traffic goes on. Movie theatres need floors of oak-like durability. Gold-Seal Floorings more than meet this need. They can be laid over old floors as floor-coverings, or as finished floors in new structures.

Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum

This is an extremely durable flooring, made strictly according to U. S. Navy Standard—a composition of fine cork, wood flour and linseed oil, firmly fastened on a strong backing of high grade burlap.

You and your patrons will appreciate this sturdy flooring—you will find it quiet, comfortable, easy to walk on, and non-slippery. Your employees will appreciate a floor so easy to keep clean and in good condition. As it comes in soft brown and green tones, Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is artistically suitable for almost any scheme of decoration.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

If you prefer a floor that is absolutely silent and yielding underfoot, we suggest Gold-Seal Cork Carpet. This flooring, also remarkably durable, is made in pleasing soft shades of green, terra cotta and brown—with polished or dull surface—10 shades in all. But still more important—

Both These Floorings are Guaranteed

Here is the big point—whether you buy Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum or Cork Carpet, you buy Guaranteed Satisfaction. Both of these floorings are sold under the Gold Seal Guarantee—"Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back." In buying Gold-Seal Floorings you are protected against all risk of unsatisfactory results.

134 West 46th St. - - - New York

Two interior views of Saxe's Rialto theatre in Milwaukee. The Foyer at the right is particularly attractive with its period furniture and light fixtures.

In addition to the doors at the front of the theatre there are three separate exits, one on either side of the stage, which leads to an illuminated and paved alley, and the third near the front of the house, which permits egress without coming into contact with persons entering the front doors.

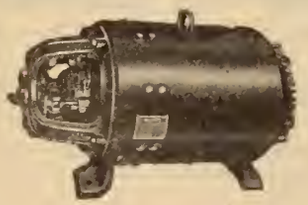
Only a four-foot stage is provided, as it is not intended to put on prologues. Artistic lattice work above and on either side of the proscenium successfully conceals ventilators and pipes of the organ which provides the only music.

The color scheme of the Rialto is old rose, green, gold and ivory. The old rose is predominant; most of the green being supplied by bits of ribbon which form the decorations for the lighting fixtures. The walls are covered with panels of imitation tapestry with a wainscoting of brown stone blocks. Boxes of artificial flowers are used throughout the theatre with a most successful decorative effect.

On ascending the stairs to the balcony the patron passes through a small mezzanine floor most artistically arranged with heavily upholstered furniture and all the convenience of a waiting room. An opening in the ceiling directly over the seats in the rear part of the house enables persons on the mezzanine floor to listen to the music without watching the photoplay.

Here's a Supply House Giving Real Service

A good many farsighted men in this industry have made the statement that the Equipment Dealer, more than anything else, is lacking in the service given the theatre. This indictment is all too true. The number of real merchandizers among the dealers in motion picture equipment would not total over 25. Merchandizing means much more than sending a customer a monthly list of new equipments and accessories. Even a well-edited house organ is not the solution of the merchandizing problem. But both of these items should be part and parcel of any merchandizing plan. There should be a great deal more, however, and in this respect the scheme of the General Supply & Repair Company, of Portland, Ore., is worthy of mention here.



Let Matthew Aperton, manager of this firm, tell the story in his own words:

"First, we have opened our doors to the out-of-town film salesmen to the extent of writing an invitation to each manager to have all telephone calls, telegrams and correspondence come to us here, and we will dispose of it as advised.

"It has always been the custom of the firm to send our man at regular intervals to the various theatres and make mechanical adjustments in the operating rooms, free of all service charges whatsoever. Many worried exhibitors have found our unexpected call a saving of many dollars. Slight adjustments are likely to be made that would otherwise have cost a great deal in time and material for experiments. However, we have found this system weak, for the reason that an unnecessary trip is frequently made to theatres that have perfect projection, and who do not need our assistance, while those really in need are passed up.

"This is where the co-operation comes in. Exchanges weekly suffer a loss of hundreds of dollars through torn and damaged films. With this fact in mind we have written the manager of all local exchanges requesting a report on any such film that comes in to his house. Immediately upon receipt of this report we will send our man to investigate, and no service charges whatsoever are placed against the manager, or the company in question. Should any material replacement be necessary, that, of course, is optional, but we have found that an exhibitor is usually glad to pay a slight fee, if necessary, when he fully realizes that it is going to save him double the amount in the long run.

Isolated Power Plants for the Projection of Motion Pictures

A Paper by R. L. Lee from the Transactions S. M. P. E.

One of the most successful engineers I have had the pleasure of meeting once said that in building a piece of apparatus, he did not try to design it, but asked what it wanted to be and then made it accordingly. Evidently this was the plan under which the lamp engineers worked when they built the powerful incandescent projection lamps which are now being used so successfully. This must be the case, as if there was any way under the sun which to make a successful lamp for the universally used 110-volt service, they surely would have done it, and not built them for 30 volts.

In studying the isolated lighting-plant situation, a plan similar to this must have been followed, as the majority of the plants now being installed are 32 volts instead of 110 volts, which would have been very much more convenient from the standpoint of accessories. I do not believe that it would be interesting to you, or necessary, to go into the reasons why the average farm lighting plant is 32 volts instead of 110 volts. The fact remains that the voltage of both the incandescent motion picture lamp and the individual lighting plant are the same, as it was due to this coincidence that I became interested in incandescent projection, and as a result of this interest, will attempt to tell you a little about the problems encountered and the situation as we have sized it up.

At the present time there are a large number of outfits equipped with independent lighting plants using incandescent projection. This may be divided into the following classes:

First: Portable motion picture outfits for traveling exhibitors who exhibit in localities where commercial current cannot be secured, such as agricultural extension work, educational lecturers, specialty salesmen, etc.

Second: Small portable projectors for schools, churches, lodge halls, etc., in localities where commercial current cannot be secured.

Third: Small theatres having just a few exhibitions a week in isolated districts probably using a local hall which at other times is used for other purposes.

Fourth: Country theatres or small town theatres where other current cannot be secured or is so unreliable that good service cannot be extended to the patrons.

Fifth: Larger theatres where current costs are exorbitant; and Sixth: Large town theatres wishing to protect their service from accidental shut-downs.

The speaker has been in personal contact with these various types of installations and believes that an enormous amount of work will be done in this direction in the future. It has been a rather bumpy road we have had to travel when you consider that at the beginning of this work it was very difficult to secure proper lamp houses for standard projectors, very little was known relative to the limitations of the lamps or the proper method of using them, and the care which must be taken with them, the difficulty of getting projectionists to handle them properly; in fact, this work has been very discouraging at times. I believe that I will be safe in saying that the most of our difficulty was due directly to exaggerated estimates of the ability of the 600-watt 30-volt monoplane filament lamp. I am speaking of this as a result of our experience soon after its introduction. The data we had to go on was that compiled as a result of laboratory tests and which was perfectly correct, providing all conditions were ideal, that the adjustments were made accurately, proper screens used and everything in good working order. However, it was an entirely different problem after an outfit was placed in the hands of the man who knew very little about projection to start with, even though he was quite successful with carbon arc machines, who did not appreciate the necessity for careful adjustments, and where the theatres were not dark enough, where poor screens were used, etc.

After these experiences, therefore, we conducted tests in our own laboratory and then arrived at a definite sized picture and throw for the 600-watt lamp. We instructed our salesmen never to recommend a 600-watt lamp for a picture larger than 9 x 12 and a throw of 80 feet. This was, of course, conservative, as the speaker has seen various installations showing a larger picture at a greater throw very successfully, but as a result of our experience, and considering many conditions which could detract from the success of the installation, we thought it best to specify these limits and the success resulting from this practice more than repaid us for the few installations which were not made due to not having large enough picture.

During the last four years, I have had an excellent opportunity of looking over many pieces of apparatus, and also of observing their operation in the field, and it appears to me that most of the difficulty in the various apparatus is not due to mechanical imperfection but due to the designer not considering the place in which it is to be used and the man or woman who is going to use it. One of the easiest things, and from my observation, the most unsuccessful, is taking some combination of mechanics, or electricity, and attempting to force it onto the people, or in other words, to attempt to educate the public to conform to this piece of apparatus.

One of the most difficult and most successful methods of building a new piece of apparatus is to carefully consider the place in which the apparatus is going to be used and more especially the man or woman who is going to use it, making allowances at all times for those things which the average person will not do, even though he has an instruction book as thick as the Bible.

It appears to me that the degree of perfection of any piece of apparatus is in inverse ratio to the thickness of the instruction book. I therefore believe that in the development of incandescent projection, one of the goals to work for is simplicity of construction and operation, as one of the main talking points of this method of projection is supposed to be simplicity, and the elimination of many of the duties which must be performed when using the carbon arc.

When I first went into this work about the only lighting plant made in any quantities had

Cruikshank Becomes Technical Editor of News

COMMENCING with the next issue, Alex. G. Cruikshank will assume the position of Technical Editor of the News in place of E. L. Bragdon, who has resigned.

Mr. Cruikshank comes from "Farm-Light and Power," where he has been Editor since the inauguration of that publication. He has had a wealth of experience in the various phases of newspaper reporting and editing and this, together with his recent affiliation in the electrical and mechanical field, has fitted him particularly well for his new position with the News.

The new Technical Editor will carry out the service policy that has been found so satisfactory by readers of the News, and its advertisers.

Mr. Bragdon is leaving to accept a position as Editor of "The Patent Commercial."

Only Girl Operator in the South

The Strand theatre at Hattiesburg, Miss., has the distinction of employing the only girl operator in Dixie, Miss Imogen Kimmons. She is twenty years old, pretty and single. Having had almost three years' experience she is thoroughly capable and efficient in the handling of her two Powers 6B machines. It is also a natural consequence that the projection room at the Strand is at all times "as neat as a pin." (Note to other operators: she never smokes in the booth.)

Miss Kimmons is a full-fledged member of the union, carrying I. A. T. S. E. card No. 615 and enjoys the regular salary scale and other union privileges. To say that she is a favorite with everybody on the Saenger circuit is putting it mildly. Moreover she is secretary and treasurer of the Saenger Efficiency Club.

Gentlemen;

We note with interest, and wish to confirm, your article in the Moving Picture trade magazine of the 16th instant, featuring the installation of Powers projectors in our "all night" theatre, the New Grand, Portland, Oregon.

You might be interested to know that our intentions are to equip the entire Julius Sax Theatre Circuit with Powers projectors within a short time, after having given them an eleven year's trial in comparison with other projectors in our various theatres. We might state, also, that the service the General Supply & Repair Company, Inc., your distributors for this territory, is rendering us, and the other users of Powers equipment, is a credit to your firm.

Every wise exhibitor will soon follow in the footsteps of the "Powers man".

Yours very truly,

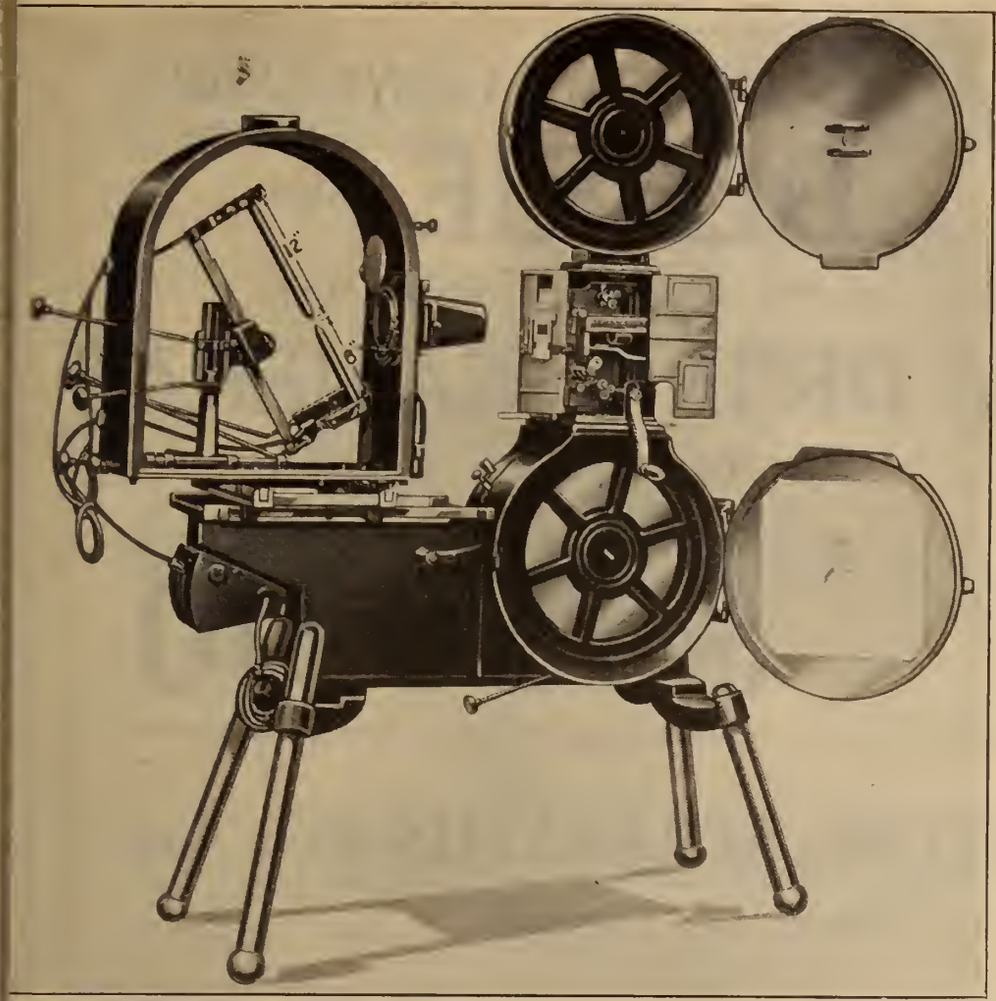
Powers Factory Works All Night for A. P. S.

THE meeting of the American Projection Society at the factory of the Nicholas Power Company on the night of May 8th was a distinctly original idea, conceived and put over in a big way. Members of the Society, representatives of the trade press and others connected with the motion picture industry unanimously agreed that it was a real success. If staying until broad daylight proves anything, which was the time most of the guests left, we should say that the Nicholas Power Company can also feel the meeting was a successful one.

Under the guidance of Mr. S. S. Cassard, Vice President of the Company, assisted by Mr. Merkin, Mr. Birkholm and Mr. Griffin, the visitors were shown through the factory and at every stage of the various manufacturing processes took a deep interest in the operations. The interest these men took in the inspection of the factory of the Nicholas Power Company is a splendid indication that the projectionist of today also takes a real interest in his work and wants to know what is being done by manufacturers for the improvement of motion picture projectors. The Nicholas Power Company has fully realized for a long time that if motion picture machines are to be improved it must come to a considerable extent through the active co-operation of projectionists throughout the country. The man who makes a good projectionist will want to know as much as possible about the machine he operates, and if he sees how that machine is made, knows the manufacturing methods, workmanship and material that enter into that machine, he cannot fail to do better work. The knowledge he acquires in this way will be a practical benefit to the exhibitor and add to the enjoyment of the audience which sees the art of those who create the film properly presented through the craftsmanship of the man who stands up in the little projection room. The plant of the Nicholas Power Company is one of the largest machine shops in New York, and the members of the American Projection Society were shown every process in the manufacture of a modern projector. The raw material, steel bars and bronze blanks, enter the factory of the company and, going through dozens of operations, come out the complete Power's projector.

After the factory inspection the members of the American Projection Society were welcomed by Mr. Edward Earl, President of the Nicholas Power Company, in his usual kindly manner and, aided by his staff, due attention was then given to the social side of the evening. For this part of the program Mr. Earl had the assistance of those already mentioned and in addition Messrs. De Hart, Bird and Mcguire.



This part of the entertainment included serving excellent refreshments and taking the photograph shown on this page. The visitors then adjourned to the Gear Cutting Department and listened to an interesting talk by F. H. Richardson, and a general discussion of a technical nature. The new improvements on Power's type "E" were explained in detail and suggestions and criticisms invited. The last few words of the preceding paragraph explain fully the purpose of the evening and the policy of the Nicholas Power Company. The Company realizes that its staff of experts and its great manufacturing plant will best satisfy the requirements of exhibitors desiring to give their audiences the best possible projection if the active co-operation of all projectionists is enlisted.

As already stated, the party broke up about 5 o'clock in the morning, and this is unquestionable proof that the visitors enjoyed the occasion.

Music Article

of the Civic Orchestra, who said he'd give anything needed to put over better film music and better music in general. . . . With all these authorities and the many others whom I will not attempt to mention, what an opportunity there is in Dayton and all of Ohio for the wide-awake theatre owners to capitalize the interest! Is it not so?

But one point I want to leave clearly without a doubt.

The big live topic was Picture Music.

Since the Ohio Music Teachers' Convention was so interested, it is plain that every other group of teachers and musicians will be equally interested. . . . It is good business to add flame to such interest.

THE NEW MUSIC FORUM

Under this heading the new ideas, queries, suggestions are gathered. This is where the motion-picture interests get together on music.

Fitting the Music to the Picture

Leslie Grossmith

The problem of fitting music to the picture might be wonderfully simplified if the producer would co-operate with the musician in making the first plans. As it is at present, it would seem as if music was too lengthy an expression to meet the many quick actions depicted in the pictures.

As a suggestion, let the producer in planning a picture consult with the musician the details he has in mind. The musician should immediately select a musical number meeting the requirements of the suggested plan, carefully making cuts and omissions, in order not to include any uninteresting or unnecessary passages. The music should be one continuous piece covering the entire action of the first scene or section such as a sonata, symphony, overture, etc. When the musician feels satisfied with his selection it should be performed to the producer for his approval. The inspiration of the music will no doubt suggest invaluable action to the producer and he may slightly change his original plan to fit more exactly the emotion which the music suggests, and possibly he may also lessen or lengthen the scene by a minute or so in order to make an exact fitting. In this way an artistic product would result without in any way hampering the action —in fact it would heighten it—and there would be no further bother in selecting appropriate music. I think many of the regular cue sheets have too many changes, especially in the earlier and undeveloped section of the picture. In a great many cases, not all of course, an entire movement of a sonata or symphony could be performed before the picture develops into any special dramatic incident. Each section should be treated in like manner, till the picture is fully complete and the various necessary moods and changes of music, with occasional flashes and surprises, would be planned.

On the release of the picture a list of the music publishers, suggested cuts and decorations should be published in the official organ, and I firmly believe this would almost solve the difficult problem. I would like discussion on the subject and suggestions as to the best means of bringing about the execution of some such idea.

I have read with great interest the Special Music Supplement of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS which you were so kind as to send me, particularly your own address and that of Mr. Breil.

The whole question of music in connection with the moving picture has taken on an importance of late that bids fair to place it in time on a par with the most dignified phases of the art, and it undoubtedly is opening up a new and fascinating field for both performer and composer.

Our conservatory is not just now in a position to open a department for training of musicians for this purpose, but we are in a sympathetic attitude towards it, and as soon as we are in a condition to do so will be glad to establish such a branch.

I should be very glad, meantime, to hear from your special committee. Very truly yours,

H. RANDOLPH.

Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore, Md.

Mr. J. D. Ehricht, North Tonawanda, N. Y.

The First National Conference of Motion Picture and Musical Interests will certainly not be forgotten for a long time, and Mr. Isaacson's Special Music Supplement of February 19th will remain a valuable guide in the hands of many people in any way connected with these interests. The records of the speeches and discussions is so interesting that it gives you new suggestions every time you take it up again. To those closely connected with one or the other interest, different matters may have been of special importance, but those reviewing the discussions of the conference from a certain distance may perhaps see the points of general importance in a clearer light. In regard to the pictures, our general interest is still attracted by some statements made by Mr. Freund, while in regard to music the suggestions of Mr. Breil must remain under our special consideration.

When Mr. Freund points out to the picture men that there is a wealth of good stories, dramas, etc., which has scarcely been tapped, he evidently wants to lift the film from the ordinary "show" to its proper place, to the rank of an art. This most valuable thought did not seem to find much response, although it is the only conception which can establish the pictures before our more educated people, and which will produce classical films—films of lasting and educational value. We cannot think of the alliance of an industry and an art, but we can quite well see a new art growing up like a young woman, welcomed and assisted by her older sister, the only eternal and therefore ever young art of music. In such company the younger art must learn self-respect and remain true to itself by producing and showing something beautiful—not only in form, color and motion, but also in thought and action, in character. As a true art, the film must not breed vulgarity or crime, but remain attractive by its educating, elevating and refining features. In fact, only such pictures are worthy of the assistance of the musical art and its beauty.

As to the musical interests, Mr. Breil's arguments appear perfectly natural and logical. When speaking of music in this connection, we think, of course, of the pure tonal art, the domain of the beautiful in tone, rhythm, melody and harmony. This art in itself is rich enough to have its own language which wants to be applied directly to the picture. Music has its own expressions for human thoughts, imaginations, and feelings; it has more colors than the painter's palette to make a picture bright and impressive. The use of a song for the accompaniment of a picture may be in place when the person appearing in the film is supposed to sing that song or utter the words of it, otherwise music needs not borrow the means of the human tongue which is understood only by one nationality.

The ideal combination of music and pictures is accomplished when the music has been composed for a certain film, as in the cases of "Queen Elizabeth" and "The Birth of a Nation." Here we come near the grand opera and are reminded of Mr. Freund's suggestions to the picture men. Let us hope for more of such co-operation. In the meantime the cue sheet may serve as a guide, but we doubt whether it will be any substantial help in many of our picture theatres. We are of the opinion that any film that is worth the co-operation of music ought to be worth the accompaniment of its special orchestra which may be augmented according to local conditions, just as theatrical troupes and orchestras are organized for operatic performances. The conductor of the film orchestra must have a chance to select the appropriate music when the pictures are being made. If he is a true musician he will hardly find it necessary to measure all the numbers of his program by minutes and seconds. He will see to it that certain moments of the film are marked and emphasized by the proper music, but he will not cut any good music into pieces on account of frequent changes of the pictures. The audience will undoubtedly prefer a series of complete compositions to a pot-pourri of snatches taken from here and there.

The call for better pictures comes nowadays from all parts of the country. How about better music? If the public is waking up to require a certain moral standard for the pictures, it will soon require the same for the music. The musical education of our people may not have reached such a point that they can express their preference of certain music, but they will surely manifest their discrimination by patronizing that show house which offers the best music—as it was stated at the conference.

To insure the success of a picture, it seems to be imperative not to leave the selection of the music to the local musicians after the arrival of the film, but to organize at least a small—call it a skeleton—orchestra for every good film. That would at once attract a larger and more intelligent audience and not only contribute considerably to the musical entertainment and education of the public, but also give many local musicians the welcome opportunity to play with more routined players and to enlarge their own repertory. And the general standard of the union musician may be restored to that of the days when the union card was not merely the receipt for paid dues, but the certificate of a competent player.

In as much as in these days almost every picture theatre is equipped with an orchestrion, to alternate with the orchestra, it remains to call attention to the necessity of insuring appropriate music from that source. The orchestrion requires an orchestrion player and in the case of an automatic instrument an operator. We certainly do not want an organist, as we do not care for church music in the theatre—but we want an orchestrion player, a man familiar with the essential features of the orchestra which he is to replace, as far as this may be possible. A routined player with a good knowledge of orchestral style and literature can undoubtedly do a great deal to make a picture a success.

The same result, in many cases perhaps even a better result, may be expected from a music roll properly made up and played on an instrument particularly designed for the reproduction of music in truly orchestral style. Orchestrion building has made wonderful progress in our days. The late Robert Hope-Jones has enriched the industry with his Unit Orchestra. These modern instruments have practically outgrown the control of the human player and are not complete without the mechanism for playing a roll producing all orchestral combinations and effects. The importance of the roll played orchestrion has not yet been fully recognized, but the time has come when no picture theatre is complete without a modern orchestrion, and when the roll attachment is to be standardized so that a standard orchestrion roll may be played wherever the film is shown—so that picture and music remain united.

Both manufacturers and musicians ought to see the open field. There will not be musicians enough to fill the demand, and even those who are able to hold a good job will appreciate the roll played orchestrion for hours and days of rest.

MUSICAL INDICATIONS
(No. 5)
for C. URBAN'S KINETO REVIEW No. 44
"PANAMA"

If the musical conductor will examine this film realizing that it is virtually in four distinct spirits, his problem of scoring it will instantly become a simple matter.

Thus, the body of the film is that of a tropical, lazy, hot, mysterious clime; there is the leper section which calls for tragic treatment, to wring the heart of the audience; there is the American patriotic section and finally the extraordinary sixty-second passage of the Canal which needs a "hurry up" treatment.

If I were scoring the picture for ideal treatment it would be as follows:

Before the film starts, perhaps sixty seconds in advance, start the music. This will create an advance atmosphere for the first glimpses. Begin the orchestra with the following music (any one of those mentioned): Orientale Suite "Altar" of Rimsky-Korsakoff (full orchestra), Suite Algerienne of Saint Saens (full orchestra), Fingal's Grave of Mendelssohn (full orchestra), Scenes Alsaciennes of Massenet (full orchestra), Desert Picture of Felicien David (full orchestra), Midnight at Sedan of Zollner (full orchestra), The Ruins of Athens of Beethoven or Bedouin Love Song (Pinsuti) for small group, Suite Arlesienne (Bizet) for small group, or any slow, drowsy, tropically suggestive theme.

Just before title "At Leper Colony" create a dead pause of several seconds. At title "The Leper Colony" use one of the following: Movement from Symphonie Pathetique (Tschaikowsky) (large orchestra), Ase's Death from Peer Gynt Suite of Grieg (for any aggregation), Funeral March of Chopin (even for piano or organ alone), Love Death Music (Tristan und Isolde), Death Scene Music from "Aida," or any grave, slow, solemn, halting rhythm.

At title "The Late Major General" jump into a patriotic selection: American Rhapsodie (Moses-Tobani) or Sousa's marches, or any martial music.

At title "Where Swamps Line the Road" stop the patriotic music and resume the first music for a little while, continuing the patriotic strain at title "American Fleet" and keep it going up to the title "Through the Panama Canal" when you are to create a presto strain—rush at the fastest tempo you can take—some one of the following suggestions: Dance of the Dervishes, Winter Wind Study of Chopin, Humoresque of Rachimaninoff, any fast movement from Liszt's Rhapsodies, or especially Perpetual Motion of Ries or Weber, The Mill, or any music which rushes to a mad pace.

Mechanical devices can be employed, a rattling, cracking sound—or drums in a fierce clatter, violins bowing agitato. If there is a conductor and he will resort to little tricks, let him even show the excitement in his manner of swinging his arms and his baton.

"Panama" is a film which is as classical an opportunity for the musician as one could find—it's almost like a grand opera libretto—such varying moods—the slow beginning, the tragic episode, the patriotic, and the mad ending.

New Equipment for Geo. S. Johnston Company

George S. Johnston Company, of Chicago, manufacturers of lenses and other "hygrade" optical products, have completed the installation of additional equipment in their plant at 4101 E. Ravenswood Avenue, to meet the growing demand for their output.

This company has been specializing on motion picture lenses for several years, and its output is very favorably known to exhibitors throughout the country. Besides lenses for professional projectors, the George S. Johnston Company also has a fine line of lenses for home or portable projectors without jacket.

La Cross 100% Simplex

Word has just been received at the Simplex factory from the Teco Products Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis, Simplex Distributors in a large portion of the northwest, that with the closing down of the Bijou and the installation of two Mazda-equipped Simplexes in the Casino theatre, the city of La Cross is now 100% Simplex.

The Casino is one of three theatres in La Cross operated by the Cooper Amusement Company, the other two being the Strand and Reveria, respectively. The other theatres that are Simplex equipped are the Rivoli, La Cross and Majestic, all of them being operated by the La Cross Theatres Company.

Mr. A. A. Feinberg, President of the Teco Company, reported that Simplex sales are steadily climbing and that the amount of business in view for this progressive supply house will possibly warrant the enlarging of the quarters now occupied in the very heart of the Minneapolis film district.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Let Me Explain"
(Christie Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

"LET ME EXPLAIN" is a pretty good comedy with an amusing story which has been twisted in such a way that surprises spring up here and there and give it originality.

In some spots the comedy sparkles with humorous incident but there is a decided let-down between these moments when the action is of the in-and-out variety with the actors either mugging or running hither and thither in a rather nonsensical manner to gain time.

Now this does not mean that these faults stick out like a house afire and draw to any great extent from the comedy's amusement value, but it does mean that directors or scenario writers should be more careful and not try to stretch a one-reel comedy into a two-reeler when there is not enough incident to go round.

"Let Me Explain" has a good cast of farce comedy actors with plenty of pretty settings to help light it up.

Against the wishes of his uncle, who is a woman hater, Jack had married. While on his honeymoon they meet uncle and being forced to take him home, the young man explains that his bride is only a servant.

The uncle noticing that the latter is a very pretty young woman asks her hand in marriage but is told she is already taken. In order to carry on the affair another young man is introduced as her husband, which complicates affairs because said young man has a very jealous wife. A series of alternate love making follows until the uncle discovers the plot and the young married couple confess their guilt.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Gilded Lies"
(Selznick-Eugene O'Brien)

THEY'LL have to come much better than this for Eugene O'Brien, for the present feature gives the star no opportunity at all to display any of his talents with the possible exception of sitting or standing in dejected attitude. And the reason for said attitude is that "Gilded Lies" possesses no real story value and hence has to be padded.

And it is not only the star who has to resort to said tactics but most of the members of the cast who seem uncertain in their movements for the reason that there is practically nothing for them to do.

The story is a conglomeration of incidents which seem to have been rung in to suit the ever-changing purposes of the author or director, the disconnection being obvious and distasteful.

And there is certainly something the matter with the camera work, which is noticeable not only in this feature but also in the last few Selznick productions. In this we are referring to the particularly bad lighting which has a tendency to give the faces of the actors a chalkish appearance when close to the camera and to make them and sets appear rather dim in the distance.

The story has no real love interest, has no real dramatic moments, is trite and short on many of the ingredients necessary to give it average program value.

When the young hero discovers that his sweetheart has married another he tries to convince her that their interests are one and that the marriage should never have taken place. Events prove that he is right and the final scenes show the two lovers together, the disappointed ex-husband meeting death from the hands of the hero in a rather thrilling finish in which the villain is thrown from an automobile over a cliff.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Paris the Beautiful"
(Kineto Reviews—Second Series)

THERE is nothing truer than the old saying, "Seek and ye shall find." In describing this scenic it is well to state that the Kineto company has sought out the most beautiful and renowned spots in and about the French capital, placed them upon the screen and in clever sub-titles tell what it's all about.

In swinging around the circuit the cameraman has been very careful to get the correct angle on the various "shots" which gives them the tendency to stand out.

The opening view shows the Parc des Buttes, Chaumont with its Corinthian Temple similar to that of the Sibyl at Tivoli. This is the place where stood the weird Montfauçon gibbet. The museum of the Hotel de Cluny built in the fifteenth century where the valuable works of art and products of industry are kept; the Church of St. Etienne-du-Mont, begun in the reign of Francis I; the Palace of the Luxemburg, built by order of Marie de Medicis, wife of Henry Fourth, in 1615; the Hotel des Invalides, founded in 1670 by Louis Fourteenth; the Dome des Invalides wherein stands the tomb of Napoleon I, and many other views too numerous and interesting to mention, give us an idea of what the reel is like.

Among the most important scenes which follow are those showing the Grand Opera National Academy, which was erected at a cost of $13,000,000 and fifteen years of labor; the Champs-Elysees with its amusing crowd dominated by the Arc de Triomphe, the largest arch of its kind; Marceau Square which was the fashionable resort down to the revolution; the Grand Palais and Pont Alexander Third.

The scenes are enlivened by the injection of plenty of atmosphere, human and scenic.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Moon Gold"
(Novelty Picture, Released by Dramafilms and Directed by Will Bradley)

SOME people are going to call this a novelty and some will caption it a plain freak. If you are long on charity for the artistic and the impressionistic you may even find "Moon Gold" a milestone in the art of picture making. However, for the average fan, the film will only register as a fine example of artistic lightings. Certainly some really notable effects have been achieved against black backgrounds.

The story selected to provide action for the photographic stunts is one that should have been done by expert pantomimists. Instead a nondescript cast, with the exception of George Fawcett in a bit, wander back and forth in front of the unique settings or pose before the camera while stilted titles carry the story along.

A child actress, Lois Bartlett, plays the role of "Pierrette" rather badly, but in her work is a cue to what might have been accomplished if the whole cast had been made up of juveniles. Length, three reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Let's See the Animals"
(Kineto Reviews—Second Series)

VIEWS of animals, especially in their playful moods, are always interesting to witness upon the screen. And it is for this reason that Kineto has selected one of our prominent zoos, placed a competent cameraman on the job, one who can make the animals "act"—with the result a very amusing reel.

This subject contains about thirty-five views of the zoo animals, beginning with the African lion, which is said to be one of the finest specimens in America, and ending with the Diana monkey.

The reel also shows some fine views of the Madagascar tree boa, an exceedingly large snake which seems to delight in winding itself about a large tree; the blue-tongued lizard, Mongolian wild horse and colt, Coypu rat, a large aquatic rodent found in South American rivers, and the Australian crown-pigeon.

Then there's the South African ostrich hens and various other scenes in which many members of the feathered tribe appear; the fallow deer, American elk, American bison, young polar bear and young tapir.

But this is not all, however, and when the hippopotamus, the alligator and many various kinds of monkeys make their appearance and do their "act" the spectator is sure to pronounce "Let's See the Animals" a reel well worth witnessing. —FRANK LEONARD.

"It's a Bear"
(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One-half Reel —Fox Film Corp.)

THIS cartoon continues to be filled to the brim with cleverly ridiculous comedy ideas which make it most agreeable entertainment. Such nonsense as "It's a Bear" contains will come near to winning at least a smile from the most cynical.

Mutt and Jeff are seen in a wild, mountainous country. A fair maiden is pursued by a bear. So the two heroes fling themselves across a cliff to serve as a bridge over which the girl may escape. But the bear uses the bridge also, and is shortly joined by a dozen companions, while the "bridge" sags under the weight of each bushy animal. This is the beginning of the nonsense. Numerous comedy situations arise with the bears playing a prominent part. In the end it develops that they are only dancing bears and simply wanted to play. The drawing never descends to vulgarity. It is a worthwhile filler.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The First Circus"
("Tony Sarg's Almanac")

"THE FIRST CIRCUS" is a new cartoon subject, using prehistoric animals and our alleged pre-historic ancestors as subjects to be operated upon and with.

The cartoon under the above caption is certainly original and rather amusing. It presents a "circus" act with monkeys as performers and audience, and a long-necked, long-tailed animal playing the role usually allotted in 1921 to elephants, etc. Good novelty bit with real laughs in it.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"THE WILD GOOSE"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Conventional Picture of the Eternal Triangle

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS likes to skate on thin ice quite as well as Cosmo Hamilton. His story, "The Wild Goose," is a study in the eternal triangle—of a wife who delights in trespassing until such time as she reflects upon her conduct and returns a repentant figure to be forgiven. There is nothing new presented here except for some arbitrarily introduced situations. The triangle develops into a quadrangle for little purpose other than to make the plot complicated. The other man, as usual, is a "snake in the grass," and shows his cowardice in the pinches, while the wronged husband is painted as an unduly sympathetic figure.

The story finds meaning for its title in the interesting legend that a wild goose never deserts its mate—not even after death. But it seems farfetched to apply it here, especially when the good friend's advice is sought whether to pick up the old domestic threads and disentangle them. Even the tiny figure of the child is present according to Hoyle. The only reason why the wife trespasses is planted in a sub-title which says that she is an impulsive grown-up child. Along comes a weak specimen from the West and she leaves the domestic hearth, taking the child with her. The quadrangle is unnecessary in view of subsequent events. The wife of the husband's best friend is painted as very much in love with him. Which of course allows for some extraneous incident. The involved figures journey from one house to the other. And the bit which shows the philanderer coming to the friend's home for the sake of explaining that he had dared to steal a wife serves no purpose at all.

The picture has traveled over exceedingly familiar ground and to discount it a melodramatic climax is offered which is totally unreal. The best friend's suspicions concerning his wife having proved pointless, there seems to be no reason why he should deliberately go out of the picture via the suicide route and take the trespasser with him in the death car. He wins very little sympathy for his inexplicable conduct. The conclusion shows a reconciliation between husband and wife, with the dead friend's wife acting as counsellor. Thus to execute the happy ending a respectable married woman is made a widow. The picture seldom rings true and looks especially false in the dramatic scenes. Holmes E. Herbert as the wronged husband acts with admirable restraint except in the scene when he has murder in his heart. The others are more or less in the picture. The director hasn't placed the gun in a new receptacle; it still has a resting place in the familiar table drawer.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Treating the eternal triangle from a new standpoint, at once interesting and novel, "The Wild Goose," a Cosmopolitan production directed by Albert Capellani and featuring a cast of well known players, will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. The story was written by Gouverneur Morris, one of the cleverest fictionists of the day, and the director is responsible for the production of "The Inside of the Cup." In "The Wild Goose," the new version of the triangle is founded upon the legend that the wild goose never deserts its mate.

Diana Manners is the wife of an architect and she becomes infatuated with another man. When Hastings, who is Manners' friend, learns that his own wife secretly loves Manners, and that the latter's wife has eloped with the other man, he follows in his motor car and after forcing the man into his automobile, he deliberately drives over the cliff, thereby serving a double purpose—to give his wife freedom and to save the honor of his friend. Mary MacLaren plays the part of the romantic Diana, while Holmes E. Herbert is seen as the husband. The picture presents a number of dramatic situations which are capitally played.

PROGRAM READER

Through storm and cold, wind and rain, heat and gloom of night—even unto death—the wild goose clings to its mate. So did this man. But the wife and mother, lured by a new love, flew away. The story that follows will fill your heart as only life's greatest struggles and triumphs can do. Such is "The Wild Goose," which comes to this theatre next ————. It is a Cosmopolitan production, directed by Albert Capellani. His name is a guarantee of its excellence, for this director sponsored "The Inside of the Cup." The author is Gouverneur Morris, who is one of the real talented short story writers of the day. Prominent in the cast are Mary MacLaren, who will be remembered by the majority of picturegoers, Holmes E. Herbert and Norman Kerry.

SUGGESTIONS

You can play this up with emphasis placed upon the legend of the wild goose. Teaser ads, blind ads, in the papers would help in putting it over. Play it up as a new version of the eternal triangle. Also give good space to Albert Capellani, the director. He directed "The Inside of the Cup," and mention of his work should be exploited here. Also bring out the value of the author's name. Gouverneur Morris is considered one of the best fiction writers of the day. His stories are sought eagerly by his host of followers. You can play up that many of his stories have reached the screen. Play up the cast, mentioning in particular, the names of the three principal players. Play up the picture as a novel, delightful and dramatic photoplay.

CATCH LINES

"THE HOUSE THAT JAZZ BUILT"
(Realart)

Wanda Hawley's Best Bet; a Cleverly Directed Picture

AFTER a season spent in frothy and far-fetched studies of irrepressible girlhood, it is a relief to see Wanda Hawley in a picture which approaches life from so many attitudes. On the surface "The House That Jazz Built" is of light texture and reading it from a synopsis it offers no entertainment at all. The discerning spectator will appreciate it as somewhat of a triumph for the director, in his ability to make it palpitate with life, sparkle with balancing humor which is always in the right place, and staging it with admirable restraint. Moderation seems to have been Stanlaw's idea here. He has kept always within bounds. His artistic instinct is revealed in his carefulness to detail and the contrasts of his sets. If one interior is presented with jazzy gewgaws, another will be marked for its ornate correctness.

The idea of the picture is founded upon the lifelike study of a pampered bride who is allowed to give up household duties so that she may give attention to cultivating the social graces. The young husband forgets that he is responsible for changing her views. The result is she becomes fat and indolent. The array of events leading to the separation are true to life and many picturegoers will find rich food for thought. In fact there is a better lesson to be obtained from this inoffensive little picture which has not been press-agented to the skies than in a dozen so-called moral subjects which preach on marital advice without getting anywhere.

Rich and humorous is the scene which shows the husband attempting to correct the easy life of his bride. She has taken on flesh to the point of obesity and refuses to arise before noon. So the indignant benedict uses strong-arm methods. He compels her to take "setting-up" exercises, points out to her the miserable decay of her personality, but is forced to give in to her whims. So in disgust he leaves her to seek companionship with a girl who is represented as unduly efficient, but who in reality is as indolent, although her physique doesn't develop along corpulent lines. With the separation in actual process, the bride realizes her mistakes. And eventually wins her husband back by assuming the very duties which had irritated him. Her sylph-like figure resembles one of the "before and after" testimonials. The picture is wholesome and true and radiates a sparkle and charm. What is revealed could really happen and probably is happening in thousand of homes. It constantly holds the attention. Miss Hawley gives a clever performance and Forrest Stanley as the husband gives a lifelike study.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture based upon a story of every-day life—a story of a young married couple who agreed to separate because of a conflict of temperament is offered in Wanda Hawley's newest Realart production, "The House That Jazz Built." The picture will be presented at the ———— theatre on ———— and ———— of ———— week. The story concerns Cora and Frank Rodham, who are much in love with one another. They seem to be happily married, but Frank is an indulgent husband and it shocks him to see his pretty bride occupying her time in domestic duties when she should be cultivating the social graces.

When fortune smiles at him he employs servants and Cora is allowed to become indolent. Her personality undergoes a complete change—so much so that Frank is shocked. He fails to reform her to his plan of conduct and is aggravated in leaving her. This course inspires the wife to become her oldtime self. And a reconciliation is effected. The picture scintillates wth sparkling situations which are true to life. The offering is handsomely staged and well acted.

PROGRAM READER

What would you do with a wife that developed a "don't care" spirit—who allowed herself to become indolent and fleshy—who slept late in the mornings—who did not mind the incidents of the day? Would you seek a separation? What if you had encouraged your wife to become indolent? Would you blame yourself? And if you attempted to make her useful about the house and failed? What would you do? Would you find solace with another woman? These questions have much in common with Wanda Hawley's newest picture, "The House That Jazz Built," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. It is a remarkably true to life story which has its counterpart in every city and town. It is rich in drama and humor and is one of the treats of the season. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a title out of the ordinary. So make capital of it in your exploitation in the way of teasers, throwaways, and catch lines. You can make copy of the Program Reader in your throwaways, and such a plan would invite patronage. Bill it as a novel and entertaining domestic drama which is as lifelike as a romance in June. Tell that it offers a lesson in the art of domestic happiness—a picture all who contemplate marriage should see. Make a bid for the young engaged couples to come and see a royal entertainment, as well as a picture which will start them on the road to happiness by pointing out possible errors that might occur in their lives. Play up Wanda Hawley, telling that it is her finest picture. Tell that Penrhyn Stanlaws, the illustrator, directed the feature.

CATCH LINES

Would you leave your wife if you discovered that she cared more for relaxation and pleasure than your company? See "The House That Jazz Built."

"WOLVES OF THE NORTH"
(Universal)

Conventional Alaskan Story Carries Wonderful Backgrounds

THE shortcomings of this story are fully compensated for in the rich and colorful backgrounds which adorn it. Certainly no picture of the year has flashed a finer assortment of exteriors. The offering takes on the aspect of a scenic in the views of snow-capped mountains and fields, waterfalls and frozen lakes. Against these backgrounds moves a story of elemental passions which presents a conventional line of conflict. With the introduction of a wolf-dog, or husky as it is commonly known, one anticipates another "Kazan" picture. But the authors have saved themselves from plagiarism by developing it along a different angle.

Far up in the wilds of Alaska lives an old professor and his carefully reared daughter. The place is a mining camp and the principal spot of amusement centers in the dance hall, the denizens of which are the old, familiar types. The daughter is ignorant of romance, passion, and the ways of the world. Into her life comes a primitive miner who is torn by the conflict of soul whether to revert to type or encourage his noble instincts. A comparison is drawn by introducing the dog as half-wolf, half-collie. But in bringing out this very comparison the title editor allows himself to become preachy in his advice. At times the titles are unduly poetic and flowery and never appear to be consistent with the more or less rugged line of action. There is no ingenuity in the story whatsoever. A weakling is constantly repulsed by the heroine and in revenge moves to a neighboring camp for the purpose of showing that he has some manhood. The action is mostly incidental which is appreciated in the footage given over to the auctioning off of the dog. When the loser fails he attempts to square accounts in a very arbitrary fashion.

But the plot shortcomings will be overlooked in the magnificent scenery which accompanies the picture throughout. Frank Mayo had some exceptional backgrounds in "The Magnificent Brute," but "Wolves of the North" eclipses it in this respect. There is no fake about it since most of the action is outlined against these marvelous exteriors. And if you don't think that exceptional scenery can bolster up a story, Miss Novak's latest is proof positive. For a climax the director has taken advantage of a huge avalanche which is as impressive as it is dramatic. The vicious element is wiped out and the girl is thoroughly awakened to the call of romance. There is a deal of local color here, noticeable in the appearance of native animals. A bear, a few chipmunks, huskies, and other quadrupeds provide a fitting atmosphere.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of the frozen North—a story of Alaska, of primitive men and women, of huskies, of wolves and bears, is "Wolves of the North," the Eva Novak feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. The star plays the part of a refined girl residing among the primeval forces of the North. Her father is engaged in research work attending the Eskimos, and the daughter has been reared in ignorance of the outside world. She fails to respond to a young miner, but when a rugged specimen from the North appears she realizes that she has discovered her true mate.

This man is in perpetual conflict with himself because of his primitive instincts, but in the crisis proves his nobility of character. "Wolves of the North" is remarkably rich in its back-grounds. The ice-capped mountains, the vast panorama of snow, the picturesque waterfalls, these lend an enchantment which is certainly appealing. Miss Novak gives a good account of herself in the leading role and her support is entirely creditable. The picture carries a vigorous line of action which embodies good suspense.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons who visit the ———— theatre next ———— are in for a picturesque treat when "Wolves of the North" is shown. This feature presenting Eva Novak, the pretty Universal star, is remarkable for its colorful scenery. It is like taking a journey through the vast spaces of the frozen North. Yet these backgrounds have a perfect place in a story which has to do with life as it is lived in the primitive. The primeval forces of nature, the colorful specimens of the two sexes, the native animals—these are blended here with fitting harmony. "Wolves of the North" packs a healthy punch which is always punctuated with good suspense. And it is well acted and directed. The marvelous scenery should excite the greatest enthusiasm.

SUGGESTIONS

The point to feature here is the marvelous scenery. Play up that no picture of the past year has presented such a picturesque and rich display of backgrounds. The vast, open spaces of the North have been caught in their sublime glory. All nature seems to vie to present the spectator with what constitutes beauty and life in the far-off places. Play up the title and feature the picture as a melodramatic account of life as it is lived in the frozen North. You can present stills of Miss Novak in her picturesque attire. Play up the atmosphere for your lobby. Snowshoes, and paraphernalia which has to do with life up North would give your lobby a good appearance. If you are in for hot weather you can link up with the climate telling that it is fifty degrees cooler inside with the snow all about you on the screen.

CATCH LINES

Positively the greatest scenic photoplay of the year. See "Wolves of the North." and get in communion with the frozen spaces of Alaska.

"KEEPING UP WITH LIZZIE"
(Rockett-Hodkinson)

Comedy Blends with Serious Theme Admirably

THIS is the first of Irving Bacheller's stories to reach the screen, and it provides apt picture material. All it needed to he worth while entertainment was a capable cast and a director ahle to give it the correct small town atmosphere. These two essential elements have been provided, and as a result we consider "Keeping Up With Lizzie" to be suitable for, and able to please, any audience except those who will take nothing except the lurid or the sentimental. For the story, though simple enough in its plot structure, contains satire and humor which require some sense of appreciation.

The "Lizzie" in the case is a small town girl who has been sent by her parents to a select finishing school. From then on it is a case of the entire town "keeping up with Lizzie." Her country lover is sent by his parents to Harvard. There is gentle chiding at our institutions of learning throughout, especially in the sub-titles. For the boy learns the latest thing in clothes and evolves into a money-spending "rah-rah boy." Lizzie, now Elizabeth, is "finished" to the extent of losing her naturalness and simplicity. After a foreign tour she returns to her home town. She refurnishes the new home her father has built for her and teaches her mother the art of wearing a lorgnette. The result of "education" in the small town is that each family vies with another to see who can wear the finest clothes and ride in the newest motors. A village philosopher spreads some wholesome preaching on the nobility of farming and the absurdity of apeing the rich. "There are too many grand folks in the cities," he says, "and too few regular folks tilling the soil."

Lizzie has brought back from Europe with her a French count, whom she decides to marry. Her country lover, who has given up "rah-rahing" for farming, realizing that his extravagance has nearly ruined his father, finally exposes the count as an impostor, and there is a chase ending in an automobile spill for a wind-up. Few pictures carry the blend of pathos and comedy, or the mixture of serious thought with entertaining incident, as does this. No praise is too great for Otis Harlan as the father who sees his wife and daughter gradually ruining him. It is a remarkable piece of effective, yet unexaggerated character acting. Harry Tood is not far behind in a similar role. The character roles stand out as the best in the picture. Enid Bennett is "Lizzie," and is peculiarly suited to the role. Edward Hearn has the male lead. Leo White dresses and acts to extremes as the Frenchman and is not convincing because of this.

"Keeping Up With Lizzie" should satisfy as comedy-drama entertainment. We think Bacheller's treatment of the question of the evils of an over-luxurious higher education will be of interest to any thinking audience.— Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Keeping Up With Lizzie," the first of Irving Bacheller's stories to be transcribed to the screen, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Mr. Bacheller, one of the most prolific and best loved American authors, for a long time withheld his stories from the motion picture producers, fearing that the screen version would not do justice to the characters his mind had conceived. But he was won over by the Hodkinson organization, and his first picture will be just as popular as his book.

"Keeping Up With Lizzie" is a clean, absorbing comedy drama, built on a story which contains that quality so necessary for success—originality. The bumbler phases of American small town life are strikingly illustrated. You will recognize every character's counterpart in real life, and you will find that they act in a startlingly human and natural manner.

Enid Bennett, one of the best known ingenues of the screen, is the featured player in this picture. She is supported by a cast including Edward Hearn, and Otis Harlan, as well as the inimitable Leo White and Harry Todd. The picture was directed by Lloyd Ingraham, who has added another to the long list of successes already to his credit.

PROGRAM READER

Do you believe that young girls should be "finished"? Is it not necessary that our young ladies should all spend two years in the most select of the select finishing schools? So, thought Sam Henshaw, leading grocer in the town of Pointview. So Lizzie went to be finished. And when she returned, with a pretty veneer of society manner, the whole town went broke trying to keep up with her.

Probably you recognize the story from the little we have told you. Yes, it is Irving Bacheller's "Keeping Up With Lizzie," which has been transcribed to the screen with pretty Enid Bennett in the featured role. This is the first of Mr. Bacheller's stories to reach the screen, and you will like the characters in pictures as much as you liked them on the printed page. We really do not think you want to miss this clean, absorbing story of a country girl who went to a finishing school and of a country boy who went to Harvard. It will be shown here for ———— day beginning ————.

CATCH LINES

Irving Bacheller draws the most human humor of any American author to-day. Prove it for yourself by seeing "Keeping Up With Lizzie," the first of his splendid stories to reach the screen. Your old favorites—Enid Bennett, heads the cast.

"THE TEN DOLLAR RAISE"
(Frothingham-Associated Producers)

Wonderfully Human and Genuinely Entertaining

"HE slept late on Christmas morning; there was nothing to get up for." This gem of a sub-title about sums up the very human qualities of "The Ten Dollar Raise," an adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's story. It is one of the few pictures which approaches life as it exists for the "underdog," and throbs and palpitates, scintillates, and charms through its full measure of humanities. A tale of a colorless wage slave who ekes out a drab existence as a bookkeeper at fifteen per a week, it is the nearest approach to a combination of O. Henry and Winchell Smith which has graced the screen in many a day. The characters are life-like and the story which guides their actions will be recognized as real. For every tug at the heart there is an accompanying note of humor which gives the picture a perfect balance. Yet the dominant feature of the play is its underlying touch of pathos.

The pathetic figure of Wilkins who accepts his misfortunes because he has grown familiar with them invites the unbounded sympathy of the spec-'ator. In the hands of William V. Mong the character takes on an appeal which places it among the screen's finest studies. Every gesture, every pose is entirely correct. His posture stamps him as a cringing wage slave, though there is a fire in his eyes. His sweetheart played by Helen Jerome Eddy is also thoroughly in the picture. Years pass by, yet she does not give up hope to have a home some day. She is unconsciously passing into he old maid stage. Her neckwear is a tight fitting collar, her gown one that might be worn by an old-fashioned school teacher. And she has a small menial position in the brokerage house, too. Every detail of costume and deportment is in its place.

It is a picture of perfect harmony. The action sparkles with lifelike touches, and except for a melodramatic flourish which provides a climax there is flashed incident which is always genuine in its humanities. A humorous touch is offered when the bookkeeper becomes the victim of his employer's son through buying some watered real estate. But the worm turns eventually when the drab figure buys back the stock of the concern which has been placed on the market by the moneyed king. And the real estate is rich in the production of oil. This finish may appear a trifle far-fetched, but it will be accepted because of the hero's drab existence. The titling is exceptionally good and emphasizes the human touches of the story. There is a minor romance which gives the picture a happy balance. Hal Cooley and Marguerite De La Motte interpret these young characters in the proper spirit. "The Ten Dollar Raise" is one of the best bets of the year and is certain to be appreciated. More like it and Germany can dump her pictures here without causing any alarm.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Ten Dollar Raise," an adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's human story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The offering is filled with such underlying pathos and is balanced with such exceptionally fine touches that it appears like a slice of everyday life. The hero, Wilkins, has slaved his life away as a bookkeeper at a miserable salary. He lives in constant fear of his employer. Although he has been promised a raise every year for fourteen years, the advance never comes through and Wilkins lacks aggressiveness to ask for it.

He has a romance that nearly burns itself out through the patience of years. So he plods his way through life—a life utterly drab and colorless. Then one day he asserts his personality. The worm turns and Wilkins is the recipient of a snug fortune. This is the substance of one of the most human pictures which ever graced the screen. A prominent cast of players renders perfect support.

PROGRAM READER

He didn't have much personality and he struggled along as bookkeeper for fifteen dollars a week. For fourteen years he had been promised a raise. It was never forthcoming. In the first place the pathetic figure had lacked courage to ask for it. His romance had flourished, but they were growing old and soon the flame might burn out through inability to see anything in the future. Then one day the book-keeper plucked up courage. What was his reward is as startling as the picture is dramatic. "The Ten Dollar Raise" is an adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's remarkably lifelike story which many of our readers remember. It will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. The characters are genuine and the action grips you with its fidelty to truth.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a great picture and you should play it up to the limit. It needs big exploitation to put it over. Dwell upon its life like character, telling that the figures are taken from the walks of everyday life. Play up the author, announcing that the original story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Tell that the picture will make you cry and laugh by turns. Get after the home-folks, telling that a rare treat is in store for them. Tell them a picture is coming which is like a page from life. Play up the cast. It is nearly all-star. You might have some "phoney" money printed for advertising purposes and distribute it telling that you are offering patrons a raise and advising them to see the most human picture of the

"THE LURE OF EGYPT"
(Federal-Pathe)

Picture Is Draggy and Carries Very Little Story Interest

THE sponsors of this picture have staged it appropriately amid California sands with some atmospheric properties in the shape of "ships of the desert," correct costumes and details, which gives the offering a picturesque appeal. The story interest is not so good since the plot is based upon a conventional formula which has to do with locating the tomb of an ancient Pharaoh. To present it in feature length the director has slowed up the tempo which causes the picture to drag interminably. The action is not so much repetitious as it is monotonous through introducing different camera angles to catch closeups of the principals.

A learned Egyptologist and his daughter are camping in the Thebian desert, the latter engaged in taking notes and designing. She sighs for an American artist to come and relieve her father of much of his duties. And the utterance is no sooner given than he appears in their midst. In advance of this sequence the hero is living a life of indolence in Cairo with a mercenary girl providing a note of conflict. Another conflict is offered in the presence of Robert McKim as a native prince. His very appearance robs the picture of much suspense since it is indicative of high-handed villainy. The steady picturegoer will appreciate this. The prince has his cohorts, garbed in the correct Egyptian fashion, and the American has his loyal slave too. An aged philosopher comes into the picture more for atmospheric purposes than to enliven the action. And when the mercenary English noblewoman realizes that the hero has fled to the desert she packs up her belongings and moves to the identical spot.

It seems incongruous to see her carrying a wardrobe which would look more appropriate in a ballroom. She bedecks herself in evening dress for all occasions. The picture is rich in atmosphere, has been excellently staged against acceptable backgrounds which seem to have cost some money. But this display cannot overcome the shortcomings of the story. Scene after scene is represented with the characters hardly moving from their tracks. And the camera catches them from one angle and another. This plan takes up footage, but it does not spell drama. A climax has to do with the conflict of the prince and the forces of the hero to reach the tomb first. The picture offers an attractive title and interpreted with Oriental music will carry some appeal. But Joseph J. Dowling and Robert McKim deserve more rugged plays. They have little to do aside from posing for the camera. Carl Gantvoort has deserted the operatic stage to play the hero and enacts the part in a pleasing fashion.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Lure of Egypt" is the title of the picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. This production carries a story which is colorful to the extreme—a story which has to do with unearthing the tomb of an ancient Pharaoh. Margaret Lampton and her father have camped in the Thebian desert and have progressed wonderfully in locating the tomb. The girl, thinking to relieve her father of much of his arduous task, hopes that Michael Amory might come and execute his artistic designs which would lend a significance to the discovery. But the Lamptons have foes. A prince Dagmer is also desirous of locating the tomb first in order to recover the vast wealth which is buried there. So he employs native forces as well as some people from the Occident. What occurs is stimulating in its dramatic strength. The picture is handsomely staged, presenting a colorful display of atmosphere, and is acted by an all-star cast. The offering is marked for its rich array of incidents, its flavor of romance and its abundant local color.

PROGRAM READER

Egypt has ever proved fascinating to the explorer and tourist. Its ancient tombs, its colorful atmosphere, its historical lore, the fact that it is the cradle of civilization have always fascinated the reader or traveler. So we take great pleasure in taking you on a little journey to the land of the Nile—the land of the pyramids—to forget your time and environment for a while. "The Lure of Egypt" will be the attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This is a colorful romance which takes the spectator from Cairo, the fascinating city to the interior of the desert. It is a picture of conflict and contrasts. And finely acted by a cast that includes Joseph J. Dowling, Robert McKim and Claire Adams. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The title is attractive enough to receive special exploitation here. Play up the lure of that ancient land how it has attracted travelers, Egyptologists, historians, geologists since the march of civilization. Play up that the picture presents a colorful romance of the Nile country and is well acted. And play up the cast. Certainly Dowling and McKim will be remembered by the majority of your patrons. Describe it as a dramatic offering which fascinates as much for its situations as it does for its picturesque atmosphere. You can stage a prologue of Egyptian dancers or a single solo number. This is not difficult to arrange. The costumes should be easy to obtain. And special Oriental music would help a great deal in putting the picture over.

CATCH LINES

See "The Lure of Egypt," a picture of the Nile country. A picture of charm and atmosphere. A picture finely acted and staged.

"GOOD WOMEN"
(Robertson-Cole)

Talky Picture Not Pure Entertainment

IT would appear as if C. Gardner Sullivan, author of the story from which this picture is adapted, wrote it with no consideration for its future use as screen material. It is built upon a deep theme which can no doubt be carried out on the screen provided there is sufficient entertaining incident in its make-up, but which here does not quite fill the bill as dramatic entertainment. It is all about a woman's disregard for the conventions, and her insistence upon "living her own life." This mooted question of how far everyday conventions of modern society should go as a standard of morals undoubtedly is of interest when bantered across a dinner table or in a drawing room, but as entertainment for the picture public its success is uncertain, and the more so when it has neither comedy relief nor a compact story. It appears to be psychological without sufficient entertainment values.

There is, especially in the opening reels, a very evident tendency to be talky in the sub-titles, for the heroine preaches feminism; sneers at what the world considers "good women"; belittles the marriage bond, and then puts her ideas into practise by eloping with a married man, whom she calls her "twin soul." This rather dangerous line of thought does not last too long. The romance fades away, and her lover goes back to his wife. But the unconventional young lady is not quite cured and proceeds to shock the gossips once more by dancing in a public restaurant. Then she hies herself to Naples, where she makes her third conquest. This time again the man is married and when the girl discovers this, she sends him back to his wife. The picture ends when the man's mother calls her "a good woman." In the final fade-out she stretches her hands to Heaven and cries "Thank God! She called me a good woman."

Gasnier has given the picture a very perfect production, with some lavish sets and beautiful gowns to create an appeal among a certain class. Rosemary Theby is the radically inclined young woman, and is a languid, beauteous and luxurious but never a vulgar vampire through most of the picture. She overacts, we think, in registering anger and defiance. Hamilton Revelle, William P. Carleton and Arthur Hull are those who suffer from the vamping, the last named of whom has the biggest role.

Considering that "Good Women" deals with a delicate theme, it is singularly devoid of anything suggestive or objectionable. It is a picture which may please the most intellectual type of audiences because of the vital question which forms the basis of its story.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Good Women," a Robertson-Cole picture, produced by Gasnier, and featuring Rosemary Theby, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This remarkable picture, which is a society drama of the highest type, is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, one of the best known and most prolific screen writers. Mr. Sullivan deals with the age old story of convention as a moral standard. He takes as his heroine a fearless woman who dares the world and its conventions to keep her from living as she pleases. A wholesome, moderate view of the entire question is taken, and incidentally a surprising amount of drama arises during the interesting story.

Rosemary Theby needs no introduction to followers of the modern photodrama. One of the most beautiful screen actresses of the day, she has had a variety of experience both in comedy and drama. She has played an important part in the big production "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," and also in the dramatic picture, "Whispering Devils." In "Good Women" Miss Theby has one of the most powerful roles of her career. She handles it in her usually capable way and is certain to make an impression upon any audience.

"Good Women" was directed by Gasnier, the maker of the great screen production, "Kismet." This latest picture has been produced with all the artistry at this great director's command. In the cast are Earl Schenck, Rhea Mitchell, Eugenie Besserer, William P. Carleton, and Arthur Stuart Hull.

PROGRAM READER

How far do the conventions of society bind you? Do you act as other people do, because you do not dare to brave their gossiping tongues? Is your every act dominated by the fear of scorn? Or are you one who believes in the necessity and righteousness of convention—a restraint placed by society upon its members to be obeyed under pain of ostracism. C. Gardner Sullivan handles this absorbing question in his latest photodrama, "Good Women," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

Rosemary Theby is the featured player in this production. She needs no introduction to the followers of high-class motion pictures. Other members of the cast include Rhea Mitchell, William P. Carleton, Arthur Stuart Hull and Eugenie Besserer. The fact that it was directed by Gasnier, the creator of "Kismet," guarantees the artistry of the production.

SUGGESTIONS

"Good Women" deals with a "problem." Copy of the style used above will create interest in the picture. Tell them they are going to see the answer to a gripping question illustrated on the screen. The cast contains many names which will be known to followers of the screen. There is Rosemary Theby, of "Connecticut Yankee" and "Whispering Devils" fame, Rhea Mitchell, Wm. P. Carleton, and Arthur Stuart Hull. C. Gardner Sullivan has been so prominently identified with pictures and fiction that his name should be used. Gasnier is a well known director, remembered from "Kismet."

"GYPSY BLOOD"
(First National)

Pola Negri Flashes a Fine Talent in German Version of Carmen

ANOTHER product from Germany has reached the American screen in "Gypsy Blood," adapted from the original French story, "Carmen," by Prosper Merrimee. It should be received with packed houses because it is an Ernst Lubitsch production and presents the vital and vibrant Poli Negri in another remarkably vivid portrayal. "Carmen" has been done before by Theda Bara and Geraldine Farrar, with a burlesque by Charlie Chaplin thrown in for good measure, so the picturegoing public is familiar with it. A presentation of it now may seem like flirting with time-worn material and the public is not apt to be so receptive to its story. But those who take into consideration what Lubitsch's name means, attached to a production, and the abundant talent of the star will certainly be attracted.

It goes without saying that the picture will draw because of their names. The director, who has achieved fame as the sponsor of "Passion," and "Deception," has demonstrated again that he is one of the few geniuses of the photoplay. His skill at situation and climax, his adept handling of mob scenes, his atmosphere—these are vividly brought forth here. The picture is not produced on the grandiose scale of the above-mentioned offerings, nor does it offer the same tense situations. It bears evidence of having been made with the same amount of footage, but trimmed and sliced and edited for American consumption, it appears unduly episodic. Scenes are flashed which bear little relation to one another with the result that suspense never figures to any extent. The titling is not of the best and hampers the action in several places and this is detrimental in giving it a resemblance of finished continuity.

This version will appear as decidedly new to many since it is founded upon the original story instead of the operatic adaptation. From this angle it carries some appeal. But the chief value of the production lies in the presence of Pola Negri as the star. As the wild, untamed, passionate, impulsive cigarette girl she contributes an outstanding cameo. The study is totally unlike her Du Barry, which of course reveals her amazing depths of pantomime. She is Carmen to the life. Her sensitive face, the shading of her expressions, her black hair, the sinuous figure—these make the Spanish senorita vivid and vital and picturesque. The star is certainly in a class by herself at interpreting colorful characters. Her support is equally good. "Gypsy Blood" may not be another "Passion" or "Deception," but it contains enough interesting qualities to interest anyone who likes costume plays well acted.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

La Carmencita.....Pola Negri
Don Jose, a soldier.....Harry Liedtke
Dolores, Don Jose's sweetheart
Colonel Rodriquez
Escamillo

By Prosper Meremee.
Directed by Ernst Lubitsch.
Edited and titled by Myron Stearns.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A new screen version of "Carmen" is offered as the chief attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This adaptation, which has been making a sensation in Europe is based upon the original French story by Prosper Meremee and is directed by Ernst Lubitsch, the creator of "Passion" and "Deception," two pictures which may be called masterpieces of film art. "Gypsy Blood" is the title of this version of "Carmen" and presents Pola Negri, the star of "Passion" in the colorful role of La Carmencita, made famous by Farrar upon the operatic stage.

The European actress gives a finer performance than her remarkable study of Du Barry. She is the cigarette girl to the life. The passionate, impulsive, capricious, mad-cap who lived for love and pleasure, who brought tragedy to those who became enamoured of her charms, fits her as if it might have been conceived with her in mind. The picture has a spectacular appeal and its intimate sequences offer entertaining moments through scenes of compelling drama. Mr. Lubitsch has staged the picture in a highly creditable fashion.

PROGRAM READER

The most passionate romance ever written is "Carmen." It has been popular for decades. It has even appeared before upon the screen. But in "Gypsy Blood" there is a new version of the famous story which is said to be even more entertaining. This European sensation will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— with Pola Negri as the star. All those who have heard of or seen this remarkably talented actress will certainly want to witness her rich portrayal of the cigarette girl who brought tragedy to herself and her lover. Miss Negri is one of the few really accomplished actresses of the screen. The picture is an Ernst Lubitsch production. Sufficient guarantee of its excellence, for he is the man who created "Passion." Come next ———— and see a great motion picture.

SUGGESTIONS

The proper angle to exploit here is to concentrate upon the names of the director and star. Everybody who goes to the picture theatre is acquainted with the name of Lubitsch. His name is much in the public eye of late for his creations of "Passion" and "Deception." Make mention of these two masterpieces in any exploitation. Also play up Pola Negri. She starred in "Passion" and gave one of the finest performances of the screen. So play up the fact that she duplicates her success here. Play up that the picture is a version of the original French story by Prosper Meremee. Stage a prologue of Spanish dancers and singers attired correctly. Also play Spanish music for your musical interpretation, using as much of the score of "Carmen" as possible.

"BEYOND PRICE"
(Fox)

An Inconsequential Story Not Suited to Pearl White

IT is a difficult task to classify that latest Pearl White feature. It jumps from comedy moments to drama, and from a semi-slapstick chase scene to an attempted murder. But whatever an audience makes out of it, whether they decide to take it seriously or not, they will not call it a Pearl White vehicle. The serial favorite if forced into a comedy role in which her daring and old-time "stunt" acting are sadly missing. Summing it up briefly "Beyond Price" is Pearl White without a thrill.

For those who will come to see the picture rather than the star, the effect will be a dazed feeling of uncertainty. Few pictures follow such an uncertain line of thought. It starts off with the neglected wife theme, but friend husband disappears very early in the picture, while the star helps an indescreet millionaire out of his troubles. She poses as his wife in order to obtain some love letters, for which he is being blackmailed. Then, in about the third reel, another set of characters are introduced. The action shifts to an art exhibit. Evidently there is going to be some dancing at the art auction for the two blackmailers, who are professional dancers, have been engaged to appear. The star is choosen as the most beautiful woman present but the "borrowed" clothes are recognized, and the chase follows. The star falls into the apartment where a murder is being committed. The crooks are brought to justice and the murderer commits suicide.

All this is to illustrate three wishes made by the neglected wife at the advise of a gypsy. She gets riches and fame hut is still unhappy. The third wish is for baby's arms about her neck. She adopts one from the orphan asylum and goes back to her hushand. Thus does she find bappiness. It is douhtful if the audience will get the same way. The point of the whole story is not well brought out.

Miss White does not let the comedy situations go by without getting anything out of them. She is attractive even when she is burlesquing the type of acting which won her fame. This is in the hlackmailing sequence when she poses as the millionaire's wife and plays upon the crook's sympathies until he gives up the incriminating love letters.

There is practically no love interest in the picture. Vernon Steele is the hushand and Louis Haines is the indiscreet millionaire. The latter tries to win laughs hy tripping over people's feet and other such crude hokum. The two child players show undue consciousness of the presence of their director off-stage.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Pearl White, who is the star of "Beyond Price," the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, needs no introduction to the residents of ————. One of the pioneer film stars, Miss White still maintains the large following she first gained as a serial star. She stand to-day as the one screen actress who is a universal favorite among the American public.

"Beyond Price" is a comedy drama which contains at the same time plenty of drama and pathos. It tells the story of a young wife who grows dissatisfied with her humble life as the wife of a shoe merchant and who searches for happiness by basking in the light of wealth and fame. In the end she learns that life is not so empty as long as there is someone to love and to care for her.

The star is supported by a capable cast including Vernon Steele, Nora Reed, Arthur Gordoni, and Louis Haines. The story is the work of Paul H. Sloane, and the direction was handled by Searle Dawley.

PROGRAM READER

The gypsy gave her three wishes. First she chose wealth—for she was poor and longed for luxury. Next she chose fame—for she lived an uneventful, secluded life. And thirdly she wished for love and happiness with a baby's arms about her neck. She found the first quite accidentally. The second was suddenly thrust upon her. And the third she found in the love of her husband, and the little girl she adopted from the orphan asylum. And of the three the last was best.

Pearl White is the star who does the wishing. The picture is entitled "Beyond Price" and it will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Pearl White is a star one does not wish to miss. Long ago she reached the pinnacle of fame as the star of a number of serials, and she still holds, by her winsome personality, the thousands of her admirers.

In "Beyond Price" she will be as popular as ever. We believe it is a noteworthy screen offering and one you will thoroughly enjoy.

SUGGESTIONS

Pearl White's name is probably the only exploitation angle this production contains. She is still a favorite who will draw big crowds. It is not the kind of a Pearl White picture that her followers have been accustomed to, for they expect "stunt" stuff and not comedy from her. You can get a teaser line such as "What is it that is Beyond Price?" if you wish to run a campaign. Also a competition among your patrons awarding a prize to those who name the best "three wishes."

"COINCIDENCE"

Light, But Breezy Enough to Get Over

THE very title of this light comedy disarms one from becoming analytical concerning its plot and characterization. That the element of coincidence has entered largely into screen plays to their detriment has been brought out time and again. But when a picture revolves around it, pokes fun at it, takes it seriously, too, for the sake of balance, one is forced to accept the offering for just what it is, a light and fluffy, but enjoyable entertainment. The exhibitor should not fear to present it as featuring a clever cast.

The late Robert Harron dominates the principal role, but his presence will not deter picturegoers from attending it. In the first place his place on the screen was not secure enough to make most people remember him. It is safe to say that a majority have never heard of his death. But the prudent exhibitor will not feature his demise. For commercial purposes the fact that his last picture is a breezy comedy which will keep people from becoming sentimental is a thing in its favor.

The director has made much out of nothing here. It is simply the story of a colorful small town youth who comes to the city to show it up and realizes that he is quite insignificant. A fine display of incident keeps the offering moving with good spontaneity to the finish—and this incident is supplemented with as nifty an assortment of sub-titles as has been flashed in some time. In fact the titling bolsters up the scenes and gives them a sparkle which would be absent otherwise. The hero breezes into New York prepared to make the city bow to him. And a series of coincidences happen which are laugh provoking even though they are unreal. One does not stop to analyze the improbabilities because of the zippy action which flows along merrily from one snappy sequence to another.

A dollar bill is blown out of a window and our hero, in pursuit, finds it resting atop a charming girl's hat. This may be coincidence number 5 or 40, hut regardless of that, it is sure-fire. Another incident is when the youth tosses his alarm clock out of the window and it lights on the bead of tbe lawyer who is trying to find the address of the tosser for the sake of advising him of his inheritance. There is a melodramatic bit which seems out of place, yet without it the story would appear unduly repetitious. This shows a young schemer endeavoring to dishonor the girl after a futile attempt to steal the youth's money. But even this bit concludes with a slap-stick flourish. Tbe picture carries a deal of local atmospbere, the exteriors being the real thing. Bobby Harron sbows sucb a flair for comedy that it is regrettable to think his life and talent were cut short. June Walker is an attractive ingenue.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Coincidence," a lively story of youthful mishaps, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre beginning ————. The offering makes its principal appeal as splendid entertainment through the snappy, sparkling nature of its story that never flags in its hilarious movement from the first to the last. "Coincidence" is presented with a cast of clever players, including Robert Harron and June Walker. It relates the mishaps of Billy Jenks, a socially ambitious young man who goes to New York to make a name for himself and ends up by being arrested for burglary.

Throughout the story the great and controlling influence of coincidence is shown molding the destiny of Jenks from the moment that the money he is counting blows out of the window and falls at the feet of the girl with whom he afterwards falls in love. The picture moves with rapid action with each scene increasing the merriment caused by the mishaps of Jenks. Robert Harron and June Walker give admirable performance. Chet Withey directed from a story by Howard E. Morton. The picture is marked for its metropolitan atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever wake up with that tired feeling in the morning and throw your alarm clock out of the window? If you didn't throw it, did you ever long to? Well, Billy Jenks threw his clock out of the window and it brought him a rich legacy. The clock hit a rising young lawyer which made him fall. But this is only one of the many mirthful moments in the bright and breezy photoplay, "Coincidence," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes Bobby Harron and June Walker. The picture is a lively offering which sails on its way sending out plenty of dash and paprika. It is based upon a series of coincidences which happen to our hero.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this picture as a lively and breezy adventure in romance. Play up the fact that coincidence matters a great deal in the course of the day's events. Ask your patrons a series of questions in the shape of teaser ads concerning coincidence in their lives. A good store tie-up is offered in the picture and its title. Send out throwaways with catch phrases. Bill it as a picture which will chase the blues away, telling that it is a lively play crowded with action, romance, with as much fast and furious fun as a three-ringed circus. Bill it as a lively picture of Love's Young Dream and the Queer Pranks of Circumstance. Get the cuts from your Metro exchange. They are attractive and will certainly invite patronage.

CATCH LINES

He threw his alarm clock out of the window and it brought him a fortune. See "Coincidence."

A Spade IS a Spade!

When it is named by the man who is the subject of an important interview in next week's Motion Picture News.

An advertising man of twenty-four years experience; a man who has devised and carried out merchandise selling campaigns linked up with the foremost products in the public eye today; a man who, single-handed, built up an advertising agency handling a yearly business of five million dollars; a man whose vigorous spirit has just lured him back to the harness—and he is now in the motion picture field—though his advertising success enabled him to retire INDEPENDENTLY WEALTHY at the age of forty-two—

Takes the gloves off and goes hammer and tongs at the subject of MOTION PICTURE TRADE PAPERS and MOTION PICTURE ADVERTISING AND PUBLICITY.

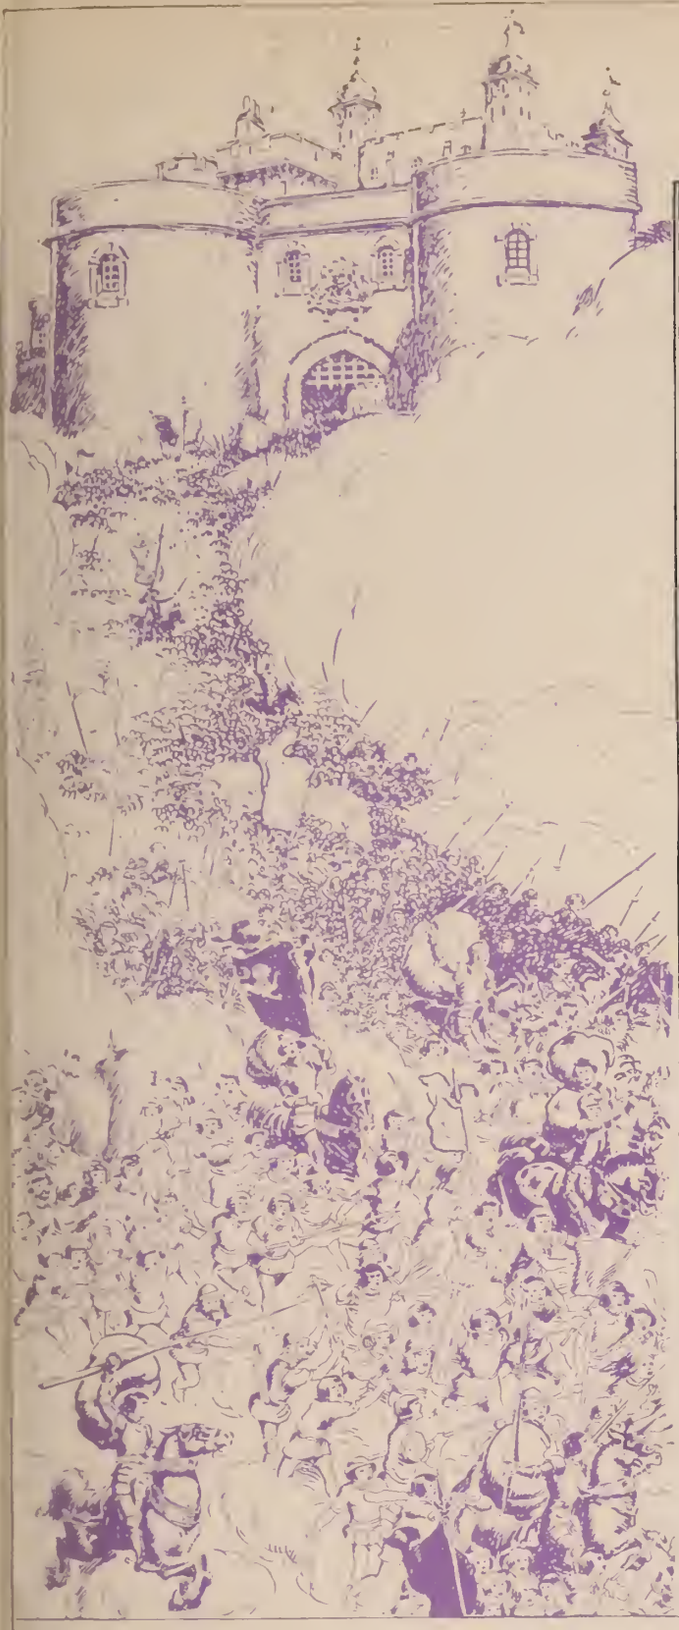
USEFUL INFORMATION



It's as difficult to procure satisfactory box-office receipts through the medium of mediocre posters as it is to get chicken fricassee and eggs from the same hen! A fact that no one knows better than Lewis J. Selznick—for which reason Selznick pictures are invariably accompanied by RITCHEY posters. The twenty-four sheet for the latest Selznick release—"THE LAST DOOR"—in which Eugene O'Brien is starred, is reproduced above. It is an example of the finest type of motion picture poster humanly possible to produce.

"DECEPTION" has just opened at the Colonial, in Boston.

On the opening day it did the largest business ever achieved by a motion picture in that city.

Among the criticisms were these:

"Sets a new standard for grandeur and magnificence. I am sure that Boston's verdict will agree with New York's: dramatically and artistically astounding."

Boston American.

"All the characters stand before us, not as historical figures, but as human beings. Lubitsch maintains his artistry to the last flicker."

Boston Transcript.
(In a half page article.)

In New York "Deception" has been held over for a fourth week at the Rivoli. No picture in history has ever before run there for more than two weeks.

All these facts are indisputable evidence that "Deception" is the greatest money-maker in history.

Dear Mr. Noehrn:

Each Educational comedy that we have used at the Newman, New Royal, and New 12th Street Theatres has gone over so well that I cannot help but call the matter to your attention and assure you of our high appreciation of the class of comedy that Educational is turning out.

A few weeks ago, we ran "A Fresh Start" at the Newman and no comedy shown in this theatre since the opening of the house has excited the comment or been so thoroughly appreciated than was this one.

I am confident that if Educational continues to turn out this class of comedy, they will not only have the deep gratitude of every exhibitor but also be overwhelmed with business.

The Educational product, to my mind, is a credit to the motion picture industry.

With kindest regards and Greetings of the Season,

Tour them through Continental Europe via Educational Scenics

NEW WINE IN OLD BOTTLES

The Rhone Valley is cluttered with antique Roman architecture which for nearly 1900 years has occupied choice business sites. Nowadays the whole population turns out on Sunday afternoons in these old ruins to enjoy a bull fight instead of contests of gladiators as of old.

THE MAN WHO ALWAYS SAT DOWN

His sole ambition was to become a mountaineer till he thought of putting one foot ahead of the other for fourteen thousand, seven hundred and six feet to climb one mountain. Instead, he made a successful three-hour airplane flight over the Matterhorn. With no place to land for two hours, he was sure "up in the air."

IN DUTCH

In Holland, every scene's a stage setting. So much of the land is water that their hay wagons are scows. Only the dikes and sand dunes keep out the sea, while along the canals are spotless towns whose houses seem to be peering anxiously at their reflections to see if their faces are clean.

LOST—A YODEL

After getting to the top of the Bietschhorn—ten thousand feet above sea level—we found we hadn't breath enough left for one first-class whoop, much less a yodel—and we had always wanted to do a yodel on the top of an Alp.

THERE IS NO SANTA CLAUS

The first story we ever heard was about a dog that rescued travelers lost in the Swiss Alps. Finally we visited Great St. Bernard Pass, the scene of this immortal tale. We were disappointed. The dogs carried no canteens. It was like the morning we learned that Santa Claus was a myth.

INDIVIDUALITY

Your audiences will greatly appreciate this unique form of personally conducted jolly journeys.

GETTING A POLISH

We thought Dante was a Cuban ballplayer, so they packed us off to the Riviera, where the nobility of Europe searches for health and pleasure. The picture shows the beautiful Mediterranean, the olive trees of Portofino, Parragi Cottage, the Bay of Naples, the Isle of Capri, the Blue Grotto and last, but not least, Vesuvius.

THE QUAINT ISLE OF MARKEN

The tiny Dutch Isle seems quite apart from the rest of the world. Visitors from every land delight in Marken's peculiar customs, the quaint dresses of the women and children—and especially the children themselves, probably the most picturesque in all the world.

THE SEVEN LEAGUE BOOTERS

Switzerland plays no weather favorites. Every month of the year is a climatic knockout. In winter, continental society flivvers about on skiis all over the well-known Alps. We found any number of high steppers who seemed more at home on their seven-foot sticks than we did in our humble and worthy boots.

PYRENEES AND WOODEN LEGS

Along the northern end of Spain where the meadows of France come down to meet the border, the snow-capped Pyrenees stand across the way, and on the fence, so to speak, is the miniature Republic of Andorra. Here in the Landes there are sheep all over the place, and shepherds stand twelve feet high on wooden stilts.

WANTED: AN ELEVATOR

High in the Pennine Alps is the Pointe d'Orny, a 10,000-foot peak of rock cutting a jagged crest against the sky. When we finally struck bottom, after going over the top, we made up our minds to climb nothing higher than the Woolworth Tower till mountains are equipped with elevators and steam heat.

"Tremendous Box-office Possibilities"

"Combine a tensely dramatic story, fine direction, a well-planned scenario, an extremely talented star and a competent supporting cast and there can be but one result. "REPUTATION" is a great picture. It is based upon a story that has as wide an appeal as there are average emotions to play upon. Taking this basis, the scenarists have performed a fine piece of playmaking."

As to Miss Dean—"Her dynamic personality, genuine appeal and distinct talent in registering the complete gamut of emotions results in a performance that is among the outstanding pieces of acting on the screen."

AN EXPLANATION

The Associated Producers, Inc. take this opportunity to correct an error of transcription in one of their recent trade journal advertisements in which the subject, "I Am Guilty!" was exploited. At the bottom of the page copy, a statement was inadvertently included to the effect that the managing editors of the Hearst newspapers throughout the United States had received a request to co-operate with the "A. P." in exploiting the picture.

No authority was given to publish this fact, and therefore the Associated Producers, Inc. take this method of acknowledging their error and also this opportunity to thank the Hearst papers for the co-operation that they have given our production. "I AM GUILTY!"

In One Week In One Theatre

That's What This Great Divorce Problem Picture Did in New York

On its pre-release week's showing at the Rialto, New York, "The Wild Goose" played to $24,961.20.

During this week New York enjoyed the first warm outdoor summer weather of the season.

Ask somebody who will not lie for the other picture box office cash records in New York this same week.

And bear in mind during its presentation every big Broadway picture house held a heavily advertised picture and a number of theatres ordinarily the homes of what are known as "legitimate productions" were playing feature pictures upon which fortunes have been spent in advertising, billing and other exploitation. Only Mr. Hearst's two New York papers were used for the advertising of "The Wild Goose"—no other New York newspapers were used.

"The Wild Goose" is a picturization of the great novel dealing with divorce by Gouverneur Morris, which was enjoyed by millions of readers when it appeared in Hearst's Magazine.

The dramatic intensity of the situations leading to divorce has been wonderfully and intensely brought out in the masterly direction of the picture by Albert Capellani, who directed "The Inside of the Cup."

The Reasons

for the astonishing success of Cosmopolitan Productions

First—The Scenarios

Written by the leading scenario writers from the greatest stories of the greatest authors in the world, appearing in the greatest magazines in the world, secured regardless of expense.

Second—The Direction

Directed by master directors who have demonstrated their ability by consistent box office successes.

Third—The Casts

Every character in every Cosmopolitan Production is cast with the utmost care. Only the leading artists of proven ability are selected.

Fourth—The Settings

Created by the famous Cosmopolitan Scenic Staff under the direction of Joseph Urban—built by the greatest staff of technical scenic artists ever assembled in one group.

Every setting especially created for each particular picture. No settings are used again in productions—no faking on settings.

And Last but Not Least—The Publicity

Utilizing all the power of the greatest newspaper organization in the world, the Hearst organization. An immense audience of over fifteen million readers are constantly reminded of the character of Cosmopolitan Productions through heavily illustrated large space advertisement and news stories in the Hearst Newspapers, the circulation of which cover the United States, from coast to coast.

The exhibitor who does not grasp the full import of the message in this advertisement, who does not realize how much money there is for him in Cosmopolitan Productions lacks the foresight and ability to grasp the opportunity that makes success a certainty.

If DEMPSEY came to your town

If Jack Dempsey came to your town everyone who could walk would be at the railroad station to see him come in.

If you could have Dempsey in your theatre you would have S. R. O. even if your seating capacity was ten times as big as it is.

That's because every newspaper is playing up the coming fight with Carpentier on July 2nd and everybody is reading about the American heavyweight champion of the world.

You can have Dempsey in your town; you can have him in your theatre; you can cash in on the tremendous interest and the amazing newspaper publicity; for you can show the serial sensation of the decade, "Daredevil Jack," which has wrecked the records of every theatre that has played it.

Tie up to the greatest opportunity for increased business you ever had; book Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack."

At the Head of the Stairs

At the head of the stairs stood a man and a girl. They were listening terrified to the sound of voices which came up from the room below.

"I know he's here! Who did he come for—you or Jeanne?"

And then a woman's voice—almost a whimper—"Not me, Philip! Not me!"

Then suddenly the hall door burst open and Jerry, half-crazed with jealous doubts, started up the stairs.

The young girl shrank back in terror against the stair rail. Instinctively she stretched out her hand in protection.

The dramatic intensity of this story grips you. It is the chronicle of an American household saved from ruin by a young girl's devotion.

LIFE

17 West Thirty-first Street

NEW YORK May 17, 1921.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I am glad you published that letter from Mr. Partington taking issue with my criticism of trade paper reviews. I am equally glad that he did not hesitate to ask me where I get off.

The answer is that I represent the million readers of LIFE - a great majority of whom are regular motion picture fans. It was at the request of these fans that LIFE broke away from a long established precedent, and established a department of film reviews.

These fans are the court of final appeal in all questions of judgment. Their opinion is of more importance than yours or mine or Partington's or Adolph Zukor's or Nathan L. Miller's. We must adjust our point of view to their's - or get out.

If I consistently praise pictures which my readers dislike, and condemn pictures that my readers enjoy, my value as a critic will be somewhat less than nil. And I will be fired.

It is therefore up to me to put myself in the place of the average fan, and judge each picture accordingly. The minute I get the idea that my brow is several degrees above normal, then do my reviews become worthless.

In this respect, my problem is just exactly the same as yours. Your reviewers write for the trade; I write for the fans. If a picture is bad from my readers' point of view, it certainly must be bad from yours.

Or is that one of those things which I, as a rank outsider, am not supposed to know anything about?

The time is coming when movie criticism will be put on the same plane as dramatic criticism in magazines and newspapers; and it will have the same widespread effect.

Then, perhaps, the wise guys in the motion picture industry will begin to realize that real criticism is not the voice of a few dogmatic highbrows; it is the inevitable expression of public opinion.

Sincerely yours,

Robert E. Sherwood

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The most popular novels of the present day include "Main St." "Miss Lulu Bett" and "Moon Calf," all of which are stories of urban or small town American people. Irving Bacheller's story deals with people of the ordinary middle west well known to everyone, so much so that Sam Henshaw, small town grocer as played by Otis Harlan is a prototype of thousands of such men to be found anywhere outside of the big cities. You have a number of them in your town.

If you are running a house an where excepting in a big city, tell your people that in "Keeping Up With Lizzie" they are going to see characters that they know and understand, and they are going to like them. There is an air of naturalness about the entire production that makes it well worthy of showing. Your people are sure to like this.

Irving Bacheller's name is among the front rank of American writers and his popularity can easily be capitalized. If your people remember names tell them this was made by the same producers who gave them "The Truant Husband." Enid Bennett's name also will be used.

The trade papers agree with Mr. Bacheller's statement printed in last week's advertisement—that "'Keeping Up With Lizzie' is a big picture."

It is a picture that will please anywhere—a picture providing clean, wholesome entertainment—with all the charm of Irving Bacheller's book faithfully reproduced.

This, the first of Irving Bacheller's books to be picturized, marks a great step towards worthier pictures—a real answer to all censorship problems.

NEW TABLOID SCREEN DRAMA

Feature Casts Adorn Short Reeler Productions.

Concentrated Interest Makes for Punch.

Move May Have Effect on the Long Pictures.

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT.

"The Selig-Rork two reelers are to be an antidote for an overdose of features."

"'The Policeman and the Baby,' with William Desmond and Wallace Beery, is an oddity of the human interest type very much like an O. Henry story."

"'The Northern Trail,' a James Oliver Curwood story, featuring Lewis Stone and Ethel Grey Terry, is a northern drama, in which the triangle situation is handled with skill. The snow settings are worthy of a five-reel picture. I know that I have seldom seen such a blizzard on the screen as the one in this picture."

"What struck me particularly about the productions was their brisk tempo. Not for a moment did I feel that lagging of interest, that wearisome boredom which is the bane of the long feature."

"The best of our melodramas so often might have been shortened with a heightening of the dramatic effect, and for the human interest sketch, the thrill play, the new and shorter form with its concentrated events seems so much more suitable than the draggy incidents."

"As a matter of fact program routine has become hackneyed and a project to revive two-reel dramas would serve to relieve the overburden of sameness."

Make It Pay

THERE are trade papers—and trade papers.

It costs more to make a trade paper in this field than in any other—with but one exception we know of.

That's because so much service is demanded by the reader.

It costs us to manufacture MOTION PICTURE NEWS more than twenty times what the reader pays for it.

If any advertiser doesn't use so strong and valuable a medium as MOTION PICTURE NEWS to his and the exhibitor's advantage it is simply because he doesn't know how.

It's simple enough.

First, decide just what you want to accomplish.

The distributor of film for instance, we take it, wants more film rentals and wants the exhibitor to draw bigger audiences.

THEN, he can put just this sort of selling copy in our advertising pages. He can—POSITIVELY—get just such results.

He can't get these results by scattering his efforts. He's GOT to concentrate in at least one publication. He can't get results if he places his advertising simply to get worthless reading notices. That isn't advertising; it isn't business: it's—well we'd hate to say.

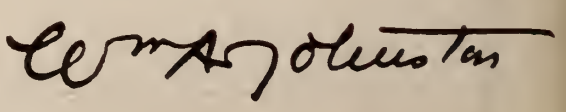
The exhibitor wants good straight selling copy—because it helps him advertise to his public; the exchangeman wants it—because it makes bookings; we want it—because it makes a better MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

* * *



And it can be done.

Ask us how. We know our own book: and we know how it can be used—to the producers', the distributors', the exhibitors', great profit.

It's important.

Advertising is one of the big economic factors in this field—a mighty big one.

Ask us how to make it pay.

Big In Every Way"

Wids

It will pay you to read every word of these reviews:

THE REAL THING

"Marshall Neilan's latest production is big in every way and should prove a box office attraction. It will bear promises and you can tell them it's the biggest thing the producer has done yet, and proves him thoroughly capable when it comes to directing spectacles. There are many battle scenes, two in particular which are well worth seeing—the massacre by the Indians, and later Custer's last fight. There is some very realistic fighting.

"Marshall Neilan has made the biggest picture of his career. He seems to have a faculty for handling pictures which require exterior settings, and in his latest production, the entire atmosphere of the out-of-doors is no small factor in the entertainment which the picture affords. The long shots of the battle formation and the troops in the distance have been excellently photographed. There are many unusually pretty scenes and the western locations all told are THE REAL THING.

"James Kirkwood gives a splendid performance in the most important role and Marjorie Daw is a pretty heroine. A large supporting company has been carefully selected and all do good work."—Wids.

A BIG SUCCESS

"Another Marshall Neilan success. It is excellent Western melodrama, a real thriller of its kind, with the quality of suspense developed to the last degree, plenty of fast action—the pace never slackening for an instant—well directed and cleverly acted by a splendid cast. Also it possesses considerable historical interest, the fate of General Custer and his troops on the Little Big Horn River, when ambushed by hostile Indians, is worked into a stirring episode, the sort of thing guaranteed to rivet the attention of young and old, and indeed all through this romantic story of the winning of the West the spectators are kept on the verge of breathless expectation. The picture registers among the best melodramatic offerings of the season and exhibitors should find it a box office attraction of stellar value."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

BOYS WILL EAT IT UP

"Men will like this picture, the boys will eat it up and the women will accept it because of the comedy and the clever work of Wesley Barry. The production has unusual exploitation possibilities, not the least of which is the all star cast. It presents James Kirkwood and a fine cast of types and competent players, and is enacted with some wonderful scenic settings. Wesley Barry is given his greatest acting opportunity. He earns a number of good laughs in comedy scenes and puts over a bit of real dramatic work in the last part of the sequence devoted to Custer's fight."—Motion Picture News.

HIS FINEST PICTURE

"The finest and most artistic contribution that Marshall Neilan has ever made to the screen. The picture is spectacular, colorful and thrilling, portrayed in a gripping and dramatic manner. An absorbing and beautiful story of love and adventure."—New York Review.

HIS GREATEST PHOTOPLAY

"An all star production and Marshall Neilan's greatest photoplay. Wonderful and spectacular scenes. An absorbing story of frontier life. Marshall Neilan has outdone all his previous productions."—Pittsburg Leader.

MOST THRILLING

"A story of love, intrigue and adventure, with one of the most thrilling and picturesque pages of American history as its background. Dramatic—spectacular." Omaha Bee.

VOL. XXIII MAY 28, 1921 No. XXIII

Resigned But Not Defeated

GOVERNOR MILLER has signed the Lusk-Clayton measure and put censorship upon the statute books of the State of New York. There is nothing to do now save to await the appointment of the three super persons who will decide what the million fold population of the state may be permitted to see upon the screen.

The writer is strongly inclined to state some plain and perhaps ugly truths about the matter, as he sees it. The urge he feels is simply that of a citizen of the state; and his attitude has no bearing whatever upon his connection with the motion picture industry.

Speaking for the industry, as we must here, we feel sure that we can reflect its opinion in the following words: Now that the bill is a law we shall treat it as a law. But believing that it in no way reflects public opinion, that it is an uncalled for and outrageous piece of legislation, that it is utterly impracticable, that it is assuredly un-American if not basically unconstitutional, we shall use every single recourse left to us to prove that these assertions are valid and true.

This industry, as we know it and believe in it, will fight the issue to the last ditch.

An Alliance of Strength

WE are, all of us, well aware of the fact that the recent attack upon the industry from without has been largely due to the character of the newspaper and poster advertising of pictures.

In many instances this advertising has been wide open to attack. The picture has been unjustly accused because of the reprehensible poster and newspaper copy.

Advertising today is a very large and potent force in this field. It has grown swiftly to large dimensions along with the quick growth of the industry. We have no definite figures as to the amount of exhibitor advertising being done today but we do know that it bulks large.

In cities the size of Los Angeles, Seattle, Newark, Detroit, Cleveland, San Francisco, the leading newspapers carry from six to over fifteen thousand dollars a month in exhibitor advertising. On this basis the larger cities of the country will aggregate an expenditure of fully five million dollars a year. To this must be added the advertising outlay of more than a thousand smaller cities and towns.

The outlay for posters and billboards space is a close second. It also runs well into the millions.

Advertising, we repeat, is a big factor with the industry today; and it is going to be much bigger. We believe that pictures, in the near future, will be the most widely advertised commodity; that advertising of itself will coordinate the present loose strings—the big ones—in the industry; that the leaders of the future will be advertising men.

We expect, very shortly, to treat of advertising as an economic factor, in a series of articles.

Just at present, however, we want to present only one and very important phase of the situation.

Some of the larger industries today have seen fit to ally themselves with the Advertising Clubs of the World to the end that the industry and its product may be rightly and reasonably set before the public at large.

Advertising is apt to get hotheaded—even when it is issued by the most stable forms. We have had striking instances of this in the picture field—and recently. Then there's always the irresponsible form of individual that doesn't give a rip about the consequences to his industry and its product so long as he can put over quickly his own wild scheme.

The Advertising Clubs of the World have a reputation for constructive building. The organization is composed of sane business men. They are not meddlers. They aim to help only; their record is good and their reputation high with the business world and with the public.

An alliance between the industry and this organization seems a most desirable thing; and we strongly urge that steps be taken by the National Association to this end.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Vacancy on Penn. Censor Bd. Arouses Discussion

The fact that the term of office of one member of the Board of Motion Picture Censors in Pennsylvania expires in the latter part of May, has revived the efforts of the church and welfare organizations, headed by the Rev. Dr. Twombly, of Lancaster, to have Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer reinstalled as a member of the board.

Dr. Oberholtzer, who is regarded by the reformers as a far more rigid censor than any other that Pennsylvania has ever had, was removed about a year ago from the board to a newly created post of director, which carried with it no power to vote for or against the rejection or retention of a film submitted to the board.

Sen. Walker on Tour in Interest of M. P. T. O.

Senator James J. Walker, general counsel for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will be in Kansas City on Monday, May 23. He is making a tour of the country to offset the action of blue-law advocates and for the inauguration of a National legislative campaign which includes the five per cent film rental tax, music tax and other matters of interest to the industry.

Senator Walker will be accompanied by Samuel I. Berman, national organizer and secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State. They will be met by a joint committee of the leading exhibitors of Missouri.

A monstrous mass meeting of exhibitors of both states will be held at the Hotel Muehlebach, where a dinner will be tendered to the visitors. Approximately 500 will be in attendance. President Charles T. Sears will be chairman and master of ceremonies.

Late News From the Coast

A wire just received from the Coast conveys news of current activities in the Metro and the Realart studios. Ethel Grandin is about to return to the screen as the leading woman in "The Hunch," playing opposite Gareth Hughes. George D. Baker will direct this subject for Metro. Edward Flannigan and John Steppling have been engaged for important roles in this production.

Bayard Veiller will direct Viola Dana in a story by Frank R. Adams. The subject has been tentatively titled "Under the Sour Apple Tree." Wedgewood Nowell has been cast for an important role in "The Match Breaker," directed by Dallas Fitzgerald. Viola Dana is the star in this production.

At the Realart studios, Director Frank O'Connor is now completing "Everything for Sale." Mr. O'Connor will next direct May McAvoy in "A Virginian," a play by Eugene Presby. Bull Montana has been cast for the role of a bootlegger in "One Wild Week," starring Bebe Daniels.

James Hoff, Former Trade Paper Editor, Dies

JAMES HOFF, prominent for many years in the trade-paper field of the theatrical industry, died on Tuesday evening of this week at his home at Park Hill, Yonkers, N. Y., following a stroke of apoplexy. Mr. Hoff is survived by one son. Funeral services are to be held at the Park Hill residence on Friday morning, May 20.

James Hoff was born August 13, 1865, in Titusville, Pa. In his early years, he studied for the ministry at the Allegheny College, Meadeville, Pa., but abandoned this career for the journalistic field. His earlier writing career was spent in Syracuse and Rochester, where he was associated with various trade publications and also the local newspapers. Later he came to New York and became the editor of "The Bill-Poster," official organ of the bill-posting trade. He next went to Cincinnati, where he became associated with "The Billboard." He later came to New York again as the New York representative of "The Billboard." During this time "The Show World" was started and he transferred his services to this publication.

In 1909, he assumed the editorship of "The Film Index," and when this was absorbed in 1911 by the Chalmers Publishing Company, he became editor of "The Moving Picture World," with which he continued until about three years ago when he was made Assistant General-Manager of the Chalmers Publishing Company. Since then he had been interested in the business side rather than in the editorial phases of the Chalmers publication.

Engravers and Unions Cannot Fix Prices

The Meyer-Martin bill, which passed the recent session of the New York State Legislature, was signed by Governor Miller yesterday. This bill, which becomes a law immediately, amends the Donnelly Anti-Trust Act by extending the prohibition against monopoly to "any article or product used in the conduct of trade, commerce or manufacture." The provisions and penalties of the Donnelly Act previously applied only to monopolies in restraint of trade which affected commodities in common use. The practice of price-fixing, as employed in the photo-engraving industry, by agreements between employers and unions (enforced by strike threats), is now made unlawful.

Florida Censorship Bill Up for Second Reading

The bill introduced last month in the lower house of the Florida legislature by Representative Futch of Lake County, Fla., which provides for the creation of a state board of censors and for a system of regulation of all motion pictures and film advertising shown in the state, is scheduled to come up for consideration and second reading before the House on Wednesday of this week. This bill was favorably reported on by the Judiciary Committee early in May.

Sunday Opening Upheld in So. Dakota Test Case

A test case in the Sunday Blue Law enforcement campaign instituted by the officials of South Dakota has just been decided by the Supreme Court of that state in favor of the motion picture interests.

Word to this effect was received today by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in a telegram from Benjamin Friedman, President of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade. In his wire Mr. Friedman said that the decision of the Supreme Court establishes the right of exhibitors to hold Sunday shows in South Dakota.

State's Attorney Charles H. Warren recently swore out a warrant for the arrest of Allen Goethal, manager and owner of a theatre in Huron, S. D., charging him with having conducted a moving picture show on Sunday, March 27th, and the Supreme Court has just handed down a verdict of not guilty.

New York F. I. L. M. Club Names Committees

Jack Von Tilzer has resigned as chairman of the grievance committee of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York city, owing to his resignation as branch manager of Associated Producers.

L. Rosenbluh, acting president of the club, has named a new grievance committee as follows: Henry Siegel, chairman; Lester Adler, S. Eckman, Jr., L. Rosenbluh, and S. Zierler. The following executive committee has been appointed: S. Rosenbluh, chairman; S. Zierler, S. Eckman, William E. Raynor, L. Adler, H. Seigel and S. H. Fabian.

West Coast Wire Briefs

Hiram Abrams has announced that Rex Beach will produce for United Artists. The pictures will be produced in Los Angeles.

The Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California have elected the following new officers: J. S. Lustig, president; J. L. Lazarus, vice-president; W. O. Lewis, vice-president; Glenn Harper, secretary; D. B. Vanderlip, financial secretary; B. H. Lustig, treasurer. The above with F. A. Grant, J. E. Wrightsman and J. M. Young, will serve as the board of directors.

Clarke Going to Coast on Paramount Business

Victor H. Clarke, formerly general manager of the Long Island studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., has been appointed special representative of the producing department by Jesse L. Lasky vice-president. Mr. Clarke will leave New York on June 1 to go to Los Angeles to investigate the company's properties in Los Angeles, which include the Lasky and Realart studios.

Censorship Becomes a Law in N. Y. Effective August 1st

Gov. Miller Signs Lusk-Clayton Bill Without Comment

WITHOUT comment of any sort, Governor Nathan L. Miller, of New York state, approved the Lusk-Clayton motion picture censorship bill on May 14, and announced his decision when the bill was included among the last of a batch of thirty-day bills which had been reposing with the Governor since the close of the legislature. The motion picture censorship bill was the last to receive consideration by the Governor, with one exception, and becomes from now on, chapter 715, of the laws of 1921.

No measure introduced at the recent session of the New York state legislature attracted more general attention than the Lusk-Clayton bill. In past legislatures, there have been motion picture bills introduced, only to be killed in committee, or die in the hands of the Governor.

Stubbornly as the bill was fought by exhibitors and producers, motion picture censorship will prevail in New York state from August 1 on. The make up of the New York state Commission for the regulation of motion pictures will not be announced by Governor Miller until he returns from his present two weeks' vacation. This much is certain.

One of the commissioners, it has been learned from most reliable authority, will be none less than a former Lieutenant-Governor of the state. If the Governor has settled on the other two, there is not the slightest intimation of their identity. On the one hand, one hears that he will not name a woman to the commission, but will request that a woman be appointed as one of the deputies at a somewhat less salary, and with less responsibility. Then again, it is rumored that there will be a woman on the commission and that she will be one of the Republican leaders of the state. It is said to be almost certain that Mrs. Clarence Waterman, of Brooklyn, who lobbied so consistently at Albany for the bill, week after week, will not be named by Governor Miller.

It is also practically certain that the commissioners will not be of the so-called radical reformers. No commission to be named by the Governor will receive more careful consideration in its make up than the one which will pass upon the motion picture films.

From June 1 to August 1, when censorship becomes effective, there will be a great deal of work cut out for the commission. The fact that there will be many bureaus and departments going out of existence on July 1, through consolidation, will leave any number of rooms at the State Capitol, at Albany, available for the censorship commission. Machines must be installed and a thousand and one details attended to in order that the work of reviewing pictures may get under way with just as little delay as possible. It is thought likely that the commission will first visit other states where censorship exists in order to study methods.

Governor Miller is given the right of naming the chairman of the commission, likewise in designating the commissioner who shall act as secretary. While the law does not specifically state that the commissioners must come from New York state, it is improbable that any of the $7,500 plums, constituting the annual salary of a commissioner, will go to anyone outside the state, no matter how well qualified a person might be.

Governor Miller is also given the power to remove a commissioner because of inefficiency, neglect of duty or misconduct.

Commissioners will serve for five year terms except those who are about to be named. One of these will be appointed and serve to December 31, 1922; another will serve to a like period in 1924, while a third will serve up to December 31, 1925. In addition to receiving a salary of $7,500 a year, the commissioners will be allowed their traveling expenses. The commission is also given the right to name its deputy, inspectors and such other employes as will be required, and also to fix the amount of their salaries.

While the main office will be located in the State Capitol at Albany, there will be at least one branch bureau, and possibly, two. One of these will be in New York, and if the commission thinks two are necessary, the second will go to Buffalo. A commissioner or deputy commissioner will be in charge of the bureaus and will have the right of censoring and licensing film.

The law provides that the commission must promptly examine all film that is submitted to it. In case of a refusal on the part of the commission to license any picture or part, the law provides that the owner of the film must be furnished with a written report giving the reasons for the refusal to grant a license or permit, and also a description of such portions as are found objectionable.

In regard to used films, the law specifies that the commission "shall, without inspecting it, issue for any motion picture film which has been publicly exhibited in the state of New York prior to August 1, 1921, a permit, only if and when application shall have been made within thirty days after the law goes into effect." The fee for such permit has been placed at $2 for each film of a thousand feet or less, whether original or duplicate.

Current event films do not require inspection, and can be licensed. Scientific and educational films do not require examination provided that they are of a strictly scientific character intended for use by the learned profession, with the proviso that a sworn description of the film and that it is not to be exhibited at any private or public place of amusement, is filed with the commission.

The commission is also given the right to license any motion picture film intended solely for educational, charitable or religious purposes, or by any employer for the instruction of his employes, provided that the film is accompanied by a sworn description. No fee will be charged for such permit.

The commission is given the power to revoke any permit five days after notice in writing to the applicant.

All fees collected from the examination of film may be paid over each month to the state treasurer. In passing on film

"Rider of the King Log" Has Special Showing

THE ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS' production, "The Rider of the King Log" was enthusiastically received by a distinguished audience at the special premiere showing of the picture, held recently in Aeolian Hall, New York City, under the auspices of The Maine Society of New York.

Governor Percival Baxter, of Maine, made a special trip to New York with members of his staff and a party of friends to attend the showing. At the conclusion he said that he was delighted with the picturization of the beauties of Maine and with the strength and truth of the characters presented.

Among other distinguished guests of the evening was Mr. Frank Munsey, owner of the New York Herald and Sun, with a party of friends. Others prominent in the audience were John E. Storey, sales manager of the Associated Exhibitors; John C. Ragland, vice president of The Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corp.; Charles R. Flint, James D. Merriman, William L. Flye, Holman Day, author of the story; Harry O. Hoyt, the director, and all the members of the cast.

"We have tried in our humble way to make the photoplay tell a genuine story of a genuine people," he said. "The rugged beauty of our North woods, the charm of life in the lumberlands, and the strong characters of the men in that environment have always appealed to me. I think these things have a strong appeal to every American. If we have caught that rugged spirit, that strong, honest hard-fighting, hard-working spirit of the woodsmen of our country, then I am happy to have had some part in it."

The picture supported the theory of the author, according to the general opinion of the audience. Comment on the work of Frank Sheridan and Richard Travers was heard on all sides.

First Nat'l Branch Managers Meet in N. Y.

100% Attendance at Enthusiastic Gathering; First Nat'l Producers Entertain

ENTHUSIASM and optimism prevailed over every session of the Associated First National Pictures branch managers' convention at the Hotel Astor, New York, this week, and when the exchange heads returned to their respective territories on Thursday and Friday, it was with the distinct feeling that more constructive work had been accomplished in those meetings than at any other convention of the kind which they had ever attended in their experience as film men.

The discussions, conducted under the guidance of J. D. Williams, Harry O. Schwalbe, covered every phase of organization business, and every factor that goes into the composition of the industrial and business condition of the various sections of the nation at the present time. Each day the managers assembled on the eighth floor at the Astor at ten o'clock, adjourning at one for luncheon, and re-convening at two for a three-hour afternoon session.

The entertainment program laid down for the evenings of the convention was "produced under the direction of the independent producers releasing through Associated First National. Joseph M. Schenck fired the opening gun of hospitality Monday evening at a gala beefsteak at Healy's with Norma, Constance and Natalie Talmadge as the hostesses of the occasion. The dinner was followed by an original comedy, in which Buster Keaton, who was at the hosts' table, played a leading role as did the Misses Talmadge. An elaborate vaudeville program followed the picture.

The dinner Tuesday evening was given by Miss Hope Hampton to the exchange managers and their wives at the Claridge. Again the seating capacity of the dining room was taxed to the utmost, and it was not until near midnight that the banqueters began to consider departing for their homes and hotels. An unexpected surprise was given the assemblage when J. E. Brulatour, the producer of the Hope Hampton pictures, rose to introduce Marcus Loew to the exchange men. Mr. Loew was cheered long and loudly as he cordially congratulated the managers on their organization and expressed his pleasure at being with them.

Wednesday evening, the final evening of the convention, brought the meeting to a close with an extraordinary burst of entertainment, beginning with a dinner at the Flotilla, given by the Louis B. Mayer Co., producers of the Anita Stewart and the John M. Stahl productions. This was followed by a theatre party given by the Katherine MacDonald Co., at the performance of "Two Little Girls in Blue." Midnight found the managers and her wives at the "Midnight Follies" as the guests of Marshall Neilan.

Several of the principal franchise holders were present at the session of the convention, among them Emanuel Mandelbaum, of Cleveland; Spyros Skouras, of St. Louis; Sam Katz, of Chicago. On Tuesday afternoon Jules Mastbaum, the head of the Stanley Co., of Philadelphia, looked in long enough to greet the managers and assure them of the satisfaction he felt at being a First National franchise holder.

A one hundred per cent attendance was recorded, not a single manager being absent. In addition to Dave Bershon, the manager of the Los Angeles exchange, John McCormick, the special publicity representative in the southwest, made the journey to New York to attend the convention. Mr. McCormick has already broken most existing publicity records along the Pacific Coast since his identification with Associated First National. As an aftermath to the convention, there was an informal luncheon at the Astor Friday at which Mr. McCormick was formally introduced to the editors of the trade press, by the home office staff of Associated First National Pictures.

L. E. Goldman Defends Missouri Exhibitors

Denies That They "Slipped One Over" in Passing the Deposit Bill

CONSIDERABLE discussion has been aroused by the many comments about the alleged rumor that producers plan to fight the Missouri Deposit Law. Lawrence E. Goldman, general counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri and chairman of the legislative committee and author of the Deposit Bill, gave out the following to a reporter for the Motion Picture News:

"I regret very much the circulation of certain statements which have cast an insinuating and unfair reflection upon the exhibitors of Missouri. A week ago several trade papers carried an article which was undoubtedly given out by the Nampi as a news item, in which it was stated that the Missouri exhibitors slipped one over on the film exchanges; that the Deposit Bill had been lost in the scuffle while the exchange men were greatly excited over the Blue Sunday situation; that the bill was up to the Governor before the exchange men awoke; and other untrue statements of that nature. The same article accused certain exhibitors in the northern and western parts of Missouri with trading anti-censorship votes for votes favorable to the Deposit Bill. All this is without foundation in truth and I pass the lie to anyone who dares make such statements.

"In the first place, I do not think that there was a legislative measure in the country at the time that received wider publicity. The World, the News, Wids, the Trade Review—all carried considerable space almost every week reporting progress of Senate Bill No. 364. Even the St. Louis newspapers devoted space to the bill and the reasons for its introduction. In face of all this they have the gall to say that the bill was slipped over and that they knew nothing about the bill. Sounds peculiar, doesn't it?

"Then again, as to tracing votes—this is a lie from the whole cloth. There is not a scintilla of truth to this charge and no one knows this better than the exchange men. In fact there was nothing to trade. Every legislator knew the merits of the bill and there is no exception when I say every representative and senator in the House and Senate was 100 per cent for the bill. Even if anyone was disposed to "trade" there was no occasion. Further, were it not for the work of the exhibitors—especially the eleventh hour labor—the producers would now be under censorship in Missouri. Sears, Burkey, Moghler, Mueller, Rodgers, and other fighting exhibitors were the men who saved Missouri from censorship—not the exchange men. As to the excitement caused in the exchange circles as to Sunday laws—that's funny, in fact, a joke. Had the legislative program been handled by the producers and exchange men, Missouri would be under the heel of every reformer in the nation. The producers can thank Sears, Burkey, Rodgers, Moghler, and other exhibitors that they were saved.

"I would like to see close co-operation between all branches of the industry, and as for myself and associates, I can say that we all believe in harmony.

Nominating Meeting of Nat'l Ass'n Held

The Fifth Annual Meeting of the general division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was held at Suite 4-5-6, 1520 Broadway, New York, on Friday, May 20.

This meeting was called for the purpose of nominating nine directors to represent the General Division in the Board of Directors of the National Association for the ensuing year.

Proposed Massachusetts Censorship Bill

The censorship bill which was passed by the Massachusetts Legislature was known as House Bill 1504. It was drafted by the joint Senate and House Ways and Means Committee after its consideration of the following bills: House Bill 613, sponsored by Representative Frank B. Phinney; House Bill 618, sponsored by the State Committee on Motion Pictures; House Bill 845, sponsored by Daniel W. Casey; House Bill 955, sponsored by M. A. O'Brien, Jr., and Senate Bill 191, sponsored by Dennis J. Sullivan.

The bill which was passed by the Massachusetts Legislature is as follows:

AN ACT

Relative to the examination and Licensing of Motion Picture Films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in this Commonwealth.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Section 1. For the purposes of this act, "department" shall mean the department of public safety; "commissioner," the commissioner of public safety; "persons" shall include films, associations and corporations.

Section 2. On and after January first, of the year nineteen hundred and twenty-two, it shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit or display publicly in the commonwealth of Massachusetts any motion picture film unless the said film has been submitted to and approved by the commissioner.

Section 3. The commissioner shall approve such films or parts thereof as are not obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman or such as do not tend to debase or corrupt morals or incite to crime and may disapprove such films or parts thereof as are obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or such as tend to debase or corrupt morals or incite to crime.

Section 4. In case any owner or lessee of a motion picture film, or the owner, manager or lessee of a motion picture establishment is aggrieved by or dissatisfied with a decision of the commissioner under the provisions of this act, the commissioner shall within ten days of a written request therefor hold a hearing thereon which may, in the discretion of the commissioner, be public or private. Within five days thereafter he shall affirm, modify or revoke such decision. In case the appellant is still aggrieved by the decision, appeal to the superior court sitting in equity, by petition alleging that the action of the commissioner is unreasonable and not in conformity with law, and if said allegations are sustained, any justice of said court shall have power to revoke or modify such decision; otherwise the same shall be confirmed. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive any person of the right to pursue any other lawful remedy.

Section 5. The commissioner may require that all films approved under the provisions of this act shall be appropriately stamped and designated, and that before and in connection with the public exhibition of the same there shall be shown upon the screen a statement of such approval in such form as the commissioner may prescribe.

Section 6. Subject to the approval of the governor and council, the commissioner shall make and enforce such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to enforce the provisions of this act.

Section 7. A charge of two dollars shall be paid for the inspection of each reel of film or each duplicate reel of film not exceeding one thousand linear feet, and four dollars for each reel or duplicate exceeding one thousand linear feet. All money so received shall be paid into the treasury of the commonwealth.

Section 8. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act the commissioner may appoint, and may at his discretion remove, a deputy director of moving picture censorship at an annual salary not to exceed thirty-five hundred dollars, whose appointment and removal shall not be subject to the civil service laws and regulations but shall be subject to the approval of the governor and council, and may also appoint, in accordance with the provisions of section six of chapter twenty-two of the General Laws, a sufficient number of officers to the division of state police and of clerks and other assistants to carry out the provisions of this act.

Section 9. For the enforcement of the provisions of this act, all members of the department of public safety shall have authority to enter any premises where motion pictures are publicly exhibited.

Section 110. Any person violating any provision of this act or any rule or regulation adopted thereunder shall be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars for the first offense and not exceeding one hundred dollars for each succeeding offence.

George Fecke in New York

George M. A. Fecke, president and general manager of the Motion Pictures Distributing Corporation of Boston, Mass., arrived in New York City this week.

Associated Producer Has Plans for Vast Expansion During Ensuing Year

PLANS for expansion on a vast scale during the ensuing year are being inaugurated by General Manager Al Lichtman, of Associated Producers, Inc., according to an announcement from the headquarters of that organization. These plans provide for an extension of distribution activities that will embrace the whole world, it is stated, and for an increased service to exhibitors.

Each picture, according to Mr. Lichtman, will be sold to exhibitors on its own merits and strictly on its own value as an attraction to each particular theatre. Pictures will be sold on an individual basis. This arrangement is made possible, declares Associated's statement, by the fact that the production schedules for the coming year present an ambitious and formidable array of pictures, not one of which, as can be determined at this early date, will fall below the standard set by such attractions as Tourneur's "The Last of the Mohicans," and Ince's "Lying Lips," both of which were released by Associated Producers, Inc

Scheduled for May and June distribution are J. Parker Read's "I Am Guilty," starring Louise Glaum, released May 1; Mack Sennett's "Home Talent," released May 22; Thomas H. Ince's "Mother O' Mine," released June 5; Allan Dwan's "The Broken Doll," released June 12; Maurice Tourneur's "The Foolish Matrons," released June 19; and J. L. Frothingham's "The Ten Dollar Raise," released June 26.

"These pictures represent the best efforts of the producers whose reputation for making box office attractions is well known to exhibitors," said Mr. Lichtman. "Their value at the box office is tremendous because they embody the elements of popularity. While the artistic standard set by these productions is high they are indictive of what exhibitors may expect in the future from Associated Producers, Inc."

New York Incorporations

Companies incorporating and filing papers with the secretary of state at Albany, N. Y., during the past week, for the purpose of entering the motion picture industry, show the following directors and capitalization: Forward Film Purchasers, $10,000, H. J. Curtis, Woodmere, H. F. Chase, New York City, and J. F. McNamara, Jersey City; Colosseum Motion Picture Corporation, $300,000, A. C. Miller, E. Hurd, B. C. Whitman, New York City; T. and T. Films, $600,000, Norman Handel, E. J. Sichel, New York, and J. Fyans, Brooklyn; Commercial Traders Cinema Corporation, $200,000, Peter Andrich, M. Maricich, George W. Yates, New York; Whipple Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Brooklyn, H. Jacobson, S. Winderman, J. H. Madden, Brooklyn.

Joseph A. Golden Corporation, $5,000, Joseph A. Golden, E. V. Reiss, E. M. Weiss, New York; Olympian Productions, $10,000, L. B. Turin, R. Matkoff, John C. Sherman, New York; Myriad Pictures Corporation, $5,000, Harry Lewis, Walter Herzbrun, Harry Krivit, New York; Non-Theatrical Film Publishers, motion picture publishing, $50,000, Dolph Eastman, M. E. Eastman, Lucinda Gray, Brooklyn; Quality Film Titling Co., $65,000, New York, J. R. Lopez Sena, Long Island City, Joseph Hornstein, New York, Anthony Marella, Brooklyn; Music Score Service Corporation, $200,000, Jacob Silverman, Joseph A. Myruski, David Silverman, Brooklyn.

Rohlfs Made Ass't. Treas. of F. B. Warren Corp.

Announcement is made of the election as assistant treasurer of the F. B. Warren Corporation, new national motion picture distributing organization, of John G. Rohlfs, for six years associated with Mr. Warren in various motion picture enterprises. He will begin his duties with the company on June 6.

Forecasts Improved Conditions After Sept. 1st

S. R. Kent, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has just completed a five-week trip around the country, expressed the opinion this week that there will be a marked improvement in conditions after September 1st. He said that a large number of theatre owners with whom he had talked were planning to make a big drive upon the opening of the new season.

He also expressed his determination to double Paramount's exploitation forces, as his investigations had proved to him the great service being rendered exhibitors by exploitation measures. Mr. Kent also spoke enthusiastically of the Paramount productions being prepared at Hollywood for fall release and emphasized "The Affairs of Anatol" and "Experience."

Florida Censor Bill Has Second Reading

The second reading of the bill introduced in the Florida legislature in April, which provides for the creation of a board of censors in Florida, was held on May 18.

The bill went to the judiciary committee and early in May this committee reported favorably on the bill. The Exhibitors League of Florida, of which C. D. Cooley of Tampa, Fla., is the president, had representatives present who endeavored to show that such a bill is not needed, that it is un-American and deprives the people of their rights under the Constitution.

Brunet Sails for Europe

Paul Brunet, president of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., sailed for Europe on Saturday, May 14, on his annual trip.

Canada Picture Interests to Form Association

A strong organization similar to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is now being formed in Canada. Its membership will comprise all the important branches of the industry in the Dominion, each functioning as a division of the association. Temporary headquarters of the new organization have been established at 21 Dundas street, East Toronto, which is the headquarters of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association of which Colonel John A. Cooper is chairman of the advisory board.

Colonel Cooper called upon Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association in New York recently, and outlined the plan and scope of the new Canadian organization. As an example of the problems with which the industry contends in Canada, there are eight censor boards in the Dominion—each with a different viewpoint as to what is fit subject matter for exhibition. Heavy taxation among other matters adds to the perplexities of the Canadian picture interests. The film distributors of Canada are already well organized. Their organization, the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association, will be the nucleus around which will be constructed the larger and more representative association. In the present membership of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association is included: Associated First National Eastern Canada, Ltd., Canadian Universal Canada, Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Goldwyn Pictures Corp., Regal Films, Ltd., Select Pictures Corp., Ltd., and the Specialty Film Import, Ltd.

Colonel Cooper was assured that the National Association will gladly co-operate with the Canadian committee in every way in perfecting their new organization and it is expected that the exchange of ideas and suggestions will prove of mutual benefit.

Hearing Soon on Penn. Non-Theatrical Exhibits

The final hearing on the proposed new code of rules for the government of exhibitions of motion pictures given by churches, schools and similar institutions in Pennsylvania will be held at the State Capitol in Harrisburg, on May 24, by the State Industrial Board of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry.

Already the board has announced radical amendments to the new code as originally proposed by it, including the elimination of the clauses which prohibited charging admittance fees and which limited to six the number of performances that could be given in one month. These modifications were made as a result of protests made by religious and educational institutions which were represented at several hearings that already have been held.

Trade Paper Credit Ass'n

THE Motion Picture Trade Papers' Credit Association has been formed, having as members the Moving Picture World, Motion Picture News, Exhibitors' Trade Review and Exhibitors' Herald. It is to operate under the personal supervision of Harry G. Kosch, attorney, Longacre Building, who has an extensive knowledge of the film industry and a wide acquaintance among those connected with it.

Its objects are the collection and exchange of information as to the reputation and financial responsibility of advertisers, united action in the collection of accounts in arrears, and the rejection of advertising which is improper, or which is offered by individuals or companies not in good credit standing.

It is believed that this Association will result in an increased respect for certain fundamental business principles, to which in this industry too little attention has been paid.

Advertising is an essential part of the cost of distribution, and advertising bills should be paid the same as rent or salaries. It is expected that this Association will put a stop to the practice now in use by some concerns, who ask for credit for advertising, the bills to be paid when, and if, the film is successfully marketed.

It is the intention also to make it impossible for a man who, under the protection of an incorporation, has left unpaid various accounts for advertising, to return after a few weeks with a new corporate name and a confident request for credit.

It will be the aim of this Association to make it worth while for individuals or companies, who expect to remain in the Motion Picture Industry, to establish for themselves a reputation for prompt payment of their obligations and for decency and integrity in all their dealings.

Famous Players Studioites Hold Ball in New York

The second annual ball of the Eastern studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. was held on May 13 in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Commodore.

Elsie Ferguson and Wallace Reid led the grand march, and in addition to playing the saxophone, Mr. Reid appeared in the original version of Kenneth Webb's motion picture satire, which was staged for the first time recently at the Actors' Equity Show. In the piece were Thomas Meighan, Alice Brady, Constance Binney, Robert Schable, Reginald Denny, George Fawcett and other well known players.

M. P. T. O. Committeemen Convene in Washington

The officers and national committeemen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America convened at the Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C., on May 17.

Senator Walker Addresses Frisco Exhibitors

Samuel Berman, a Brooklyn, N. Y., exhibitor and New York State Senator James A. Walker, national counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' of America, addressed a large gathering of exhibitors of San Francisco and the vicinity at Tait's Cafe, May 9, at a meeting called by the Northern California Division of the M. P. T. O. of A. to further the local campaign to offset contemplated blue law agitation.

Senator Walker was enthusiastically received and the Northern California exhibitors who were present felt that they were greatly enlightened concerning the nation-wide fight being made against the film rental tax, music tax and abolition of deposits. Resolutions were passed to take suitable action locally to help in the national fight against the blue law wave, and to offset the campaign of the California reformists who plan restrictive state legislation at the 1923 session of the legislature. All legislation of a character detrimental to the motion picture industry was effectively killed at the 1921 session which has adjourned sine die.

Asks Sunday Schools' Aid To Fix Censor Blame

Governor Allen of Kansas has asked every Sunday School in Kansas to name a committee to act as moving picture censors for a short time. This step has been taken by the governor in effort to determine the fault with the state censors at the present time. He has requested that the Sunday Schools name a committee of persons who are movie fans and who will attend shows regularly.

During the last few months, the governor has received scores of letters in which the Kansas state censorship has been attacked. The committees appointed by the Sunday Schools must name the pictures and designate specifically just what scenes they believe should be cut out. Many Sunday School officials have notified Governor Allen that they will comply with his request.

Czecho-Slovakian Trade Press Editor on Way

A statement from the Universal headquarters announces the advent of a new brand of foreign pictures into America. Julius Kohner, who is the editor of one of the largest film journals in Europe, is en route for New York from Czecho-Slovakia at the invitation of Carl Laemmle, and he brings with him a five-reeler entitled "The Golden Wife" and a feature titled "Mountain Love," which was directed by Sydney Golden, an American director. Both of these were made by the A. B. Film Manufacturing Co., of Prague. Mr. Kohner is also bringing several scenics.

Mr. Kohner, according to the Universal statement, will study American production methods at Universal City.

F. B. Warren Corp. to Have Offices in Loew Bldg.

F. B. Warren Corporation, new international distributing organization, has signed a long term lease for three-fourths of the sixteenth floor of the Loew State Theatre Building, at 1540 Broadway (45th street), New York City. This move makes the Warren organization one of the best located of all national distributors, with its home office in the heart of New York's picture activities and adjacent to the two big hotels where visiting exhibitors and producers make their headquarters. The Warren forces will go into the building June 1.

Brady Lashes Censorship in Massachusetts

Called in at the eleventh hour of the censorship fight in Massachusetts, William A. Brady, on May 16, addressed an audience of several hundred at Pittsfield, Mass., and pleaded "for the industry in its extremity."

A word picture of the absurdities of censorship was drawn by the speaker, followed by a recitation of the wide influence of the screen in carrying Americanization propaganda throughout the world, and recapitulating the vigorous aid rendered by the industry during the war.

Mayor Flynn and the audience expressed their strong disapproval of any censorship measure.

Watterson R. Rothacker in New York

Watterson R. Rothacker arrived in New York this week and spoke enthusiastically of the new Rothacker-Aller Laboratories on the Coast.

He will shortly leave for London to establish a laboratory there.

Rorke Having a Busy New York Visit

IN a little over a week in New York, Sam E. Rorke has found that the man who "comes to market" with the real goods has plenty of opportunity to do business. A series of Snowy Baker five-reel features, produced in Australia, has been disposed of to the Aywon Corporation; arrangements have been completed for the release of the one-reel Animal Comedies through Educational Film Corporation.

Considerable interest has been shown in New York in the coming Selig-Rorke series of super-features, starting with "The Rosary," on which production work has already started.

But Mr. Rorke maintains an air of mystery concerning the prizes of his collection, the Selig-Rorke two-reel dramas. Advance views of these "tabloid features" in Los Angeles have resulted in bidding by distributors in New York.

"The two-reel dramas," declares Mr. Rorke, "are a distinct innovation, and exhibitors should not confuse them with any sort of subjects they have already seen. We have taken the best stories of a number of well-known authors—of the rank of James Oliver Curwood—players who have each been starred in their own right, a director of feature calibre, and all the resources of money and production brains that would be put into hundred thousand-dollar productions—and compressed this value into two-reel gems. "The Policeman and the Baby," and "The Northern Trail" have elicited warm enthusiasm from many first run exhibitors who have been given private showings."

A new series of Snowy Baker pictures, made in Los Angeles, is also included in the Selig-Rorke plans for the coming sea on. "The Bold Jackaroo" and "The Man from Kangaroo" are the two already sold.

Helen Kelle Film Corp. Elects Officers

The annual meeting of the Helen Keller Film Corporation was held recently at the offices of the Corporation Trust Company, 37 Wall Street. This corporation privately financed the production of Helen Keller's story of her life, "Deliverance," in motion pictures. World rights are controlled by George Kleine, of Chicago, who reports the sale to Japan and other foreign countries. The American showings are meeting with universal commendation.

The following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year: president, Dr. Francis Trevelyan Miller; executive chairman and treasurer, Dr. Edwin Liebfreed; vice-president, Paul Harrison; secretary, C. K. Fankhauser. Frederick Eaton was elected member Board of Directors.

Rothacker Comptroller on Coast Missions

F. W. Kraemer, comptroller of the Rothacker Film Company, is at the Rothacker-Aller laboratory in Los Angeles for a short period. One of his chief missions to the Coast is to cooperate with Joseph Aller, resident head of the laboratory, in installing and perfecting a comprehensive auditing system.

On his return trip he will visit San Francisco and other First National exchanges.

F. H. Richardson of the World Injured

F. H. Richardson, for many years projection editor on Moving Picture World, is lying in a Philadelphia hospital with a fractured skull, as the result of being knocked from his motorcycle while in that city.

At last reports, it was said at the hospital he had a fighting chance for his life.

Ernest Shipman Sends Interesting Account of Film Conditions in Italy

IN a letter addressed to William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News, Ernest Shipman, writing from Rome, Italy, May 3, expresses the opinion that from a commercial viewpoint the American film industry is likely to get a few slight jolts in some new angles, in so far as Italy is concerned.

"The lithographers of Italy are in a position to pay duty on posters and then undersell us in all countries," writes Mr. Shipman. "They excel in the making of paper, and are now making paper-money for most of the governments of Europe."

The French Debrie camera is becoming very popular, and German lighting facilities are declared by Mr. Shipman to be making a strong bid at prices with which American firms cannot possible compete. The best Italian directors, adds Mr. Shipman, are not paid as much for a month's work as the average American director receives for a week, "and the same pro rata runs through all departments of the industry."

The development of story values is the Italian's weak point, according to Mr. Shipman, but progressive firms are planning to overcome this defect by co-operation with American experts. "Their art," he says, "dominates at all times."

"Almost all the cinemas of Italy are under the booking control of Pittaluga, who writes his own terms," continues Mr. Shipman, who describes the Unione Cinematografia Italiana as the foremost producing trust controlling the output of Ambrosia, Cines, and Carlos Amato. The Ultra, a new organization, is making "Ben Hur" and anticipates American co-operation in its future productions.

Mr. Shipman in concluding declares that when the Italian public are better acquainted with American stars and productions, "we will have a very extensive field here for future exploitation."

New York Censorships In Effect

the commission will make a charge of three dollars for each 1,000 feet, or fraction thereof, of original film, and two dollars for every additional copy. In order to have the commission pass on a film, it will be necessary for the owner to file a written application accompanied by the fee.

Advertising matter used after August 1 in connection with the exploitation of any picture will also be carefully scrutinized by the commission.

While the commission is given full power to enforce the law, state and local authorities are also expected to do their part in detecting and reporting any violations.

Keep Abreast of the Big Town

Illinois Small-Towner Never Shows Them an Old Feature

HERE'S a slogan and a policy for the man who is running a motion picture theatre in a territory within riding distance of a larger city.

"Never give residents of your exhibiting territory the chance to say, 'I have seen that picture.'"

Elmer Ramsay, who has made the Central Theatre in Fairbury, Illinois, so prosperous that it supports an advertising man in addition to a good house staff in a city which barely reached 3,000 population in the last census, is the man who is authority for the statement that the small town man can't exist unless he keeps abreast or ahead of the theatres near his territory that are located in larger cities.

"It will cost more for pictures," Mr. Ramsay admits, "but the return is bigger on the bigger investment. The trouble with most men in the smaller places is that they have had their training in the larger places and do not appreciate the impulses that govern the residents of the smaller places that they have chosen for their theatres.

"The big city fellow laughs at the proposition that a trolley ride is a treat to his village brother. It isn't a treat, but it is a thing that is indulged in to a greater extent as an event than in the larger city and the reason that prompts it is the same thing that causes New Yorkers or Chicagoans to use transportation methods to get away from the vicinity of their homes.

"It is a desire for a change, and the small town exhibitor has the fact to face that to get away from the vicinity of their homes his possible patrons have to leave their home town. They will ride a few miles to a larger place to shop or for some other reason and will wind up at the motion picture theatre in that place. Two or three weeks later they will walk down the street to come to your theatre, and before entering look at the bills, and then in disappointment exclaim:

"'Oh, I saw that in so-and-so three weeks ago.'

"That one remark makes more small town theatres a losing proposition than anything else that may occur. In addition to depriving the patrons of an anticipated evening's pleasure, it is a bruise to civic pride. The small town resident has civic pride to a greater extent than the people of the larger places. He can always find points of superiority in the place where he resides over any place within a hundred miles.

"That is how the exhibitor who attempts to hold down operating expenses by running old pictures hurts himself. It takes only two or three pictures that have been shown four or five weeks before at a nearby place to give his theatre the reputation of being second-class and not worth while bothering with. His possible patrons then never try to find out what he is showing, but when deciding they want to see pictures they automatically dismiss the local theatre from their minds on the theory that it will be showing something they have already seen. They sit down for an early supper in order to catch the car to the other theatre.

"That's the big thing for the small town theatre to combat, and in one way it is a big advantage to him, for it gives him an appeal to his exhibiting territory that the man in the bigger city cannot make with any great effectiveness. This is the appeal to civic pride.

"Boost your theatre as being ahead of any in the vicinity, prove that it is abreast of those in the biggest city in the matter of the dates on which pictures are shown. It won't take long before the townspeople include the theatre in the things they are proud of if it makes good on this boast.

"Such a policy doesn't mean, either, that you have to have a first run on every picture. Only the best known ones are the ones that you must show early in order to convince the town that you are beating out the other. Take, for instance, 'The Kid,' the Charlie Chaplin six reels of joy. If there has been a picture turned out in the last ten years that was better advertised than this one I didn't hear of it. Long before it was definitely announced that it would be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., I had put it down on my list as one that I must have as soon as it was released.

"As it happened, I had no trouble at all. Several months previously I had taken out a sub-franchise in Associated First National Pictures and 'The Kid' was mine exclusively for the territory. It opened at the Randolph Theatre in Chicago for its premier in the West, and while it was still running there I had it at the Central Theatre. It was a fact that my theatre was the fourth theatre in the country to show this production, this due alone to the release date in the Illinois territory and the fact that I had a franchise for my theatre.

"'The Kid' would have paid real money for me without an inch of advertising, but I used it to hammer home the idea that the Central was ahead of any theatre in the neighborhood. I took larger space than usual to announce the fact that Chicago and two Eastern cities were the only ones where the residents had had opportunity of seeing the Charlie Chaplin feature before the Central had secured it for the Fairburians. I emphasized the fact also that it was running exclusively in Illinois at the Randolph Theatre in Chicago and that people had to pay 50 cents to see it there and that they could see it at the Central for 39 cents.

"I pounded that message home that Fairburians had a theatre that was right up to the best in the country in the matter of getting good pictures quickly. I used a boy who somewhat resembled Jackie Coogan in make-up, and he went around the streets inquiring of people if they had been to Chicago within the last week. When they admitted they hadn't, he told them that they hadn't seen the picture that was on at the Central.

"The answer was that for six shows I crowded people into my theatre until I thought they would suffocate. That was good, but the effect of it was better. People in Fairbury are still boasting to their friends that Fairbury was the fourth city in the United States to show 'The Kid,' and they are all in back of the theatre, boosting it all the time. People who go out of town to shop come back to attend the Central.

"The Central Theatre seats 750 people. Fairbury has a population of 3,000 people. I average two filled houses a day, which is equal to half the population of the town in which the theatre is located. My patrons are not all townspeople, however. There is a thriving farming community around Fairbury and automobiles are plentiful. People living nearer other theatres than to the Central in Fairbury are regular patrons of mine because the whole countryside is imbued with the idea that they will see all the best ones first at the Central and they come.

"I don't and can't have other pictures as early as I had 'The Kid' in comparison to the rest of the country, but there isn't a picture that comes into the Central a week later than it is possible to secure it. I am proud of this fact, the Fairbury townspeople are proud of it. They see shows that they are proud of and I make money. The policy is well worth while."

The Central Theatre is an appropriate setting for the high class of pictures and the first grade policy which Mr. Ramsay has. The chairs are oversize and comfortable, the decorations are renewed as often as necessary. The conveniences for patrons are up-to-date, and the projection and screen settings are the most advanced there are.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Sentimental Tommy—

Artistic all right, but didn't register with my people for anything better than average. (West.)

They liked this one and it drew good business. (West.)

In many respects a very fine picture, but lacked pulling power and we played to only very poor business. (Middle West.)

The Love Special—

Drew well, but did not satisfy the fans. (West.)

Extra big business first part of the week and held up well enough to be labeled a great attraction. (Middle West.)

Proxies—

Didn't draw any too well for me, but pleased fairly well those who saw it. (West.)

Just fair, especially from box office standpoint. (West.)

Audiences commented favorably on this productioon. Business fair. Acting of cast good. (East.)

Forbidden Fruit—

"Forbidden Fruit" is a wonderful picture and drew exceptionally big houses during week. It is a fine box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Inside of the Cup—

Splendid attraction, holding up in spite of rain and hot weather. Attracted better element of showgoing people. Had some say it was like putting in two hours at church, however. (Middle West.)

The City of Silent Men—

One of Thomas Meighan's best pictures; entertaining, attractive and is a good subject for expoitation. A good house all week. (Middle West.)

Went big with us, both from audience standpoint and the way it drew. (West.)

The Life of the Party—

A thoroughly entertaining comedy, which attracted good business at the box office. (East.)

Deception—

Went very big. Tremendous production. (East.)

The Easy Road—

A good picture, carefully worked out, which drew well. (Middle West.)

The Gilded Lily—

Big business and satisfied audiences. (West.)

Passionate Pilgrim—

A fair picture, which resorts to the "miracle man" twist at the end. This has been used so often that the public is growing tired of it. A fair box office attraction. (Middle West.)

What Every Woman Knows—

One of the best pictures of the season. William DeMille has adhered carefully to the main points of the original story and has maintained all of Barrie's charm. Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel are excellent in the star roles. (Middle West.)

Too Wise Wives—

Like the other recent Lois Weber productions, not a box office attraction. It requires real stars in big productions to get over here. (East.)

This one was beautifully done, though the story was not very deep, and business was only fair. (East.)

The Home Stretch—

Some inexpensive exploitation and the popularity of Douglas MacLean here packed my house for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Beau Revel—

Good picture, but not much drawing power. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Passion Flower—

Many comments both for and against from patrons, but picture did good business. (Middle West.)

Like all Norma Talmadge pictures, this went over good and drew satisfactory business. (West.)

Good picture to the usual good business that Norma Talmadge always brings. (West.)

The Oath—

Very fine picture, but rather heavy for summer entertainment. (East.)

Trust Your Wife—

Went over big. Katherine MacDonald always a drawing card here. A capacity house for the week. (Middle West.)

The Sky Pilot—

Not an extraordinary attraction. Used a Semon comedy to help out. (East.)

Man, Woman and Marriage—

Big picture, lavishly produced. Made money for us. (South.)

Lessons in Love—

Very light as to plot and presentation, but Constance Talmadge is a real favorite, so picture did very well. (East.)

Bob Hampton of Placer—

This picture is in no wise out of the ordinary. Business was only fair, though the fact that it was circus week was partly responsible. (East.)

REALART

The Magic Cup—

An inconsequential little thing, scarcely worthy of detailed attention. Up to standard of Binney pictures, but very light. Business only fair—mostly flappers. (South.)

Just fair for me. No punch. (West.)

The Plaything of Broadway—

Extra big business for the week. Public seemed pleased with story, star and her ability as an actress. (West.)

The House That Jazz Built—

Nice little show. Pleasing, but not striking in any particular. (East.)

The Outside Woman—

This picture is good and drew very satisfactory business. (West.)

METRO

The Misleading Lady—

A mediocre picture that played to fair business. (East.)

The Star Rover—

A poor picture and a poor puller. (East.)

The Offshore Pirate—

Very good little picture that brought satisfactory box-office returns. (West.)

Puppets of Fate—

Viola Dana always a sure bet here. She lives up to her reputation in this picture. Good house all week. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Prisoners of Love—

Only an average picture which played to fair business. (Middle West.)

The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari—

This powerful picture is very unusual and a distinct novelty to our patrons. Went over big during the week. (Middle West.)

Made in Heaven—

Good picture. Well suited to the season. Did fairly well considering poor picture conditions in this locality. (East.)

The Man Who Had Everything—

A fair business to fair business. (East.)

An Unwilling Hero—

Our people called this a good picture and it drew well. (West.)

Snow Blind—

Fairly good bet for us but nothing to shout about. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

Wolves of the North—

Mediocre picture, but it drew the crowds. (East.)

Reputation—

Forced to put on extra shows every night during a seven day run. Excellent business all week. Entertaining production verdict of patrons. (East.)

Dangerous Youth—

Went very nicely with us for full week's run. (West.)

Outside the Law—

Big in every way. Packed them in for full week. (Middle West.)

Desperate Youth—

Not a particularly good picture. Poor business. (East.)

SELZNICK

Ghosts of Yesterday—

A re-issue that stood the test splendidly. Business excellent. Compared favorably with new Eugene O'Brien picture in town. (South.)

A typical Talmadge picture. Well liked by Talmadge enthusiasts. Fair business. (East.)

Went over very well. (East.)

Gilded Lies—

One of the best O'Brien's, so far, Went over fine. (South.)

An average picture doing fair business. Too much posing on part of star. (East.)

Whispers—

The third Elaine Hammerstein picture to play here, and it "caught on" at once. They are beginning to ask for more. Business good. (South.)

VITAGRAPH

Black Beauty—

Appeals to mothers and children but as usual the educational forces responded with praise only. (West.)

FOX

Blind Wives—

Much surprised in this. Fell awfully flat. Think the public is tired of "trick" endings and dreams. Well staged and handled—but drew poor business for us. (South.)

The Mountain Woman—

Got by all right and drew pretty good. (West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

A Thousand to One—

This one went over fair both from box office and pleasing the audiences. (West.)

I Am Guilty—

Louise Glaum is a good drawing card though she has done better work than she does in this picture in many others. Box office returns were fair. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Kismet—

Opened exceptionally well and for the first few days did an unusually satisfactory business but our assumption that costume plays appeal to a select audience was proven true and the picture waned considerably towards the end in spite of big exploitation and elaborate presentation in the form of a prologue. (West.)

What's a Wife Worth—

Just a fair picture which played to average business. (West.)

The Mistress of Shenstone—

One of the finest screen adaptations I have ever seen. Followed the book almost word for word, and this was appreciated by its admirers. Business fine. (South.)

One Man in a Million—

Went over like a house afire due in part at least to personal appearance of the star. Business big. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Love Flower—

Not destined to bring any additional fame to Griffith. It doesn't approach many of his previous efforts. The story is only fairly interesting, many of the scenic effects are excellent. (Middle West.)

Through the Back Door—

A typical Mary Pickford picture, and one that the public wants to see her in. Well done from start to finish. (East.)

STATES RIGHTS

Straight from Paris—

Drew the largest audiences in history of house when Miss Young personally appeared for two days. (East.)

Wonderfully interesting picture beautifully produced with great cast. Great audience picture. (West.)

"Isobel" or "The Trail's End"—

A good production, but a trifle behind the present demand of the public. Only a fair house. (Middle West.)

Fickle Women—

Good pleasing picture that was a satisfactory box office attraction. (West.)

The Woman Untamed—

Terrible picture, but Doraldina appeared here in person recently, and the business was fair due to the curiosity of people who failed to see her on previous personal appearance. (South.)

Historic Local Feature Made at St. Louis

William Goldman, Managing Director Missouri Theatre, Puts Over Great Exploitation Feat

WILLIAM GOLDMAN, managing director of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, Mo., is now an exhibitor-producer, and his debut in the production end of the business resulted in attendance records that a year ago would have been inconceivable for a picture house. More than 40,000 persons paid to see the performance at the Missouri theatre the week of April 30, and the house record for receipts was exceeded by 3,000. This in spite of the fact that the admission is lower than when the house was opened in November.

The Louisiana-Purchase Exposition long has been remembered as the greatest event in the history of St. Louis. Mr. Goldman decided to celebrate the seventeenth anniversary of this event by producing a film, "Memories of the World's Fair." With the assistance of prominent citizens, this was accomplished and capacity for the week prevailed. The film was then held over for a second week. After playing the entire state, it will be presented to the Missouri Historical Society by Goldman upon the request of Ambassador David R. Francis.

Mr. Francis made the film possible by assisting Mr. Goldman in collecting material and securing the interest of the surviving members of the "Committee of 200," the citizens' organization that put the fair over, to pose for pictures. All ceremonies connected with the fair were re-enacted by the citizens just as they had done years ago. Ground was broken, stakes were planted, speeches were made and much animated material was provided. This, coupled with "shots" of famous buildings, exhibits and concessions gave Goldman 2,000 feet of unusually interesting film.

The enthusiasm with which older St. Louisians viewed the picture and saw the old familiar sights was wonderful. The younger generation attended as a matter of educational curiosity, school history classes attending in groups at the matinee performances.

The matter of the presentation also had a great deal to do with the success of the production. Mr. Goldman secured seven men who shared in the honors of staging the fair to speak during the week. These were: David R. Francis, president of the exposition, who gave what he termed his last public address; ex-Mayor Rolla W. Wells, mayor at the time of the fair; Edward F. Goltra, Democratic National Committeeman; Murray Carleton, prominent manufacturer; Festus J. Wade, well known banker; Nathan Frank, publisher, and Henry W. Kiel, the present mayor of St. Louis.

The overture created the right atmosphere for the picture, the first part being devoted to selections played by the Tyrolian Alps Orchestra, the famous symphony organization of the fair. Part 2 was called "Echoes of the Pike," the most famous amusement thoroughfare ever built, and consisted of melodies popular in 1904. During this section barkers, under the direction of A. J. Meininger, the circus man, put on a ballyhoo for their attractions and wares that would have made professional "high pitchers" jealous.

following the film Mr. Goldman produced on the stage an exact replica of the fair's most famous building—"The Cascades." The lagoon and the water flowing down the steps were shown.

C. C. Deardourff's Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio. "Old Time Movie" show lobby decorations as told in the accompanying story

Sigma Theatre Pulls the "Movie Show" Stunt

C. C. Deardourff, manager of the Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio, recently demonstrated how a short reel attraction can be made to put over a whole show, when he devoted his entire front, including the roof of the marquee to an elaborate but inexpensive exploitation for "The Old Time Movie Show." The punch of this lobby display was the contrast between the modern movie show, as exemplified by the latest equipment used in the main foyer, and the old fashioned equipment, as reproduced over the marquee. The cheap ticket booth, resembling just a hole in a wall; the 5-cent admission price in big, bold letters, and the phonograph horn, the most essential attribute to the movie shows of other times, were all featured in the display. The store front turned into a movie theatre and stuck in between two equally cheap stores made the people of Lima talk about the wonderful strides that have been made in the motion picture industry within a few years. The talk had a direct effect upon the Sigma theatre, which reports excellent business for the week the stunt was pulled.

NEWS Review Resume—Not much to the story, but Ray puts it over.

Exhibitors Box Office Reports—Good—but last two Ray pictures not up to Ray standard.—Ray always good and does not fall down on this. Had more than usual business—Should have been called the Whirling Dervish. Ray runs around and swirls like he was crazy. Only fair business.—Consider this an average picture. Business about as usual.—A good show. Comfortable entertainment. Played to steady business all week.—One of the poorest things Ray has ever done. They came because it was Ray—but they didn't enjoy it.—An amusing farce, but not quite up to some of Ray's recent efforts. A good box office attraction, however.

Attractive Lobby Displays For "Earthbound"

One of the most attractive and attention-compelling theatre front displays yet used for Goldwyn's production of the Basil King photodrama of the unseen world, "Earthbound," was that devised by Harry S. Lorch and J. W. Rankin, Goldwyn exploitation men, for the three weeks' showing of the photoplay at the Shubert Majestic theatre, Boston.

Mounted above the marquise, between the electric signs containing the name of the theatre and of the attraction showing, was a large circular piece of beaverboard about twelve feet in diameter. Painted upon it, in outline, were the continents and oceans of the western hemisphere, the water in pale blue and the land in black.

Grauman Presents Colorful Prologue

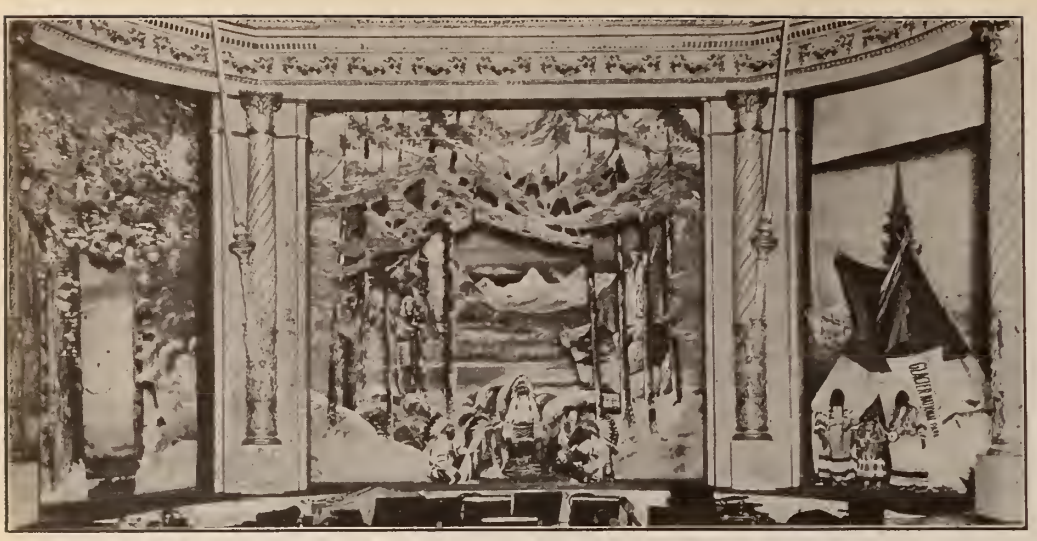
For the showing of "What Every Woman Knows" at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, Managing Director Sid Grauman arranged a colorful prologue that made a tremendous hit with Los Angeles theatre patrons.

The prologue was a sort of double exposure affair. That is to say, Mr. Grauman arranged one act that consisted of the colorful, weird revelations of a Chinese magician, with appropriate stage settings, lighting effects, music and atmospheric background, all synchronizing in utmost harmony. The magician was seen in the attitude of entertaining or performing for a slumming party, the dialogue passing between the Chinaman and the leader of the party being diverting and interesting.

The second act was different from the first, consisting of Madame Rose Hovick's revue, an offering that combined dancing, singing and musical selections, each in keeping with certain lighting effects. The two acts taken individually would have attracted only ordinary attention, but placed on the same bill, their sympathetic and at the same time unsympathetic features made a composite bit of entertainment that was unique.

"Bob Hampton" Gets Indian Exploitation at Kansas City

Frank L. Newman, manager of the Newman theatre in Kansas City, scored another triumph in exploitation last week. Eight Blackfeet Indians from the national reservation in Glacier National Park, who took part in the filming of "Bob Hampton of Placer," were brought to a Kansas City for the showing of the picture. Garbed in native costumes, the Indians paraded about the downtown sections of the city and created more awe and excitement than an office building on fire.



The prologue itself, in which the Redskins took part at each performance, was secondary compared to the interest they created by their appearance about town. A cowboy quartet, a genuine Indian war dance and a snake dance provided a harmonious setting for the picture.

Under the supervision of a government agent, the Indians visited the principal clubs and newspaper offices and obtained liberal space in the press. It was the duty of one of the redskins, the "official" interpreter of the tribe who spoke in broken English, to announce to each gathering that a war dance would be staged at the Newman theatre each day. That was enough. Scores of persons who proclaim to have "outgrown" western drama, flocked to the theatre to witness the prologue staged by the Indians.

The Indians obtained further publicity by heading a Boy's Week parade, in which Bryant Washburn also took part.

One of Sid Grauman's recent atmospheric stage settings used as a prologue background to the showing of "What Every Woman Knows"

Stage setting provided for the prologue which Managing Director Lowell B. Calvert used in connection with the showing of "Bob Hampton of Placer." The Blackfeet Indians appeared in the number as told in the accompanying story

Calvert Originates Indian Prologue for "Bob Hampton"

One of the most elaborate and beautiful prologues given any picture shown in the "Twin Cities" was that presented recently by Manager Lowell V. Calvert, of the Capitol theatre, St. Paul for "Bob Hampton of Placer."

One of the troupe of Blackfeet Indians appearing in the picture, was obtained for the St. Paul engagement and Mr. Calvert arranged a prologue in which the redskins had an important part. Before the rise of the curtain the orchestra prepared the audience for what was coming with a very appropriate dagger dance from Dick Victor Herbert's "Natomah." As the curtain rose, there was disclosed the Indian chiefs in a clump of birches, seated around their campfire. In the background, with magnificent lighting effects playing about them, appeared the misty snow-clad peaks of the distant mountain ranges.

In pantomime, one of the Indian chiefs tells the story of the "Legend of the Last Battle." Immediately at the close of this a female singer in Indian costume rendered "By the Waters of Minnetonka," a very beautiful Indian love song. That was followed by a baritone rendition of "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water." At the close of these two selections, the assembled chieftains gave a native tribal dance. As soon as this was finished, the screen descended and the feature production started.

The most was made in the exploitation possibilities of the Indians during their visit in St. Paul.

The band of Indians were taken to different points of interest throughout the city, and it goes without saying that their appearance created great excitement everywhere. They were formerly presented to Governor Preus, also to Mayor Hodgson, of St. Paul, and other notables and dignitaries.

Deardourff Builds Fine Lobby Display for "Tiger's Cub"

Simple, but expressive, was the marquee display that Manager C. C. Deardourff, of the Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio, had built to interest the public in his current attraction, "The Tiger's Cub." The log cabin, all alone, devoid of human or vegetable life, suggested a heart story, and Deardourff knows that the public likes heart stories. The people of Lima have come to watch for Deardourff's marquee displays, and to judge from it, just whether they are going to like the attraction or not. Deardourff figures that a pleased patron is a steady patron. So there's no use getting patrons into the theatre on false pretenses. "Let a patron know what kind of show he's going to see, give him a hint of the type of picture to be shown, and you eliminate the necessity of putting him into a frame of mind that will be in accord with the picture. It's an easy way to have your audience pull for you, instead of trying to pull your audience in a different direction from the one they want to go."

Jackson Pulls New Stunt at 'Frisco

Reecntly crowds gathered on busy Market street, San Francisco, in front of the Strand theatre to listen to the rendition of the latest popular songs sung on the stage and transmitted to the street by use of a magnavox reproducer at the end of electric wiring from the stage over the box office. This stunt thought to be a new one for a theatre was conceived and worked out by the Strand's publicity director, Merwyn W. Jackson.

Inside the theatre week of April 17, a song popularity contest was held as a special feature attraction. Six popular songs were sung at each performance by singers furnished free of charge to the theatre by the representatives of the song publishing companies. The popularity of the various songs was determined by the amount of applause from the audiences for each and a score board over the box office on the street front kept the records from day to day.

Special sets consisting of six large reproductions of the covers of the title pages of the songs as published, sit on easels in velvet drops on the stage, and gold chairs awaited the singers who sat on the stage until the number had been sung.

Department Store Pays for "Gilded Lily" Ad

A tie-up with one of the largest department stores in Kokomo resulted in a conspicuous advertisement in the Kokomo newspapers for "The Gilded Lily," which the department store paid for. The picture was hitched to the store by Arthur M. Vogel, exploiteer for the Cincinnati Paramount exchange, who staged a fashion show in the store window. A fashion expert of Indianapolis was imported and her gowns were duplicates of those worn by Miss Murray, and which were featured as a part of the plot of the picture. The extra space in the newspapers and the general influence of the department store brought forth daily news stories on the fashion display.

Smith Uses Attractive Ballyhoo for "Mohicans"

Manager E. A. Smith, of the new California theatre at Bakersfield, Cal., arranged an attractive street ballyhoo on "The Last of the Mohicans" which was one reason for the highly satisfactory business which the Tourneur picture drew. A tepee, surrounded by real trees, was placed upon a large motor truck, and around the edges ground rolls were set to give it a realistic effect. Two boys costumed as Indians added atmosphere to the general effect. Four days before the picture opened, the truck was driven about the city, visiting the schools each day at the noon hour.

Miss Sylvia Grogg, publicity director, arranged an invitational preview for city officials, teachers, clergy, etc., prior to the opening, and a splendid newspaper ad was composed from the written endorsement of the influential people of the city who attended the preview.

For a prologue Manager Smith took the cave scene from the picture for a duplicate stage setting. A black drop cut out to represent the opening of a cave was hung down to the front line. Back of this was profile rocks with a water and mountain scene in the distance. A singer stood upon one of the farthest rocks, costumed identically as "Uncas," and sang "The Land of the Sky Blue Water." At the finish of the song, the stage was blacked out, as the picture screen descended showing the exact scene in the picture which the prologue had been taken from. This had been cut out of the picture and placed ahead of the title. The similarity of the prologue and the scene from the picture was startling. At the conclusion of the story where the burial rites are held for Uncas, the last strains of "Land of Sky Blue Water" were sung off stage in subdued voice.

The California theatre at Bakersfield is one of a chain of forty odd owned by the Westcoast Theatres, Inc. The theatres controlled by this thriving young corporation are setting a pace for artistic presentation and live wire advertising throughout the West.

"Best Show In Town Week" Saunders Latest Idea

New paper accessories and new bags of tricks will be issued by Claud H. Saunders, manager of exploitation for Paramount pictures, to all the exploitation men in the field for the summer drive for the week of June 19, to be known as "The Best Show in Town Week." The exploitation department is working on new ideas for tie-ups hoping to land the important windows for that week. New schemes for lobby dressing are being devised. The exploitation men are also applying for permission from most of the town councils and mayors to string large "Best Show in Town Week" banners across the streets.

The way for both the exploiteer and the exhibitor will be eased by the big newspaper advertising campaign to be conducted by Jerome Beatty, director of advertising and publicity. A full page advertisement will appear in all the newspapers of the exchange cities at the beginning of the week. This advertisement will be topped by a seven-column illustration, and will contain a list of the new Paramount pictures as well as the names of all the theatres in the exchange territory participating in the solid week's run of Paramount pictures.

Theatre Gives Prizes for Best Essays

In collaboration with the Dalles, Oregon, Daily Chronicle, the Empress theatre of that town offered five prizes for the best essays on "What I Would Do With a Million Dollars," in connection with the run of "Brewster's Millions." The idea was Arthur M. Vogel's, Paramount exploiteer for the district. The entire affair didn't cost the exhibitor a cent. He made announcements in his regular advertising space in the paper, and during the run of the picture the Chronicle carried news stories.

The essays were handed in at the Empress box office and at the Chronicle office. There were nearly one thousand contestants, most of whom saw the picture before writing the essay. Vogel also tied up three solid pages of newspaper advertising with the picture.

Cut-outs Used to Advantage

Ralph Lieber Gives "Peck's Bad Boy" Thorough Exploitation Campaign

"PECK'S BAD BOY" and Jackie Coogan have just been given the biggest exploitation campaign that Indianapolis has seen in many a month by Ralph Lieber, manager of the Circle theatre.

The first step was to have a score of cut-outs made from the one sheets, showing Jackie Coogan and his dog. These were prepared by the Circle art department. They were placed at the most conspicuous corners in the city and were weighted down with sand bags such as are used back stage for the manipulation of the drops and other scenic effects.

In a number of instances the cut-outs were used in front of stores where the placing of a window display would be an impossibility, and they had the same effect. In addition to this two cut-outs were made of Jackie Coogan, which were more than seven feet high. These were placed on two prominent street corners and proved exceedingly valuable.

One of the leading department stores, which handles children's clothes, ran a large advertisement in two of the local newspapers which read something like this: "Even if your son is as rough on clothes as 'Peck's Bad Boy,' you can find what you want in our children's department." And then they went on to describe the various styles and fabrics of their product.

"Jackie Coogan Dolls" made their appearance in Indianapolis just at the opportune moment and resulted in effective tie-ups with a number of the best stores in the city. Some of the most exclusive department stores in the Central West devoted an entire window to the dolls and used a high enlargement of Jackie Coogan to set off the display.

In addition to this more than 200 one sheets, 200 windows and more than twenty special cards drawn by the Circle art department, which are used only in the best stores in the heart of the city, were used in the advance campaign.

Among the plans for the continuance of the campaign for the opening was the placing of a huge sign above a building on one of the busiest corners in the city calling the attention to the opening. The plan was to have the lettering on the sign done before it was hoisted to the roof so that it would be of some benefit immediately. Then to have a woman sign painter complete the decorative work.

An advance advertising campaign in the newspapers as well considerable advance publicity also helped the opening.

Mr. Lieber is satisfied that his exploitation efforts doubled the business enjoyed at the Circle.

Palace Theatre Gets Results With Local Musical Talent

Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas, set the local standards for art in motion picture presentation last week when he introduced a Broadway novelty in conjunction with "The Old Swimmin' Hole."

Mr. Chambers' presentation was not intended as a prologue effort, but merely to supply the musical program. P. Hans Falth, the organist for the Palace, assembled ten local girls and women with musical talent. He found four saxaphone players, and a violinist among those he selected. The result was that a very suitable musical program was given.

This sort of presentation novelty was something brand new for Wichita, and the enthusiastic way in which audiences received it gives good promise that Mr. Chambers has established a precedent which he, at least, will follow up.

Manager Bill Jones Is Scenic Artist

Manager "Bill" Jones, of the Saenger and Strand theatres, Alexandria, La., is something of a scenic artist. Mr. Jones has a pet big window in which or perhaps on which he uses some of his painting talent to the advantage of the box office.

Mr. Jones pastes cut-outs from stock lithographs on the window and then with his paint brushes draws artistic designs and signs about them, making original exploitation announcements that win the theatre attractions much attention.

"Reputation" Prologue Scores A Success

Presentation Number Given at Premiere Showing, Hotel Astor, Described in Detail

FOLLOWING is a description of an original prologue for "Reputation" as staged before the premiere showing of this picture at the Astor Hotel grand ballroom, recently. On this page will be seen four views of the characters who took part in the presentation number and illustrating the action of the prologue as described.

At the rise of the curtain the girl is discovered in an attitude of awakening. She is dressed like a child of about fifteen with hair hanging loose and dressed in rompers and stockinged feet.

On the stage are seen fourteen "Building Blocks." (These blocks are the telescope variety such as children play with. They are the largest size and have specially painted letters on the mthat can be seen from the furthest corner of the house.) Behind these blocks on the stage are concealed high-heeled slippers and a small but elaborate hat.

The girl discovers the blocks and shows that she understands that here is something for her to do. She starts to build up the blocks with girlish enthusiasm. As she builds them up in a pyramid, she gradually changes her costume and general appearance. When the fourth block is put in place she slips on her high-heeled slippers. (This is done without attracting the attention of the audience.) When four more blocks are put in place she goes through the business of finding that her loose hanging hair is annoying and with a quick movement she sweeps it up on the top of her head and puts on the small hat to hold it in place.

During the action of building up the blocks she dances gayly about the rising pyramid, admiring it and showing that her whole heart is being put into the work.

When two more blocks are put in place the ten of them standing tower-like form the word "Reputation."

At this point the man makes his appearance and stands curiously inspecting the work. The girl seeing the man pulls off the rompers (which are "snapped" together so that they are easily removed), disclosing an elaborate dinner gown, which the rompers have concealed. This leaves the girl dressed as a very beautiful young woman in dinner gown, fancy hat and high-heeled shoes. This conveys the illusion that she has grown from a child to a young woman while building a "Reputation."

Proud of "Reputation," she draws the man's attention to it saying in pantomime, "That's mine, how do you like it?"

The man looks at "Reputation" scornfully and indicates that he has a supreme contempt for it. He swings his cane and is about to knock it down. The girl rushes to its defense. The man amazed that she should be so solicitous of "Reputation," stands observing her curiously for a moment and then contemptuously swings his cane again and hits "Reputation."

These elderly women represent "gossipers" and they are horrified in seeing the girl in the man's embrace. Pointing the finger of scorn at her, they advanced to "Reputation," and with contemptuous looks and gestures destroyed "Reputation," then exit.

The girl sorrowfully looks over the wreck of "Reputation," and finally sinks to her knees in utter dejection among the scattered blocks. The man in deep solicitation kneels beside her and takes her hand. This forms a tableau on which the curtain is drawn.

Note:—The general effect of this allegorical program was intensified by the use of the lighting effects.

Orphans Attend Special Showing of "Faith Healer"

The local Buick car agency at Butler, Pa. and the little shavers of the Butler orphans' homes, furnished J. F. Dunmore, manager of the Majestic theatre some most effective and inexpensive exploitation for his recent showing of "The Faith Healer."

Through a tie-up with the Buick people, a special showing was given for the orphans that brought front page newspaper stories and fine publicity from the parade of children-filled cars, which carried explanatory signs.

After the show the children had their pictures taken and went back to the home, happy, and enthusiastic over the big event.

Schade Uses Noble Red Man as Ballyhoo

George Schade used plenty of atmosphere to interest the patrons of the Plaza theatre, Sandusky, in the Federated feature, "Before the White Man Came," during his recent engagement of that picture. Schade dug up a real Indian and, in real Indian costume, had him ride around town on horseback. The Indian ballyhoo was quiet and orderly, didn't let out any war whoops, or make any disturbance, but, by his quiet dignity, got the people of Sandusky talking about him. Schade also "did" his usherettes up in true Indian style for the occasion. It looked well. It matched the picture, and it brought in the crowds.

Boy Scouts of Pittsburgh Parade for "Sentimental Tommy"

Thomas J. Schroeder, manager of the Olympic theatre, Pittsburgh, decided that "Sentimental Tommy" had a peculiar appeal to boys and young men so as an exploitation stunt, for a recent engagement of the feature, a permit was obtained from the city to hold a parade over the downtown streets, and an invitation was extended to various boys and young men members of the Boy Scouts, etc.

The city showed their interest in the success of the event by assigning a squad of the "finest" of the mounted "cops." The boys came by the hundred bringing along their flags, banners, bugles and drums. A boy scout official was on hand to help in the formation of the column, a friend of the boys brought a fine new shiny touring car for the official escort (which turned out to be filled with pretty Girl Scouts, sisters of the marching boys), and altogether the line made an imposing column as it wended its way through the densest of the downtown streets at the busiest shopping hour.

The line formed at Carnegie Library on the North Side and marched over the bridge to the downtown section, where the Olympic theatre is located. A noteworthy and interesting incident was the fact that as the column came over the bridge and into the downtown section, the power went off of the street cars and for the balance of the march not a street car moved, which meant that the passengers in the street cars had nothing to do but to watch the parade.

Stage setting and characters taking part in a prologue for "Gypsy Blood" presented by the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre

Uses "Carmen" as Prologue

Brooklyn Mark Strand Gives Extracts From Famous Opera With "Gypsy Blood"

FOUR Spanish dancers and an excellent array of soloists combined to form a prologue for "Gypsy Blood," playing last week at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre. The prologue might well have been called a "Scene from Carmen." On the Strand program, Manager Edward L. Hyman listed the cast of characters of the opera. A stage setting showing a Spanish boulevard cafe as is shown by the accompanying cut was provided for the musical number. On the right, at the opening, the group is caught in the act of applauding a little Spanish dancer, who is entertaining the drinkers with a castanet dance. Her dance is very brief. As she alights from the table, she flaunts herself triumphantly, with characteristic Spanish gesture, in front of the other girl dancers, who appear to have been piqued by the attentions showered upon her. All four dancers then join in a tambourine ballet, while the men standing aside offer encouragement, first to one, and then the other.

Mercedes, the gypsy girl, then sings "Habanera" (Love Is Like a Wood-bird Wild).

Following the gypsy love song, the tenor who was meanwhile over on the left, costumed as a Spanish dragoon, arises to greet at her entrance, Carmen, the cigarette girl. As they move toward the center the Strand Symphony has already finished the introduction to "Parle Moi de Ma Mere" (Speak to Me of My Mother), and Carmen opens the duet, accompanied by the tenor.

As Carmen leaves, the dragoon sinks dejectedly into his chair at one of the tables on the left, and pours a drink from one of the chianti bottles on the table.

"Escamillo," the toreador, enters to an ad lib cue and sings the "Toreador Song" from a corner of the table.

For the finale, Hyman employed his dancers in a spirited ensemble, and for many many feet into the opening of the feature there were people applauding throughout the house.

"Gilded Lily" Exploitation Tied Up With Mother's Day

"The Gilded Lily" was as much help to florists on Mothers' Day as it was Easter. For the week preceding Mothers' Day all the Paramount exploiteers arranged tie-ups of this sort wherever the picture was playing. A typical one is with the floral shop at Anderson, Ind., made by Norman E. Dixon, of the Cincinnati exchange. The front of the window was filled with floral displays, while the background consisted of a pasteboard arch resting on pillars. The name of the picture, stills and the window cards linking up "The Gilded Lily" with Mothers' Day were on the arch.

Serkowich's Home Talent Prologue for "Lying Lips"

The home town angle is the thing that Publicity Director Benj. Serkowich, of Dee Robinson's Peoria, Ill., theatres tries to hook on to when he starts exploiting his pictures. However he doesn't neglect the more orthodox methods of advertising as his recent campaign on "Lying Lips" booked for the Madison theatre will testify.

When Herbert McNally, general manager of the Robinson theatres, booked the picture, Mr. Serkowich sat in at a screening and planned his exploitation.

He had a special trailer made up and with the trailer furnished by the exchange, ran it two weeks ahead of play-date.

Then he put over a couple of stories in the newspapers to create a keen desire to see the picture.

Then he picked up the exploitation stuff on "Lying Lips." In this magazine he found a prologue for "Lying Lips" that was given in St. Louis.

"That's good," said Mr. Serkowich, "but it isn't good enough. I'll just elaborate it a bit and give this village a few thrills."

He did.

He took the prologue apart, and instead of having a man read a book and tell about the famous vamps of history, Mr. Serkowich went out and got the belle-cow of Peoria's "hoity-toity" society.

Get this, folks, because it's what got the money.

He talked her into being the "modern girl," and she did the rest. She provided a cast comprising names of Peoria's society buds that have been hitting the newsprint on the society pages for years.

That's all.

Everybody in Peoria just had to see those girls.

And everybody did.

"If I'd have had any hunch that this thing was going this good, I'd have put some hooks in the roof to hang more customers on," is the statement made by Herbert McNally after it was all over.

Florists Decorate Majestic Lobby Gratis

Norman Dixon made the florists of Columbus, Ohio, pay for the lobby dressing of the Majestic theatre during the run of "The Gilded Lily." The Paramount exploiteer tied up each shop for a display of Easter lilies in the lobby during the run which opened on a Sunday. It aroused so much comment, that the florists all came back Monday and redecorated their displays. Before the week was out the friendly competition increased, and the shops joined together for newspaper advertising, and the papers in turn carried several good news stories.

The Majestic theatre is located on the busiest corner in Columbus. The lilies were placed in the lobby early each day, and the public, informed of the florists' competition through the papers, began inspecting the displays long before the hour for opening.

The florists were so pleased that they are "willing to try it again." Dixon may make some similar arrangements for "Heliotrope." The theatre played to capacity houses for the entire week.

Loew's Canadian Theatres Gives "Blind Wives" Big Exploitation

"Blind Wives," which recently finished a showing on the entire circuit of Loew theatres in Canada, was accompanied by one of the most extensive publicity drives ever used on a picture.

In Toronto the management staged a living tableau above the marquee of the theatre, in which three women posed blindfolded, while large signs proclaimed their connection with the picture. This was done for two weeks prior to the showing of the picture, and was but one of a series of stunts used in every one of the other Loew theatres.

Some of the other stunts that attracted general attention was the driving of superbly gowned models in limousines to and from the theatre, with banners inscribed, "Blind Wives Will Open the Eyes of the World;" fashion shows, and a smashing ad campaign in the house organs of the different theatres.

One feature of the Toronto campaign was the use of the teasers on the outside of all street cars. These were changed the week before the opening by adding the name of the theatre and date of the attraction.

The entire campaign was based upon the slogan, "An ounce of exploitation will create a ton of talk," and in the case of the Canadian theatres is said to have been prolific of some very good results.

The house organs of the different theatres being issued simultaneously the "Blind Wives" copy appeared in nearly every city several weeks before the local showing; so that by the time the picture visited the city, readers of the little house newspapers had been well informed regarding the attraction.

In every house on the circuit gives much of the credit for the business done to the advance exploitation, especially the teaser advertising.

Shea's Exploitation for "Kismet" Makes Houston History

One of the most extensive exploitation campaigns for "Kismet" and this picture has been an advertising milestone, has recently been put over by J. Frank Shea, managing director of the Queen, Prince, Liberty and Zoe theatres, Houston, Texas. The usual heralds, window cards, trailers and advance slides were used to good advantage but Mr. Shea did not stop with the orthodox advertising. Exceptionally large newspaper space was carried and some effective ballyhoo work put over.

Mr. Shea secured the services of three young ladies, who were instructed to wander about the streets and hotels passing out cards that began with a catch line, "Know Me Better," and ended with another display line saying, "Kiss Me Kismet." The girls were attired in the regulation Bagdad style and attracted a lot of attention. The police were "framed" to arrest the girls and one of the newspapers carried a big front page story on the stunt.

"In addition to this outside exploiting," writes Mr. Shea, "we put on a very elaborate and expensive prologue. Opening our show with a special introduction written to the Kismet song, we faded down to soft blue on the stage, and as the music gradually variated into the song, Kismet, a beautiful young lady, dressed in a Turkish costume, entered the stage, and with the constantly changing lights, which synchronized with the music and the dance, put on the "Dance of the Sands." At either side of a rather narrow stage, we had an urn of fire, which constantly burst into flame as she waved her arms and poured her incantations over them. The urns of fire were the usual construction of fans, red and yellow ribbon with dimmers and colored lights attached, all of which helped us to do a fairly good business. All our ushers, doorboys and cashiers were dressed in Turkish costumes.

Specially Made Phonograph Record Ballyhoos for Willitt

Steve Willitt, manager of the Liberty theatre, Astoria, Oregon, last week devised a stunt that set local picture fans talking like a repeating graphophone. The parallel is well used, for that is exactly what Mr. Willitt used to exploit "Harriet and the Piper."

Mr. Willitt at first was rather "stuck" for an exploitation idea for this picture. He felt that a ballyhoo would be too expensive.

He finally hit upon the exact medium which seemed best fitted for his needs—a phonograph with a repeating attachment. A music house in the city had been featuring the machines but a short time before, and Willitt figured they would be glad enough to lend him a machine fitted with the attachment for the publicity they would get. Questions proved that they would be delighted and would aid in getting a specially made record prepared.

The result was a machine in the Liberty lobby that ground out a speech all day long about Greenwich Village and the fact that the locale of "Harriett and the Piper" is laid in this portion of New York.

The crowds gathered to hear the thing, to translate the words as they rolled forth generously and to think them over, to wonder more about this Greenwich Village and ultimately to go to the picture.

Ruffner Asks for Criticisms

Manager of Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, Can., Adopts Novel Method of Building Confidence

MANAGER Ruffner, of the Capitol theatre, Vancouver, B. C., one of the large new theatres of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, made a special appeal for public criticism of a recent programme at the theatre by offering $25 in prizes for opinions of patrons on every number on the bill from the overture and prologue to the feature attraction. A half-page advertisement in the Vancouver World described the conditions of the stunt and also gave an outline of the week's bill, this being that of the last week in April. Panelled spaces were left in the display for the criticisms by patrons and pointed questions were asked regarding each number.

"Was it the kind of music you liked? Which do you prefer, popular music or the classic?" were the questions asked regarding the overture. Patrons were asked if they really enjoy the prologues and if they created "atmosphere." Patrons were requested to state whether they had read the story, "Manifestations of Henry Ort," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and from which the feature picture, "Straight Is the Way," was filmed. "Do you consider the title of the picture version good?" was one question. "How was the music? Did it fit the picture?" was also asked.

According to the announcement, the reason for the questions was that the management had used many adjectives in describing the pictures presented during previous weeks, but it was desired to know whether the Capitol shows were really standing up and if they were pleasing the public or not. Three different cash prizes, or the equivalent in admission passes, were offered, and various details, such as neatness, composition and promptness of reply, were taken into consideration, in addition to the actual opinions.

Many replies were received, and a wide variety of opinions and suggestions were received, but the majority of answers indicated that patrons were pleased. Winning answers were reproduced and were publicly displayed.

Wendt Has Great "Sheltered Daughters" Idea

Here is an exploitation idea for "Sheltered Daughters," originated by Harold F Wendt, publicity director of the Rivol theatre, Toledo, O., that ought to be universally used. It is as good in a smal town as a big one and if ever a stunt wa sure fire, our opinion is that this one is Use it and then drop Mr. Wendt a lin thanking him for the tip. This last is ou suggestion not his, as Wendt is one of th boys, who is willing to try and put into th News exploitation pages as many ideas a he gets therefrom, which is rea reciprocity.

Arrangements were made with one o Toledo's leading papers, whereby tha publication announced that it woul award prizes for the best letters submitte on the subject of sheltered daughters. Th question was put to the readers o whether they would bring up their daugh ters in ignorance of the evils of the worl and its pitfalls. Men and women alik were invited to submit letters. Th awards which were furnished by the thea tres, were in the form of box parties an free tickets. It was announced that thes tickets would be good at any time durin the week when "Sheltered Daughters' was shown. Front page stories told o the heroine of the play and her experi ences as a girl who had been brought u in total ignorance of the seamy side o life and the warning it offered to parents The stories also emphasized the fact tha the pictures dealt cleanly with the pitfall of the uninformed girl, but that it carrie none of the matter ordinarily seen in wha is known as a sex picture. The reader were also advised that their names an addresses need not necessarily be pub lished, although they must be submitted.

Homer, Small Town Exhibitor Who Specializes in Exploitation

Fairfield, Ill., Theatre Puts Over Big Campaign for "What's Your Hurry"

MANAGER MARVEL HOMER of the Rex theatre at Fairfield, Ill., a small manufacturing and farming community, has created a reputation for himself as one of the best "little exploiters" in Southern Illinois. Homer's gospel is to exploit a picture until every stone has been turned, regardless of cost or energy expended. In this respect he has often spent more on propagandizing a costly feature than he would take in during the box-office collection, but the philosophy is "if you get the people coming to your theatre when you have the big shows on, they will also come when you have pictures that are not so well known and don't cost so much."

The manner in which this philosophy of exhibiting has worked out is shown materially by the large profits the Rex has succeded in accumulating during its three years of business. Manager Homer is of the opinion that the small town exhibitor is more apt to consider the immediate outlay and disregard the future income. "I am willing to spend the entire receipts from a big feature picture on advertising it about once each month, and then reap the benefit of the publicity during the other 30 days when the productions lack the high standards of class," he told a NEWS correspondent. "This may not work out in the large cities where the competition is more keen and the theatres are all offering big pictures. But the small community is just the place for such exploitation and it has been found well worth the money."

An example of Homer's ideas of publicity is demonstrated by the exploitation which he gave "What's Your Hurry?" The Rex has a change of program each day, and accordingly all publicity must be directed at that one matinee and evening.

The Reid production was scheduled to appear at the Rex on a Sunday and on the previous Monday the fireworks began. On Monday a solid back page in all three of Fairfield's newspapers carried nothing but the question, "What's Your Hurry?" in large, bold-face type. This was about the first time in the history of the town that so large a teaser had been presented to the populace. It stirred the imagination and began its work of arousing intense interest. Simultaneously there appeared signs and placards all about the town bearing nothing but "What's Your Hurry?" During the early dawn, Homer had two men paint chalk letters on the sidewalks making the same inquiry. The walk in front of the post-office, the library, the city hall, and the newspaper offices bore the question.

On Tuesday every one wanted to know what it was all about. Small children on their way to school would stop and form groups about the letterings on the sidewalks, trying to decipher the meaning of the sentence. Here and there shop-keepers were seen scrubbing or attempting to rub off the chalk. To those who saw it was a good joke and they laughed.

"What's Your Hurry?" was a question that took Fairfield and the surrounding community by storm. Much speculation was rife as to the meaning of it all. Then the city officials protested the disfiguring of the city's sidewalks and threatened to prosecute the culprit. The newspapers were printing stories featuring the various occurrences about town as the result of the "teaser." One school boy, it was related, upon arriving late at school was reprimanded by his instructor. "What's Your Hurry?" was his answer and so great was the laughter and uproar in the school-room that class was dismissed. There were many other similar incidents. The success of the campaign in town inspired Homer to carry it out a bit into the country around Fairfield, as Sunday was a day on which many of the farmers came into Fairfield and the possibility of attracting larger crowds presented itself. Accordingly Homer had the signs painted on the telegraph posts along the road leading out of the town. This, too, brought results.

On Wednesday and Thursday the newspapers carried smaller advertisements announcing the picture at the Rex. On Friday another clever bit of publicity was successfully attempted. An old negro, who is known to every inhabitant of Fairfield as "Whiteness," owns the most stubborn mule in the state. "Rampant" is the name applied to the creature whose popularity (or notoriety) is equally as great as that of "Whiteness." In these two, Homer saw another possibility. The mule is easily recognizable by a large white spot on his forehead and another on his left hind leg. There is no mistaking Rampant or his owner, Whiteness. So, on Friday, Homer had Whiteness appear riding down the main street on the back of Rampant and carrying the following message on a canvas banner:

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY?
Is Coming to the Rex Theatre Sunday.
I've started early
so as to get there on time.
Giddap Rampant.
WHAT'S YOUR HURRY?

The mule proceeded so slowly that the snails whizzed by him, and everybody had an opportunity to see the advertisement. It took Rampant and his rider exactly 30 minutes to pass any given point. Large crowds gathered around the darky and his mule and were further impressed with the fact that Wallace Reid's picture was coming Sunday.

Jean Darnell Enlists Department Store Aid at Dallas

Getting a big department store to devote space in every show window to one motion picture showing in the city is an exploitation feat seldom accomplished. Miss Jean Darnell, Goldwyn's exploitation representative in the South, got such a display in the twenty-five show windows of Joske Brothers store, one of the largest department stores in all the South, for the screening of "Don't Neglect Your Wife," at the Rialto theatre, Dallas, Texas.

In the lobby of the Rialto theatre were strung little red hearts, each one bearing one letter of the title, "Don't Neglect Your Wife." Over the box office was a very large imitation book, about ten feet high, made of beaverboard. The book was opened slightly and in it was a red heart with a Cupid on it as a bookmark.

Grauman Puts Over Another New One

Sid Grauman is an originator de luxe when it comes to presenting something new in picture entertainment.

Last week he staged a combination motion picture and music scene, with the proper comedy interspersed, that was a riot at his big house in Los Angeles. Mish Guterson, famed musical director, was cast in a short real subject, with Douglas MacLean as the other star. Guterson was discovered in the act of leading his orchestra, and when he leads up to a swelling chorus of violins, trombones, flutes and such things, Douglas MacLean arrives and interrupts in proper knocking fashion. He hammers vociferously and noisily upon the door jam.

The picture was so timed that when Guterson leaves the scene MacLean takes up the baton. Not knowing what to do with it one of the men in the orchestra tells him to wave it about. Obeying these instructions he learns that he can produce musical sounds pleasing to the ear. Then he waves the baton some more. Additional music. He becomes animated—very much so. Jazz music in great volumes.

This picture was flashed upon the Grauman screen, and as MacLean and Guterson waved the baton the big orchestra in the pit played in rythm as though the actor and conductor had been there on the stage in person.

It was an innovation that won highest praise, not only from the audience, but from the Los Angeles critics. It was something novel and new. The unique idea was played in connection with the showing of "The Home Stretch," starring Douglas MacLean.

Benda Masks Used in Prologue for "Lost Romance"

One of the most striking innovations in motion picture presentation and one marking a step forward in the artistic creation of programs is the introduction of a Benda Mask Dance by Hugo Riesenfeld at the Criterion theatre, where "The Lost Romance" is the current feature film. Not only is the use of masks something new in a motion picture theatre, but Mr. Riesenfeld's employment of several masked figures to enact a bit of a story is a development in itself.

Masks designed by W. T. Benda, the noted artist, have been used with greatest success on the musical comedy stage, notably in the "Greenwich Village Follies," but at the Criterion the mask dance has been further developed into a dramatic medium. Used heretofore by individual dancers, the masks were employed to make sudden changes in a dancer's personality for different dances, but in the series of mask dances and pantomime planned by Mr. Riesenfeld and Mr. Benda, the group idea is stressed and the dramatic possibilities brought out.

Three figures appear in the dance number—the peculiar characteristics of each being expressed through the masks and costumes. Desha appears as the Sad Girl, a romantic young woman of classic features who wears her heart upon the bosom of her dress and is in love with the hero of the novel she reads. There passes by a Dandy, played by Paul Oscard. The Dandy impresses the Sad Girl and she sees in him the personification of her ideal. Her attentions flatter him and he pays profuse tributes to her. In the midst of the loving tete-a-tete a Frivolous Girl, with gaudiest dress and widest grin, bounces in upon the lovers. Immediately the Dandy's attentions are diverted to the giddy girl and he joins her in romping dance. The Sad Girl, unaccustomed to the fast pace, interferes and protests her love to the Dandy and seeks his faithful affection in return.

The Dandy pleads with the Sad Girl, and, finding other means ineffectual, seats her again on the garden bench and interests her once more in the hero in the novel. As her mind soars upon the wings of imaginary love the Dandy slips away unseen with the Frivolous Girl.

It is a sprightly piece of romancing delightfully told by the three dancers.

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Not only is Bryant Washburn a good dancer himself, but he also is a picker of good dancers. When Watterson R. Rothacker learned Lew Cody and Mr. Washburn were to dance with Chicago girls at the local motion picture machine operators' ball, he asked them to be on the lookout for a graceful dancer of the home-type girl. Harry Brown, one of the Rothacker practical picture directors, needed such a girl in a picture. Mr. Washburn picked Miss Gail Nelson, a northside girl, and she made good on the studio floor.

Manager I. Maynard Schwartz, of Educational, has entered himself and the following members of his staff, S. C. Roy, William Schwartz, Paul De Outo, H. A. Washburn and Miss Ida Quadow, in Educational's gold watch contest, which is scheduled to open May 21st. Educational's Chicago office continues to report excellent business and according to Manager Schwartz, no difficulty in securing playing dates is being felt.

T. B. Warren Distributing Corporation has leased offices at 804 S. Wabash avenue, and vice-president Sidney Goldman is scheduled to return from California, where he is on a combined business and pleasure trip, in time for the formal opening of Warren's Chicago office of which he will have charge on June 6th.

District Manager Duncan, of Vitagraph, is making a flying trip to Omaha and is expected back at his desk in a few days. Chicago Manager Brimmer has assigned the Western Illinois territory to R. E. Boland, who formerly covered the Wisconsin territory, and Salesman Latham is now working the Southern Wisconsin territory.

Watterson R. Rothacker is spending ten days in New York. Jack Cohnrick is on the trail of industrial contracts in Ohio. Douglas D. Rothacker, manager of the Rothacker Industrial Division, is spending a week in Southern Illinois and St. Louis.

Manager Rozelle, of Metro's Chicago Office, reports that his sales staff is meeting with great success in the drive for dates, which he has been conducting, and that last week's business was one of the best in the records of Metro's Chicago exchange.

Aaron Gollos, of Gollos Enterprises, reports that "Deliverance" is meeting with great success throughout Illinois, and that he has ten prints of the Helen Keller feature now working in this territory.

Neal Hart, who came east from Pinnacle Productions' Hollywood Studio to attend the annual meeting of that corporation at Indianapolis and also make a number of personal appearances in Chicago, Indianapolis, Cincinnati and other cities, stopped over for a few hours in Chicago last week on his way back to the coast, where he will resume production. His director, Paul C. Hurst, preceded him by a few days.

Secretary W. D. Burford, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois, and Joe Hopp, left for the East early this week in order to attend the Washington meeting scheduled for May 17th. It is expected that the date for the national convention, scheduled for Minneapolis, will be fixed at this meeting and other matters of great importance taken up.

Al Steffis, president of the Minnesota Exhibitors' Association, was in Chicago for a few hours this week en route to the Washington conference and expects to stop off for a visit with Chicago friends on his return trip.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois, formerly the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, have removed their offices from 202 S. State street, to 845 S. Wabash avenue.

W. D. Russell, of Russell & Russell, expects to leave for the West Coast within a few days to discuss plans for new productions with B. D. Russell, who is looking after the interests of this firm in California.

Dan Barton, of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, is expected back at his Mallers Building headquarters next week. He has been on a prolonged business trip throughout the East, which included a stop of several days in New York City. Organ business continues good according to word received from Mr. Barton.

Lew Cody, who has been making a number of successful personal appearances in Chicago, and other central west cities, left for New York Tuesday where he will spend a few days. He expects to be back in Chicago at the end of the week and will then head for the coast where he is booked for another series of personal appearances.

Si Greiver has opened up a new state right exchange at 808 S. Wabash avenue to be known as Greiver Productions. His policy will be to handle only big specials, the first of which Babe Ruth in "Heading Home," will open at Barbee's Loop theatre on June 12th.

Pioneer has booked its feature, "The Barbarian," with the Lubliner & Trinz and Ascher Brothers Circuits and a number of other big Chicago houses, and reports that it is proving a good box office attraction.

The big new show rooms of the Amusement Supply Company at 740 S. Wabash avenue are rapidly being put into shape by Manager Benson and this concern soon will have one of the most commodious and well equipped sales rooms in the central west.

Sam Katz, of Balaban & Katz, was in New York this week attending the second annual convention of First National.

Jack Willis, widely known to the trade of the central west as a maker of film trailers, has removed his offices from the Consumers' Building to 30 E. Eighth street.

Manager Ben Beadell of Associated Producers, has recently added a quartette of active business getters to his sales force. They are George Weinberg, who will cover Iowa territory; Benny Edelman, Illinois territory; Charles Beauford, Indiana territory; and Eddy Brichetto, whose beat will be Chicago.

Joe Friedman, of Celebrated Players, is at Atlantic City with his family where he will enjoy two or three week's vacation. Celebrated Exchange is showing a splendid lot of exploitation material for the serial, "Miracles of the Jungle," which will be released in July. A miniature jungle has been installed in a space on the main floor of the exchange peopled with leopards, gorillas, chimpanzees and other stuffed denizens of the tropics which Celebrated will be prepared to loan exhibitors putting on this serial.

Jack Graumon, of Doll-Van, reports that the bookings for "The County Fair" are going over big. Its first Chicago showing will be at Barbee's opening May 29th and Lubliner & Trinz and Ascher Brothers also have booked it for their houses. All the out-of-town key centers also have booked this picture, according to Mr. Graumon, who states that exhibitors everywhere are preparing to take advantage of the unusual exploitation possibilities of "The County Fair," and that Doll-Van is extending special help in putting it over in a big way.

Burnett & Degen are rushing work on their new theatre at Coulterville, Indiana, and expect to have it opened for business early in September. They have decided to name the new house the Illinois.

W. A. Engelman has opened central west headquarters for the Olympus Productions at 1117 Peoples Gas Building. He attended a sales conference in New York last week, and is enthusiastic over the prospects of the new company.

Manager Ben Beadell, of Associated Producers, has added the following to his sales staff: Wm. Stern and Ben Edelman, who will cover country territory, and E. C. Brecketto, who will look after city sales.

Joe Friedman is back at his desk in Celebrated Players' headquarters after attending the convention of Federated Exchanges of America at Atlantic City.

"A Day with Jack Dempsey" Pathe

Who is it crowding the Silesia-Polish problem off the front pages? Jack Dempsey. Who is it chasing the so-called important news to the back pages of the papers? Jack Dempsey. Who is it that commands all the attention from the feature writers and is very much in the public eye? Our own Jack Dempsey. The big fight is coming off July 2 and everyone who has reached the age of reason is very much interested. So it is an extremely timely offering which Pathe is releasing, entitled, "A Day With Jack Dempsey."

"We have been given accounts of his training, but this single reeler visualizes the champion in preparation for the big melee, which of course, enables everyone to know just how he is fitting himself for the ring. The picture is authentic and presents Jack at Freddy Welsh's farm. It is not a composition of strip shots from a weekly, but the genuine article. Pathe should clean up with it. And so should the exhibitor if he appreciates the timeliness of the subject and its box office value.

The champion is shown skipping the rope, running cross country, indulging in shadow-boxing, sparring with lightweights who, being small and quick in movement, enable him to develop speed He has moments with muscle-building machines. It is a full day—one which is athletically lived to the fullest.—Laurence Reid.

Music and the Picture

Sense of Humor Essential to Movie-Musical Success

By Charles D. Isaacson

WITHOUT a sense of humor the average theatre musician is lost. I am now thinking less of the leader of a large orchestra than the one-man battery—rather have I in mind the organist or the pianist in the smaller type of house. Such a man must be prepared for any emergency, and must be as buoyant and light-hearted and enthusiastic after the last number as the first. He cannot make a fixed, cut-and-dried outline of his week's program. He must sense the reactions of the audience and play up the things which seem to make a hit and pull out the parts which seem to bore and tire the listeners. He must be the clear-headed creature, "neverphazed" jack-in-the-box, master of all moments, the calmer of excitements in case of fire, riots, or what not—the leader in all celebrations, the chief spirit in holiday times, episodes of national stress, excitement or mental pain. For he is the only live, speaking human in the theatre. The audience is a mob—it is of one mind, not a lot of individuals, but a mass intelligence easily frightened, angered, aroused, calmed. The executives of the theatre and the staff have no power to control the crowd. It remains solely and entirely in the hands of the musician to do his will upon the listeners.

I wonder if that single-man orchestra realizes his powers. I wonder if he senses his opportunities to develop a mob psychology within his brain, which can make him a leader of men in any walk of life, or executive capacity. I wonder if he has tried his abilities—made his audience laugh, then cry—calmed them to a somnulence and then agitated them until they are ready to scream.

Therefore if the musician hasn't a sense of humor, then he is lost. With it he can "control the show." I am reminded of an article I saw some months ago in a Boston paper. A young woman, Miss Edith Lang, the organist of the Exeter theatre and a member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory said that she felt one of the most important assets in picture playing was this same sense of humor. Whether I remember her words correctly or not, she did say something like this:

"There is the moment when after a sad and pathetic scene in which the aisles are drenched with the tears, when the ladies are burying their noses in their handkerchiefs and the men are suddenly aware of that cold, which prompts them to clear their throats vehemently—then I would say that the musician is doing a special favor to his people, if he plays loudly and massively to cover up the sounds and the embarrassment of the affected tender hearts. I always find my audience decidedly grateful for such an act. . . . Thus if I ever hear that my audience is getting restless (when feet begin to shuffle), I take it as a signal to change the tide of my music. The same thing doesn't apply every night—no not at all; what goes one night won't possibly do another night. Just as if audiences ran in types—with birds of a feather crowding together. I believe that there is simply no hope for an accompanist minus a sense of humor. That is the saving grace. For the musician must, at all times, feel the atmosphere and keep step with his audience."

"Now, many times on holidays," Miss Lang said in effect, "a crowd of boys and girls having stood for hours waiting to gain entrance to see a certain film, there is a bit of mischief in their hearts, which is aching to come out. Little disturbances can be detected in the neighborhood of the children. The sad parts they are mocking. When the hero takes the heroine in his strong arms, some lad cupping his hands makes a loud sound like a kiss. . . . I am always ready. I play loud chords which completely hide the disturbing sound. That has turned the laugh right on the intruder. . . . Once I was in the midst of a very interesting picture which aroused the antagonism of some radical in the audience. He stood up in his place and started to rant. I jazzed him out of countenance and had the audience with me, by the satirical music I played."

I have never met Miss Lang, but she must be a very efficient, highly-trained mentality.

Think of how impossible a theatre job would be for a musician whose taste was so high or so low that he couldn't see how funny he is. It would be a serious joke for a conductor to be unable to jump into the fun of a slapstick comedy and be just as asinine as the jumping jack comedian. That's the point—the musician must be the chameleon of entertainment. He must change his musical color with the action. He must be the slapstick comedian, the tragic Shakespearean character, the heroic young thing, the dashing sport-girl, the ingenuous, sweet, pastorale lass, the stupid old fop, the gruff, kindly boatman, the weak, tender old mother. He must reflect it all in his representations. This type of musician must throw dignity to the winds where necessary and be carried on the waves of the entertainment.

Please do not imagine that I am calling for a motion picture musician who is all comedian. By sense of humor isn't meant anything like that. There must be a serious purpose back of the whole musical entertainment, but the director, or organist or pianist must be facile and elastic in his habits.

Nobody can lay down a rigid set of rules and hope to get away with them. Everything might go beautifully for months, and then all of a sudden—smash What's the matter? The musician wasn't adaptable, he didn't feel the pulse of the audience.

The ideal musician will know just the right moment to switch from the real music to the jazziest jazz, and when another note of the ragtime would be disastrous—when it is time for the "Barcarolle" from the "Tales of Hoffman" to give contrast. He will know when his audience is in the mood for one kind or the other. He will be sensitive to the response that he feels he is getting from them.

In the event of a fire or trouble, he will stick to his post and by his readiness of mind will avert disaster. Of course, in these days there is little more need to insert the card, "One Moment, Please"—and film doesn't break so often

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Florence Vidor

Victor Nurnberg Joins Reelcraft

Victor Nurnberg, formerly of the New York Globe and Dramatic Mirror, has now taken upon his shoulders the task of directing the advertising and publicity of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation. He is considered to be one of the youngest executives in the theatrical business world.

New Star Puts Bathing Suit Out of Her Life

MARIE PROVOST, noted bathing beauty, who is to appear in comedy dramas for Universal Film, managed to inform the New York public of her intention to forsake her old career as a bathing beauty, through the news columns of the daily papers.

Miss Provost, surrounded by hundreds, started a bonfire on the beach of Coney Island, using all still pictures of herself in bathing attire and her famous one-piece suit as fuel. By means of effective teaser letters to the editors of the New York press, every paper in the city had the affair covered by reporters and much publicity for the star was obtained.

Miss Provost is now on her way to Universal City, where she will start the production of the first of her features.

Mid-West Welcomes Star

Clara Kimball Young in Another Big Tour Through Many Cities

ANNOUNCED by press and public long before her arrival Clara Kimball Young, the Equity star, is attracting great attention in the principal cities of the Middle West by her personal apperances. After an absence of years from most of the cities she is now visiting, the star of 'Hush' and 'Straight From Paris' has come back for a flying trip and has laid siege to the hearts of the inhabitants.

When Clara Kimball Young, in company with the Equity exploitation man, Milton Crandall, came to the Southwest a few months ago and conquered all and sundry, it was claimed that a star's personal visit in that section was such a novelty as to arouse a sensation. Miss Young's present tour in the Middle West demonstrates that she is as popular and captivating in these districts as in others. In a series of receptions, Miss Young has passed from one city to the next leaving a trail of applause and enthusiasm.

Beginning with Pittsburgh and hurrying on through Detroit, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Duluth, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City and St. Louis, her advent, and stay, as brief as it was, was the subject of feature headings in the press and the absorbing topic of conversation. Welcomed with all civic honor, the Equity star invaded each city with pomp. Her opinions on politics, fashions, prohibition, Edison's questionnaire and local affairs were sought and quoted word for word. So great was the popular curiosity in the screen heroine that her entry and exit from her hotel suite was continually barricaded by a swarm of idol-worshippers.

Never in the history of filmdom, according to Joe Skirboll of First National—the local Equity franchise-holder, has Pittsburgh seen a greeting as tremendous as that accorded Miss Young. Harry Scott of First National in Detroit, J. F. Cubberley of First National in Milwaukee, N. J. Frisch of Des Moines and Frank J. Newman of Kansas City—all have acclaimed the personal tour of the Equity star a big thing in their respective cities. Messages of appreciation from civic officials, prominent exhibitors and exchangemen are pouring in to Equity headquarters—all stamping the visit of the Equity star as the sensation of their respective localities.

Needless to say, the exhibitors of the Middle West were impressed with the drawing power of Miss Young and that of her latest Equity offerings.

New Star for Ass'd Exhib's

Will Present Florence Vidor in Specials; Other Plans Forthcoming

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the executive committee of the Associated Exhibitors that Arthur S. Kane, chairman of the board of directors of Associated, has signed contracts making Florence Vidor the latest star acquisition of that organization.

Production will be commenced at once on the West Coast on the first of her pictures for Associated, and under present plans she will make four of the series in the first year. Every production will be designed to rank as a big special production, and it is confidently predicted by officials of that organization that as an Associated Exhibitors star the talented wife of King Vidor will take her place as one of the first women stars of the screen. The Florence Vidor pictures will be made at the King Vidor studios.

It is understood that this is the first of a series of announcements on Associated Exhibitors production plans that are the outcome of Mr. Kane's trip to the Coast. Several other stars and directors figured in negotiations with Mr. Kane, but announcement on the other production plans will be deferred until his return to the New York headquarter of the organization. Enough is known of the results of his trip to make it certain that the Associated will present an elaborate series of releases in the fall, announces the statement from the Associated Exhibitors' headquarters.

Moreno on New Picture for Vitagraph

Antonio Moreno is at work on his new Vitagraph production at the Hollywood studio. It is an English story based on the original story by William Garrett, called "The Secret of the Hills," and is being made under the direction of Chester Bennett. Lillian Hall is Mr. Moreno's leading lady.

Pathe Names Releases for 29th of May

PATHE makes announcement of its releases for May 29. "Outwitting the Timber Wolf," the next of the series of "The Adventures of Bill and Bob," abounds not only in thrills but also in beautiful outdoor scenery and a real vein of comedy.

"Mid-Air" is the title of the fifth episode of the George B. Seitz serial, "The Sky Ranger," in which Mr. Seitz co-stars with June Caprice. An aeroplane invention plays an important and thrilling part in this chapter, according to Pathe. "The House of Treachery" is the twelfth episode of "The Avenging Arrow," starring Ruth Roland. A free-for-all fight in a hotel lobby gives a touch of vivid action to the story while mysterious events are shaping themselves on the floors below.

The title of the forthcoming Hal E. Roach comedy, featuring "Snub" Pollard, is "Save Your Money." The predicament of a young man striving to meet his income-tax while at the same time beset by grabbing profiteers, is the story unfolded in the comedy. Pathe Review No. 105 shows the rotogravure pressroom of the New York Times and the preparatory steps for the publication of the Sunday's pictorial section; a bird in actual flight is caught by the slow-motion camera; a Hy Mayer Capitol Travelaugh; and a Pathecolor presentation titled "The Straw Men of Africa."

Mathilde Bundage Added to Ince Cast

Mathilde Bundage, widely known for her character portrayals, is the latest addition to the all-star cast of "Hail the Woman," Thomas H. Ince's drama of American domestic life for the Associated Producers, which is now in its fifth week of production.

"Hail the Woman" is being directed by John Griffith Wray, under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The story and continuity are by C. Gardner Sullivan. Florence Vidor, Madge Bellamy, Theodore Roberts, Lloyd Hughes, Chas. Meredith, Tully Marshall, Gertrude Claire, and other featured players are included in the all-star cast.

"Cup of Life" Is Being Edited by Ince

Final cutting and editing of "The Cup of Life," a Thomas H. Ince special, scheduled for release by the Associated Producers, was started this week with Ince personally in charge of operations.

Featuring an all-star cast, including Hobart Bosworth, Madge Bellamy, Tully Marshall and Niles Welch, the story is a melo-dramatic romance of the East Indies. The original story of "The Cup of Life" was written by Carey Wilson, and adapted to the screen by Joseph Franklin Poland; Rowland V. Lee directed, under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Yosemite Valley Scenes in Eva Novak Film

During the filming of "Wolves of the North" Norman Dawn took Eva Novak and her supporting cast into the Yosemite Valley for the purpose of "shooting" some avalanche scenes required in the development of the plot. The result of this trip is reported to be the incorporation into the picture of some unusual scenic "shots" that admirably reveal the natural grandeur of that location.

Norman Dawn wrote the story. Wallace Clifton developed the scenario. Prominent in Miss Novak's support are Herbert Heyes and Barbara Tennant.

Lowell Sherman Signed by Mack Sennett

Lowell Sherman, noted stage and screen actor, has been engaged by Mack Sennett to appear in dramatic screen productions. Sherman left last week to join the Sennett studios on the West coast.

Sherman's engagement by Sennett is in line with Sennett's policy to assemble top notch casts for his dramatic productions, the first of which is "Hearthbalm," which will be announced shortly for release by Associated Producers, Inc.

Selznick Director to Direct Geo. Arliss

In a period "between pictures" at Selznick's Fort Lee studios Myron Selznick, vice president in charge of productions, has loaned Henry Kolker to Distinctive Features Productions Company, to direct George Arliss in "Disraeli."

Miss Frederick Goes West

Leaves New York After Hasty Shopping Tour; "Salvage" Next Release

PAULINE FREDERICK after a hasty visit to New York for a supply of gowns has returned again to the Robertson-Cole studios on the West Coast. While in the East Miss Frederick, according to a statement from the Robertson-Cole office, denied she is contemplating a return to the stage in the near future and asserted that she expects to be busy "for some time to come starring in Robertson-Cole productions."

Her newest vehicles for release by Robertson-Cole are titled "Salvage" and "The Sting of the Lash," both directed by Henry King. "Salvage," which was written by Daniel Whitcomb, is scheduled for release during the early summer. "The Sting of the Lash" will be released in the fall.

A feature of the setting employed in the filming of "Salvage" is a set reproducing the complete first floor of a millionaire's mansion. This set, says the Robertson-Cole statement, has been pronounced by technical experts as "the finest home interior ever built for a motion-picture." The Robertson-Cole statement adds:

"The setting was designed like a real home. Even in the floors real hardwood, tile, mosaic and marble were used, instead of the painted imitations. The reason so few sets of this kind are seen in pictures is due to the great difficulty cameramen experience in photographing them because of the four sided rooms. In the Robertson-Cole studios, however, is one of the best equipped overhead lighting systems in the world, so that it was comparatively an easy matter to flood the big set with the necessary lights during the filming of the production."

Preview for Ince Picture

"Mother O' Mine" Seen at New Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles

ACCORDING to a statement just received from New York headquarters of Associated Producers, the new Thomas H. Ince subject titled "Mother O' Mine" was favorably received at a preview showing given this week at the New Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.

"Mother O' Mine" was adapted to the screen by C. Gardner Sullivan from "The Octopus," by Charles Belmont Davis. Fred Niblo directed under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, with Henry Sharp at the camera. The all-star cast includes Lloyd Hughes, Joseph Kilgour, Betty Blythe, Betty Ross Clarke and Claire McDowell.

An intensive publicity and exploitation campaign has been set in motion by the Association Producers exploitation forces and is scheduled to break throughout the country coincident with the release of the feature, on June 5th.

Concerning the reception extended "Mother O' Mine" at its preview showing in the New Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, Associated Producers makes the following announcement:

"The audience was a typical gathering of patrons of the popular Los Angeles playhouse, 'Mother O' Mine' having been put on with no preliminary announcement. The power of the drama made a visible impression upon the packed house, as did the tensity of the many startling situations, the excellence of the character portrayals, and the remarkable skill with which the suspense and doubt have been maintained until the final hundred feet of film."

Army to Have Music Scores

Synchronized Music Scores Will Furnish Service to Five Camps

SYNCHRONIZED Music Scores have penetrated into the stronghold of the United States Army. Music Score Service Corporation at 1600 Broadway, New York, distributor of Synchronized Music Scores in the Metropolitan territory announces that it is in receipt of signed contracts covering the installation of its service in Camp Dix, Fortress Monroe, Va.; Camp Eustis, Va., and Camp Meade, and Camp Franklyn, Md.

W. P. Wooldridge, director of United States Army Motion Picture Service, in signing contracts for the above six Eastern camps, paves the way for what will doubtless mean Synchronized Music Score Service to all the camps in the United States Army.

Lieutenant O'Reilly, director of the United States Navy Motion Picture Service, and stationed at the United States Navy Yard, in Brooklyn, New York, is also reported to have arranged for a demonstration of the value of Synchronized Music Scores, on Friday night, May 20, when a special showing of Paramount's sterling feature, "City of Silent Men," will be screened to the accompaniment of a Synchronized Music Score prepared by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld. The officers of the United States Navy Yard, Brooklyn, New York, together with officers of the battleship now anchored in the Hudson River, and their families and friends have been invited to attend this special event, which will take place in the Navy Yard theatre, in Brooklyn.

Tony Sarg Almanac an Instant Success

THE instantaneous success of Tony Sarg's Almanac Series is so pronounced and so national in its scope that George R. Meeker, general manager of the company, has placed the past week this series of shadowgraph comedies not alone in the Criterion, Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York and the Stanley Circuit in Philadelphia, but the California theatre in San Francisco and Graumann's in Los Angeles, through Jack Partington, who was in New York and saw the appreciation with which the first of these series was received at the Criterion theatre. The Paramount theatre in St. Louis, The Missourian, has booked the entire series as well as many others.

Although it is but a single reel, it has aroused the appreciation of the big booking syndicates, who immediately saw the value of Tony Sarg's Almanac as a box office magnet. The same booking agencies have not alone contracted for this one reel feature for their big houses, but have signed them up for their smaller theatres. The principal inducement for them to take on this picture was that the humor of the subjects is universal in its scope and is therefore favorably received by all kinds of audiences.

Lambert Hillyer Again with Ince Forces

Lambert Hillyer, author, scenario writer and director, who made his film debut as a cameraman with Thomas H. Ince in the old days of Inceville, is to return to the Ince studios, after an absence of more than two years, to direct a Thomas H. Ince Special Feature for Associated Producers distribution, according to an announcement issued this week.

"Lucky Damage," a drama by Marc Edmond Jones, is the production with which Hilyer will make his return to the Ince banner. An all-star cast will be featured and it is expected that Henry Sharp will be assigned to the photography.

Soldiers and Sailors See Ibanez Special

Uniformed members of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps are finding a big appeal in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," a Rex Ingram production for Metro now being shown at the Astor theatre, declares a statement from the Metro headquarters. Since its first presentation to Broadway on March 6, among the thousands who have witnessed this dramatic screen presentation of the greatest novel of the war days, 2376 men in uniform had purchased tickets up to the performance last Sunday night, says the Metro statement.

Neal Hart Signed for Eight More Features

General Manager Nate Woody, of Pinnacle Productions, announces that Neal Hart has signed a contract to produce eight more feature pictures for Pinnacle during the coming year.

Mr. Hart will be directed by Paul C. Hurst in the forthcoming productions and the stories, which already have been chosen as vehicles and the production plans outlined by Mr. Hurst recently at the annual meeting of Pinnacle, would seem to assure a splendid group of features.

The forthcoming series of pictures will minimize gun play and vividly portray the fine qualities and idealism which is so frequently found among the real men of the West and which has been too often overlooked in portraying Western character on the screen.

Select Releasing Two Selznick Features

The Select organization distributes two Selznick pictures during May, the releases being Owen Moore in "A Divorce of Convenience," which was set for May 10; and Elaine Hammerstein in "The Girl from Nowhere," dated for May 20. "A Divorce of Convenience" has had several pre-release showings throughout the country.

Bradley King, author of "Lying Lips," provided the story on which Sarah Y. Mason based the scenario for "The Girl from Nowhere." George Archainbaud directed.

A scene from "Carnival," to be released by United Artists

"Black Panther's Cub" Premiere in Boston

LOUIS BAUM, sales-manager of Equity Pictures, returned this week from short visit to Boston, where he completed arrangements for the premiere showing of the new Equity-Ziegfeld production. "The Black Panther's Cub." The theatre Baum chose is the Majestic, where the Florence Reed starring vehicle will open May 30 for an indefinite run.

Beulah Livingstone to Leave for Europe

Beulah Livingstone will sail on the Mauretania June 9, for a two or three months' trip abroad in the interests of Joseph M. Schenck. Miss Livingstone will visit all the Associated First National's foreign exchanges in France, Italy, and England, and will call on fifty exhibitors to aid them in promoting big exploitation ideas in connection with the showing of Talmadge pictures.

Beulah Livingstone has organized a new department for the Schenck film activities.

Heavy Advance Bookings for "Get Your Man"

The William Fox headquarters announces that the advance bookings on Buck Jones's "Get Your Man" are piling up rapidly at the Fox exchanges. The picture will be released late in May. The first-run houses are well represented in the advance contracts for this picture, attesting, says William Fox, to the popularity of this star in the high-class houses.

"Get Your Man" was directed by George W. Hill. Alan Sullivan furnished the story which deals with the adventures of a Royal Northwest Mounted policeman. In "Get Your Man" Jones is supported by such players as William Lawrence, Beatrice Burnham, Helene Rosson and Paul Kamp.

Press-Book Available for "Black Roses"

An unusually artistic press book has been issued by Robertson-Cole Co., for Sessue Hayakawa in "Black Roses," scheduled for release May 20. This is the first of three press books on Robertson-Cole releases to be issued in practically the same form.

The other Robertson-Cole press books to follow the same general style will be on "Beach of Dreams" with Edith Storey and "Cold Steel" with J. P. McGowan, supported by Kathleen Clifford and an all star cast. These also are May releases.

Paramount Announces May 22 Releases

ELSIE FERUGSON, in "Sacred and Profane Love," a picturization of Arnold Bennett's stage success, and "Too Wise Wives," a Lois Weber production, are scheduled for release by Paramount, May 22. "Sacred and Profane Love" is Miss Ferguson's first picture since her appearance in the play on Broadway last year and her subsequent tour of Europe.

The story was adapted by Julia Crawford Ivers. William D. Taylor directed. In the supporting cast are Conrad Nagel, Thomas Holding, Helen Dunbar, Winifred Greenwood, Raymond Brathwayt, Clarissa Selwyn, Howard Gaye, Jane Keckley, Forrest Stanley, Barbara Gurney, and Guy Oliver.

In "Too Wise Wives," Claire Windsor is the leading woman. Phillips Smalley, Mona Lisa, and Louis Calhern are the other principals.

Viola Dana Working on "The Match Breaker"

"The Match Breaker" is now under production with Viola Dana in the stellar role and Dallas Fitzgerald directing. The company producing "The Match Breaker" is to be known as the Dallas Fitzgerald unit in accordance with the "unit system" recent established by Metro. Arthur Zellner, who will in the future prepare all the scripts for the Fitzgerald unit, wrote the continuity for "The Match Breaker."

"Anatol" Divided Like 4-Act Stage-Play

An effect resembling a four-act stage play is effected in Cecil B. De Mille's latest Paramount production, "The Affairs of Anatol," according to Paramount officials.

This is achieved by the division of Jeanie Macpherson's story into four distinct episodes, each boasting of individual players and its own distinctive background. All four of these are closely knit, however, in a manner that can only be achieved in a photoplay.

Linder Leaves Robertson-Cole

French Star to Have New Distributor, Still Unnamed

MAX LINDER, the bright-eyed little French soldier-star, who came back so strong after the war with "Seven Years Bad Luck," has left Robertson-Cole, the releasing firm who distributed this five-reel feature comedy. Linder is now in New York, where he came expressly for the purpose of winding up his contract. It is reported that the Frenchman was not just exactly pleased with the arrangements for distributing his product, and on Monday morning he concluded his release from agreement with Mr. Cole, parting on warm friendly terms.

Max Linder, one of Europe's best known stars, brought from Los Angeles his second production, also in five reels, which he has titled "My Wife," and which he will prepare to release before returning to the Coast to commence shooting his next comedy. This picture is said to have taken a whole year to make. It was pre-viewed in Los Angeles where it went over in truly big style. Max has injected a lot of new gags into the story, has played it in De Mille-like settings, and has surrounded himself with an estimable cast, including Alta Allen, who made a big hit with him in "Seven Years Bad Luck;" Lincoln Stedman, son of Myrtle Stedman; Charles McHugh, Caroline Rankin, Viroa Daniels and Pal, a highly intelligent dog. The clear and all around excellent photography was done by Charles Van Enger, the lad who shot Tourneur's Mohican story. Mr. Linder wrote and directed the play in addition to enacting the male lead.

Max Linder

Linder is at the Biltmore in New York with Clarke Irvine, his personal representative and advertising manager. He expects to remain in the big city for at least two weeks, as he has not been here for some time. After concluding arrangements for rehearsing this and future Linder productions, the star will return to the Coast to resume production at his little studio in Universal City, where he has made the last two pictures.

While en route East, the party stopped off at Chicago and were guests of H. R. Phillips, R.-C. salesman in that city, who took them out to inspect the new Tivoli theatre, which Linder says is the most gorgeous house he has ever seen, either here or abroad. Manager Balaban of this palatial theatre showed the French star everything from box office to projection room.

Linder already has the story for his next comedy, which opens in a far Eastern metropolis and brings the characters to New York, Atlantic City, and thence to California where the major portion of the action transpires and the riotous comedy angles are put over. In the mean time he is enjoying a little vacation.

Dempsey in Special for Pathe

THE coming fistic encounter between Jack Dempsey and Georges Carpentier is responsible for an unusual burst of activities in the Pathe headquarters and branch-offices. The release of an exclusive picture titled "A Day with Jack Dempsey," showing the heavyweight boxing champion in training for his coming bout with the French pugilist, is engaging much of the attention of the Pathe forces at the present moment. In addition, efforts are being redoubled by the branch-office staffs to secure the widest possible showing of "Daredevil Jack," the Pathe serial, which presents Jack Dempsey in the feature role. The Pathe headquarters reports that both of these subjects are experiencing an unusually heavy demand in view of their timely interest as the screen vehicles of America's champion ring-fighter. During the week of May 9 the business on "Daredevil Jack" increased 200 per cent over that of the previous week, declares the Pathe home-office.

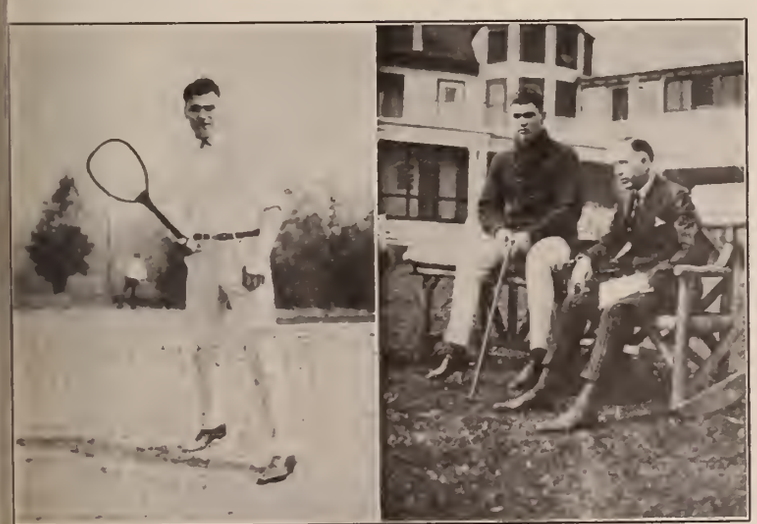
One hundred prints of the Pathe one-reel special "A Day With Jack Dempsey," the only picture of the heavyweight champion in actual training for his championship bout with Georges Carpentier, are now in the Pathe branch offices or are on their way.

Within a couple of days, another hundred prints, completing the quota of 200 established by Pathe, will be on their way throughout the country, from the Pathe laboratory in Bound Brook, N. J.

Even the optimistic ideas entertained by the Pathe executives with regard to the amount of business that should be done by the Dempsey special, are certain to be moderate when the total has been registered, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters.

A tie-up with nearly four hundred newspapers of the country has been effected with "A Day With Jack Dempsey," announces Pathe. A story under this title will appear in many of the nation's leading dailies, which will add perceptibly to the tremendous publicity Dempsey will receive between now and July Second, declares the Pathe statement.

Pathe has decided to make no reservations with regard to bookings on the Dempsey special. It is a case of "First come, first served."



"I have given Pathe exclusive rights to the only picture that will be made of myself, while preparing for my coming bout with Carpentier," Dempsey is quoted as declaring.

"No other training pictures are authorized, and none will be before the fight."

Every facility for properly exploiting the Dempsey feature will be offered exhibitors by Pathe, it is stated. A distinctive lobby display will be issued with other material, as well as a set of black and whites, a slide, and a press sheet, according to the Pathe statement.

In connection with "Daredevil Jack," Pathe headquarters declares that during the week of May 9th an increase of 200 per cent in business over that of the preceding week was recorded, and this, says the Pathe statement, despite the fact that bookings on this subject have been increasing steadily with the approach of the championship bout. Beginning this week, this chapter-picture will appear on many programs that have carried the production's title before, says Pathe. "Daredevil Jack" was produced by Robert Brunton for Pathe and was directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

Exhibitors in Buffalo are going to "cash in" properly on the Dempsey production. Several have already booked the serial, with the intent of doubling up on episodes, so that the final instalment or two can be exhibited on July 2nd, the day Dempsey is called upon to defend his title. This is a movement certain to be copied in other territories.

Patrons Speak Well of Pickford Film

In accordance with a scheme devised by Harry David, manager of the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, every usher in this house is furnished with a pad upon which he writes the comments patrons make regarding the show. These comments are turned in to Mr. David at the end of each performance. United Artists quotes the following comments submitted to Mr. David during the showing of Mary Pickford's latest release, "Through the Back Door":

"A lady said it was the best picture that Mary Pickford ever played in," Dorothy Arnold, Usher.

"This picture made me cry and at the same time I had to laugh," Rose Young's report.

"Mary Pickford is so cute: best picture she has ever made," Geraldine Freed's report.

Donn Byrne Likes Film Version of Story

Donn Byrne, the well known short story writer, from whose story the screen version of "The Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan Production, was made, expressed himself as delighted with the screen production. Robert G. Vignola directed the picture from a scenario by Doty Hobart. Seena Owen and E. K. Lincoln play the leading roles. "The Woman God Changed" will have a pre-release showing at the Rivoli theatre, New York, beginning Sunday, May 22, and then will be released by Paramount throughout the country.

"Big Four" Gets "Carnival"

Spectacular Film Made Abroad by Harley Knoles and American Staff

UNITED ARTISTS announces that it has acquired for distribution the Harley Knoles picture, titled "Carnival." Hiram Abrams will announce the definite release date upon his return to New York from California next week. "Carnival" is declared to be one of the biggest productions so far made in Europe and is described as being "spectacular in every sense of the word." The statement from the United Artists' headquarters points out that "Carnival" is "a foreign picture only in the sense that the picture was made on the other side." The statement adds: "Mr. Knoles produced the picture with an American staff of assistants, and its every detail is well up to the best that has been made in America."

The story is modern in character, and its locale is laid in Venice during Carnival time. The leading role is played by Matheson Lang, the well-known actor of Shakesperean roles. Hilda Bailey is also cast in an important part. The Official Trade Show Gazette in England is quoted as follows:

"It is magnificently and cleverly constructed. The acting of Matheson Lang and Hilda Bailey is simply wonderful. It is natural and no evidence of professional acting is evident. They live their parts and feel them, imparting the correct emotional expression without effort or strain. The photography and settings are perfect. The scenes taken in Venice are superlatively fine."

It is understood that United Artists secured "Carnival" from Mr. Knoles only after spirited competition against other leading distributors in the United States.

Nazimova Plans New Films

In New York to Confer with Her Husband on Future Photoplays

NAZIMOVA is at present in New York for the purpose of conferring with her husband, Charles Bryant, on her future photoplays. Nazimova's trip East follows the recent completion of "Camille," hailed by Metro Pictures as "her latest and largest screen production." Ray C. Smallwood directed this production, a feature of which is declared to be the backgrounds designed by Natacha Rambova. June Mathis adapted the Alexandre Dumas drama for the screen. Miss Mathis is said to have so arranged the settings and the scenes as to make "Camille" appear as a drama of today.

Rudolph Valentino heads the supporting cast, which also includes Arthur Hoyt, Zeffie Tillbury, Rex Cherryman, Edward Connelly, Ruth Miller, Consuelo Flowerton and William Otlamond. The following statement was issued by the Metro home-office following Nazimova's arrival in the East:

"The fact that 'Camille' is the star's last production for Metro has arisen merely out of Metro's desire not to interfere with her ambition to produce hereafter only photoplays of the magnitude of 'Camille.' In appreciation of Nazimova's genius and her splendid spirit of co-operation with Metro both in matters relating to the production and release of her pictures, the company had decided to waive all contract rights to control her screen plays.

"'Camille' is the forerunner of several big productions Nazimova has in mind. This picture version of the classic drama by Alexandre Dumas, the younger, is elaborate in the extreme, and has, in the matter of customs and staging, been brought up to date."

Philo McCullough Made Director of Fox

Philo McCullough has been made a directer of the Fox West Coast studios. McCullough's first picture will be an Eileen Percy subject, with "The Canyon Kid" as working title. This is now under way.

Willat Completing His Third for Hodkinson

IRVIN V. WILLAT wires from the West Coast to the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that "The Face of the World," his third independent production, is practically completed. "The Face of the World" is said to represent Mr. Willat's greatest achievement thus far.

The two leading roles in "The Face of the World" are handled by Barbara Bedford, who was last seen in Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Last of the Mohicans," and Edward Hearn, who scored in "Down Home," Irvin V. Willat's first independent production for Hodkinson's release.

Pathe Sets "The Heart Line" for June 5th

"The Heart Line," presented by Arthur F. Beck, as an adaptation of Gelett Burgess' celebrated novel of the same name, will be released by Pathe Exchange, Inc., on June 5th.

In the big cast are: Leah Baird, Jerome Patrick, Ruth Sinclair, Mrs. Charles C. Craig, Master Ben Alexander, Frederick Vroom, Claire McDowell, Martin Best, Philip Sleeman, Martha Dean, Frank Williams, Graham Pettie, Gertrude Astor, Ivar McFadden, Mary Harron, Eva Gordon, Clo King, E. G. Niller, Johnny Harron, and Alice Knowland. Frederick A. Thomson directed.

Five months of intensive work were given to the production of the latest Pathe feature release. With a large part of the action centering in San Francisco, Mr. Beck took his entire company to the Golden Gate city to produce the exteriors.

Fox's Coast Studios at Work on New Films

THE William Fox headquarters in New York reports that its West Coast division is functioning at maximum capacity. Emmett J. Flynn is at work on a new special, due for release in the fall, which promises to be as fine a piece of staging as his "Connecticut Yankee." Clyde Cook has just completed, under Jack Blystone's direction, another Fox comedy, titled "The Guide," which will be released late in May. The day after completing "The Guide," Mr. Cook started on a new "frolic," Mr. Blystone being retained to direct Cook in the new subject also.

Edna Murphy and Johnnie Walker are hard at work on a co-starring vehicle, "Live Wires," under the direction of Edward Sedgwick. Tom Mix, Eileen Percy, William Russell, Shirley Mason and Buck Jones are also reported to be busy on new productions destined for release by William Fox.

Barrymore Completes "Boomerang Bill"

Photographing of "Boomerang Bill," a Cosmopolitan production, has been completed at International Film Studios; and the director, Tom Terriss, is now engaged upon cutting the production. "Boomerang Bill," in which Lionel Barrymore plays the title role, was adapted by Doty Hobart from a story by Jack Boyle, author of the "Boston Blackie" stories. It is a tale of the underworld and of the great sacrifice made by a notorious crook for the girl he loves. Marguerite Marsh plays the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Barrymore. Several of the scenes were taken in New York's Chinatown.

Rex Ingram at Work on Balzac Story

Rex Ingram is at work on a new picture for Metro. It is titled "The Conquering Power," and is an adaptation of the Balzac story. Members of the new cast already selected include Alice Terry, Rudolph Valentino, Edward Connelly, Bridgetta Clark, Cleo Madison, Noble Johnson and Mark Fenton. With the exception of Miss Madison, every member of this company played an important part in "The Four Horsemen." Miss Terry and Mr. Valentino will enact the leading roles. "The Conquering Power" has been prepared for the screen by June Mathis.

Famous Authors on Lasky Staff

Sixteen Prominent Writers Signed in One Year

A STATEMENT issued during the week from the headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York calls attention to the fact that in one year Paramount has signed sixteen prominent authors to write directly for the screen. Paramount officials, says the statement, are taking particular pride in the fulfillment of vice-president Jesse Lasky's announcement made a year ago to the effect that a number of prominent authors had been engaged to write original stories for Paramount pictures in cooperation with directors and scenario-writers. The Paramount statement continues in part as follows:

"In the year that has elapsed since this announcement Mr. Lasky has entered into arrangements with these sixteen world-famous writers: Arnold Bennett, Joseph Conrad, Sir James M. Barrie, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Avery Hopwood, Robert Hichens, Henry Arthur Jones, Cosmo Hamilton, Harvey J. O'Higgins, Edward Sheldon, Samuel Merwin, Dr. J. A. B. Scherer, Sir Gilbert Parker, Elinor Glyn, W. Somerset Maugham, Thompson Buchanan, Rita Weiman and George Pattullo. These are in addition to a thoroughly trained staff of writers including Jeanie Macpherson, Olga Printzlau, Byron Morgan, Elmer Harris, Frank Condon, and others who are working in Paramount's studios.

"The first of the 'famous authors-famous directors' pictures, 'The Lost Romance,' is now playing an extended engagement at the Criterion theatre, New York. It was written by Edward Knoblock, at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. Mr. Knoblock working in collaboration with the director, William deMille, and the scenario writer, Olga Printzlau.

"Elinor Glyn's first picture has just been completed. It is 'The Great Moment,' and has Gloria Swanson as its star. In writing the original story for this picture, Mrs. Glyn worked with the director, Sam Woods, and the scenarist, Monte Katterjohn. 'The Great Moment' will be released July 24.

"Sir Gilbert Parker, working with director George H. Melford, wrote 'A Wise Fool,' which is to be released late in June.

"Another of Edward Knoblock's stories, 'Appearances,' has just been produced in Paramount's London studio under the direction of Donal Crisp. It will be released June 12.

"Rita Weiman is now working with William deMille on story she wrote originally for Paramount.

"W. Somerset Maugham has just finished writing 'The Ordeal,' an original story in which Betty Compson will star.

"Edward Sheldon has written an original story, as yet untitled, which will be used as a starring picture for Thomas Meighan.

"Following visits to Paramount's London studio, and after having seen 'Sentimental Tommy,' Sir James M. Barrie has invited John S. Robertson, who directed the picture, and Josephine Lovett, who wrote the continuity, to London to confer on the scenario for 'Peter Pan,' Barrie's masterpiece. The scenario will be written in London in collaboration with Barrie.

"Henry Arthur Jones, following his conferences with Mr. Lasky in London, has been in America studying screen technique at the Long Island studio and writing originals. One of Mr. Jones' plays, 'The Call of Youth,' already has been produced in the London studio, and Ethel Clayton has just finished another, 'Beyond'—written by Mr. Jones.

"Since his conferences with Mr. Lasky, Arnold Bennett has been a regular visitor at Paramount's London studio. He already is represented in Paramount's latest releases in 'Sacred and Profane Love,' a screen production of his play starring Elsie Ferguson.

"E. Phillips Oppenheim has already seen one of his stories, 'The Mystery Road,' produced in London under the direction of Paul Powell, and his latest novel. 'The Great Impersonation,' is being produced now in the Lasky studio by George H. Melford.

"Avery Hopwood has made arrangements for writing a number of originals for Paramount, and Harvey J. O'Higgins, Thompson Buchanan and Samuel Merwin are now at the Lasky studio."

Laemmle Plans More Comedies

AFTER taking stock of the short feature situation as presented in the reports of last year and having the constantly increasing demand for Century Comedies as a criterion to guide him, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, has decided that next year's plans shall include an unusual number of single and two-reel comedies. In addition to the single reel Star comedies which Ward Hayes has been turning out for the past few months and which will be continued, Mr. Laemmle announces several new companies of two-reel proportions. Ben Cohen has been engaged to write the scripts for Hayes and his company which includes Billy Bletcher, Eddy Barry, Helen Darling, Dotty Wolbert, Gertrude Olmstead and Joey McCreery.

It is the intention to add another two-reel comedy release a week to the program each week. The Centuries will continue as heretofore, one two-reel release each week featuring in rotation Harry Sweet, Charles Dorety and Brownie, the Century Wonder Dog. The demand for Centuries has never been so great, it is said, and it is this demand that has induced Mr. Laemmle to organize three more units in another two-reel brand. One of these is the Joe Martin comedies which will be directed by Harry Burns, assisted by A. C. (Curley) Stecker, Joe's trainer. Other talent for these will be engaged as needed.

The second company will feature Lee Moran, of the former Lyons-Moran combination. It was extremely difficult to find proper material for the older combination. Moran will have an opportunity now to show to much greater advantage his gift for comedy and a much wider selection of vehicles. That he shall not lack for these, Mr. Thalberg, just before he left Universal City for his vacation, signed H. C. Witwer, one of the best known writers of comedy fiction, to write exclusively for him. He also engaged Jack Nelson to direct him. Nelson was responsible for five of Douglas McLean's comedy dramas and he is no stranger to the Universal City lot. Much of his early experience in screen action was obtained there. Eugene De Rue will be assistant, and Vincent Bryan, who has served in the same capacity for Charlie Chaplin, and Harold Lloyd will be "gag man." The first Moran comedy will be "Robinson's Trousseau," a recent Witwer story, published in the American Magazine.

The third company will be directed by Allan Curtis, another former Universal comedy director. The star or stars of this company have not been chosen as yet but Mr. Thalberg has several in mind and the decision will be made while he is in New York. Tom Gibson will write the stories.

Educational Week Big Success

Great Victory Scored in the Amount of Business Done

A STATEMENT issued during the week by Educational Films headquarters in New York declares that incomplete reports from its exchanges all over the country and in Canada indicate that practically every print available from the 12,000 reels of film totalling 12,000,000 feet, released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., since June 1, 1920, was pressed into service during Educational Pictures Week, May 1 to May 7, and the only regret was that more prints were not to be had.

The statement also declares that indications are that Educational increased the number of its theatre accounts approximately 41 per cent during the week, with a much greater percentage of increase in cash collections, which is reported at Educational headquarters to exceed 100 per cent.

The great diversity of subjects to be drawn upon in Educational's products is one of the chief causes to which the remarkable success of the week is ascribed. This made it possible for many theatres in various parts of the country to run Educational products 100 per cent during the week, while others ran them almost exclusively. A telegram from the Seattle branch says that in that district alone 51 theatres, most of them first run houses, ran Educational pictures exclusively while 18 first run theatres gave 75 per cent of the week's program to Educational products. Thirteen of the theatres playing nothing but Educational pictures were in the city of Seattle.

Typical of the reports of success that are being received in Educational's New York offices are the following:

New York—"Cash collections increased 132 per cent."

Boston—"Represented in every key city in the territory by at least one two-reel Comedy, in addition to Kinograms and Scenic Reels."

Dallas, Texas—"Have used every available print. Could have made more with additional prints."

Milwaukee—"Education Week in this territory was very successful."

Seattle—"Thirteen theatres in Seattle alone running Educational product 100 per cent."

Denver—"Collections during Educational Pictures Week 100 per cent over average weekly collections."

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., in giving out the reports from the districts, said:

"As a great many of our branches are located on the West Coast and far South, since we have a branch in every key city on the North American Continent, in addition to our European branches, it is difficult to secure complete analytical returns rapidly.

"Our controller's reports, however, would indicate from the cash collections made as a result of Educational Week, that practically every one of our 12,000 prints released since June 1, 1920, was working during the week.

"The great increase in the number of theatre accounts is especially gratifying. Every branch has increased the number of these accounts from 25 to 41 per cent, in addition to most of the accounts playing additional Educational products.

"There is every reason, judging from the reports from the heads of the various departments, to believe that the net results of Educational Pictures Week has been:

"First, to increase the number of theatre accounts about 41 per cent.

"Second, cash collection—internationally—showing an increase of approximately 105 per cent during the week over the aggregate average for the ten weeks prior to Educational Week."

The New York district had one of the best reports for increase in the number of shows during the week. There were 938 shows in 400 theatres in this district, an increase of 39 per cent in shows over the weekly average for ten weeks past. Cash collections, however, were far out of proportion to this increase. The weekly average for ten weeks was exceeded by 132 per cent.

Eleven first run theatres in the city of Boston and vicinity ran Educational products, according to the report for the Boston district. Educational Pictures also were in three first run houses in Providence; three in Lawrence; three in Lynn; five in Lowell; one in Cambridge; two in Haverhill; two in Manchester, N. H.; two in Portland, Me.; three in Springfield, Mass.; three in Worcester; two in Bangor, Me. All are first run theatres in key cities. Practically every print in the Boston exchange was working, with every circuit in New England playing Educational products. Fifty-two new accounts were reported, with cash collections a fraction over 60 per cent in excess of the weekly average for the preceding ten weeks.

In the Chicago district 473 theatres, including 98 new accounts, played Educational Pictures. Thirteen new accounts were added by the Des Moines branch. Sixty were reported from the Kansas City (Mo.) district with a total of 96 theatres playing.

A last minute telegram from Toronto, giving reports from Educational's Canadian branches, except Vancouver, said there had been an increase of 65 per cent in Educational's products played and cash collections over the ten weeks average. Every available print in the five Canadian offices reporting was in use. The Vancouver report is expected to send still higher the increase in shows and cash collections.

Hawley Film Announced

Realart Puts "A Kiss in Time" on May List; T. Roy Barnes in Support

REALART announces for May release "A Kiss in Time," starring Wanda Hawley. The story was written by Royal Brown, and its screen version is declared by Realart to contain "all the elements of a good comedy and a good many of a virile drama." The story originally appeared in McClure's Magazine and was adapted for the screen by Douglas Doty. Thomas Heffron directed the production with the supervision of Elmer Harris, who also supplied the humorous subtitles. Playing opposite Miss Hawley is T. Roy Barnes. Walter Hiers is also cast in an important part.

The story concerns the romance of a noted illustrator, Sheila Athlone, who is more or less engaged to Robert Codman Ames. Robert isn't quite Sheila's ideal of a genuine specimen of the male species, and when the real man squaring with her specifications comes along and beckons her to follow him into the land of adventure, Sheila is on her toes. It transpires that he is the author of a story which the fair Sheila has refused to illustrate, protesting that it is absurd to think of a girl meeting, loving and kissing a man in the space of four hours. When Brian Moore learns from his publishers that she has turned down his assignment, his own Irish dander is aroused. Hence the plot! He determines to prove the feasibility of the story to her, and loses no time.

Now Robert has smelled a mouse and puts his clerk, Bertie Ballast on the trail. Bertie is a student of a correspondence school of detecting and starts right in to detect.

Brian Moore is no slouch when it comes to furnishing adventure, and he and Sheila lead Robert, Bertie and his cohorts a merry chase that involves stolen taxis, pilfered flivvers, hair-breadth escapes and all the fixin's of a rip-roaring comedy.

N. Y. Rialto Books Bebe Daniel's Picture

During the week of May 22, the Rialto theatre will show Realart's latest Bebe Daniels' picture, "Two Weeks with Pay." The film version of the popular story by Nina Wilcox Putnam was written by Alice Eyton from the original which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Jack Mulhall, Walter Hires, Polly Moran, James Mason, George Periolat and Frances Raymond appear in support of Miss Daniels under the direction of Maurice Campbell.

Reginald Barker Completes Casting

DIRECTOR REGINALD BARKER and Clifford Robertson, Goldwyn casting director, have completed the cast for Mr. Barker's next production, "The Poverty of of Riches," an original screen story by Leroy Scott. The full cast includes Richard Dix, Leatrice Joy, John Bowers, Louise Lovely, Irene Rich, DeWitt C. Jennings, David Winter, Roy Laidlaw, John Cossar, Mary Jane Irving and Frankie Lee. Active work on photographers is now in progress.

Will Rogers is hard at work, under the direction of Clarence Badger, making the picturization of Edward E. Kidder's comedy, "A Poor Relation." Director Frank Lloyd is working on Katherine Newlin Burt's original photoplay, "The Man from Lost River," with continuity by W. S. Hart's former director, Lambert Hillyer. House Peters has been signed for an important role.

Stage Big Parade for "Forbidden Fruit"

The baseball season at Scottsbluff, Neb., was ushered in April 27 by a Paramount-"Reds" parade. The opening game of the season is carnival time, and a half-holiday was declared by the Mayor so that the town could witness the game with Casper of the Midwest League.

Manager Ostenberg of the Orpheum Theatre booked "Forbidden Fruit," and Fred V. Greene Jr., Paramount exploiter, arranged the tieup with the team officials. The parade before the game consisted of the team, city officials, and a Paramount float bearing a tableau of Adam and Eve, posing beneath a tree of forbidden fruit.

During the game, girls, carrying "Forbidden Fruit" banners moved through the grand stand distributing apples wrapped in tissue paper upon which was printed the date and place of the run of the picture.

Rollin Sturgeon Signed by Famous Players

Rollin Sturgeon, whose contract with Universal Film Company ends in June, has placed his name to a Famous - Players Lasky contract and is to go East shortly to direct the making of features at the Eastern studio.

Mr. Sturgeon has been directing on the Coast for the past eight years, he having come West first as director and manager of production for Vitagraph for whom he directed more than three years. Since that time he has been identified with Lasky and Universal.

"Skirts" the Heaviest Booked Fox Comedy

The William Fox headquarters in New York reports that its five-reel comedy, "Skirts," has already been booked in more theatres than any other comedy subject bearing the Fox imprint.

Christie Finishes "Let Me Explain"

"Let Me Explain," a typical Christie farce comedy, has just been completed for an early release through Educational Exchanges, to follow the Christie comedy "sneakers." The new picture, which is the twenty-third of the Christie two-reel comedies made for Educational was directed by Scott Sidney, who directed "Mr. Fatima," "Nobody's Wife," and 'Red Hot Love," recent Christie successes.

Viora Daniel and Earl Rodney head the cast, but their work is scarcely more important than that of Josephine Hill, William Sloan and Donald Edwards. The story was written by Walter Graham of the Christie scenario staff.

Picture Influence Defended by Critic

Dudley Glass, a prominent Georgia dramatic critic, pays a high tribute to the motion picture in an article rising out of the now famous Edison questionnaire. He calls the screen a salient factor in the education of the nation's youth. He states that while the youngster may go to see Norma Talmadge, there is always an educational aspect to the program which sticks in the memory.

Mr. Glass also cites specifically the First National release, "Passion," saying that it gives the children an excellent idea of the costumes and customs of the French revolution period.

Goldwyn Closes More Foreign Contracts

J. H. Hoffberg of Goldwyn's foreign sales department recently announced the closing of two more big contracts, this time in Japan, Cuba and Porto Rico, calling for the distribution of Goldwyn's fourth year product in these countries. This immediately follows the announcement of Goldwyn's new contract in Mexico, covering in addition to the fourth year pictures, the first series of Booth Tarkington's two-reel "Edgar" comedies.

Goldwyn Sales Managers Meet

THE Goldwyn Sales Convention was held at the studios at Culver City, Calif., the week of May 8th, under the most favorable auspices. Plans which were outlined at the meeting and the enthusiasm which the salesmen showed for the fall release augur well for the coming sales campaign, declares a statement from the Goldwyn headquarters.

The party, which consisted of Alfred Weiss, vice-president of the Distributing Corporation; A. S. Aronson, vice-president and general sales manager; Eric Schay, assistant treasurer; Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity, and managers of the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges, arrived in Los Angeles in two special cars over the Salt Lake route on Sunday, May 7th. They were met at the station by F. J. Godsol, chairman of the board of directors, Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production; and members of the studio operating staff. They were then transported by auto to the Alexandria Hotel, which was the headquarters during the week.

During the convention, the delegates previewed the following pictures:

New Goldwyn Films Are Previewed at Meeting

"The Invisible Power," a Frank Lloyd Production of an original story by Charles Kenyon, with an all-star cast, including House Peters, Irene Rich, Dewitt C. Jennings and Sydney Ainsworth.

"Dangerous Curve Ahead," story written directly for the screen by Rupert Hughes, and directed by E. Mason Hopper, with Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix in the leading roles.

"The Old Nest," a Reginald Barker Production of a Rupert Hughes story, which the author himself adapted from one of his novels. This picture contains 21 principals, nearly all of whom are well-known to the public, among them being Mary Alden, Cullen Landis, Helen Chadwick, Molly Malone, Richard Tucker, Johnny Jones, Nick Cogley, Louis Lovely and Lucille Ricksen.

"Ace of Hearts," an original story for the screen by Gouverneur Morris, directed by Wallace Worsley, with an all-start cast headed by Leatrice Joy, John Bowers and Lon Chaney.

"Doubling for Romeo," the most unusual starring vehicle in which Will Rogers has appeared. It is from an original story by Elmer L. Rice and is directed by Clarence Bodger.

"The Grim Comedian," a Frank Lloyd Production of Rita Weiman's story, with an all-star cast including Phoebe Hunt, Jack Holt, Gloria Hope and John Harron.

"The Night Rose" an original screen story by Leroy Scott, directed by Wallace Worsley, with an all-star cast including Leatrice Joy, Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Cullen Landis, Richard Tucker and Mary Warren.

"For Those We Love" and "Even As Eve," written by Perley Shehan, starring vehicles for Betty Compson, directed by Arthur Rosson and produced by the Betty Compson Pictures Corporation, which will be released by Goldwyn.

The program included sight-seeing trips to several of the Southern California resorts. A daily newspaper was published and distributed among the party. Addresses were made by Mr. Godsol, Mr. Lehr, Mr. Weiss and Mr. Aronson.

Big Chain Books "Wild Goose"

"THE WILD GOOSE," the Cosmopolitan production, which was given a pre-release showing at the Rialto theatre, New York, during the week of May 8, has been booked by all the Keith-Moss-Proctor theatres in Greater New York.

"The Wild Goose" is a screen adaptation of the well-known story by Gouverneur Morris, the famous American writer. The scenario was written by Donnah Darrell. Albert Capellani directed "The Wild Goose." Mary MacLaren takes the leading role, with Holmes E. Herbert opposite. Norman Kerry plays the heavy part. Rita Rogan, a five years old actress, takes an important part. Dorothy Bernard and Joseph Smiley play important parts.

The pre-release showing at the Rialto theatre, New York, of "The Wild Goose," inspired Arthur Brisbane, the internationally famous editor, to write an editorial entitled: "The Wild Goose—Goodness Pays." Cosmopolitan quotes the editorial as follows:

"To see a thing clearly and describe it simply is the highest literary art, according to a great authority.

"Try it some time on YOURSELF, and with a moving picture.

"Study some pictures, then sit down and see in how FEW words, how VIVIDLY and ACCURATELY, you can tell what it is that you have seen.

"In these days of much reading there are many that live comfortably simply because they are able to see more or less clearly and describe more or less simply and interestingly.

"The story about 'The Wild Goose' written by Gouverneur Morris, one of the best writers of the country, now made into a picture at the Rialto theatre, gives you an interesting chance to try on yourself the experiment of seeing and then DESCRIBING.

"'The Wild Goose,' gives a particularly good opportunity to judge your ability to SEE, REMEMBER and DESCRIBE. And incidentally it is a very GOOD PICTURE, and it tells with unusual power the old story that it pays to behave, and NEVER pays to do the other thing.

"A young artist marries. He goes away for a while to work. Another man comes along. The other man and the wife go away. A prosperous friend, more unselfish than usual, decides to bring about a reconciliation, and he does it. His method of killing the villain is more striking; you would not like to try it.

"The wild goose as you know is a peculiar goose in one respect. When the mate dies he or she never gets over it. The one left behind mopes and mourns, and comes back every year to look at the mildewed remains of the old nest, and by and by dies of grief.

"That's very sad, but on the whole, not such a bad thing for the wild goose. For when a wild goose marries, he knows it is for life, and he makes the best of it.

"Some 'movie critics' have said that 'The Wild Goose' tells a very old story. So it does. So does everything worth seeing, hearing or reading. Love, faithlessness, goodness, wickedness, hope and fear are all old.

"A play, a book, a sermon, can do three useful things, in fact four.

"First, make you THINK.

"Second, give you INFORMATION.

"Third, give you PLEASURE.

"Fourth, MAKE YOU BETTER.

"'The Wild Goose' is a GOOD sermon, and, judging by the news as we read it, it is a sermon that many Americans, male and female, need.

"There are in this country too many geese that lack the faithful domestic quality of the wild goose. They don't even wait for the partner to die, but hop out and build another nest, sometimes several of them in several flats, before the original nest really got started."

Educational to Release New Comedy Series

EDUCATIONAL announces the acquisition of a new brand of comedies, featuring Jimmie Adams. The new Adams series will be made by the Astra Film Co. for Educational releases. There will be eight releases a year, starting with the second series of Educational's issues for the release year 1921-1922. The present year ends June 30. Lloyd Hamilton, who has been working with Jimmie Adams in the Mermaid Comedies, will continue work on the Mermaid series under the supervision of Jack White.

"The screening of the first picture of the series," said E. W. Hammons, president of the distributing corporation, in discussing the acquisition of the Adams Comedies, "convinces us that if possible Jimmie Adams has done even finer work than he did in 'Nonsense,' 'High and Dry,' 'Holy Smoke' or 'Bang!' the successes in which he starred under our 1921 issue of Mermaid Comedies.

"We are especially well pleased with the results secured on the pictures released under our Mermaid brand in which Adams was featured. 'A Fresh Start,' which served to introduce this comedian to the theatre-going public, has been one of the most profitable, well commented upon comedies ever released by us. In fact, Jimmie Adams has been a sure-fire box office winner from the very start.

"A tentative cast of fine supporting talent has been gathered for Adams' new comedies. 'Chuck' Reisner has taken over the entire work of supervision and direction. In the first three pictures Jimmie Adams will have working with him Cliff Bowers, Lillian Biron, Mary Carlisle and Tom Kennedy. Roy Adams has been engaged as cameraman."

Governor Sproul Views "Four Horsemen"

Governor Sproul of Pennsylvania was the guest of honor at a special showing of "The Four Horsemen" Saturday night at the Union League Club in Philadelphia.

A special musical program similar to that followed in presenting the picture in New York was given in the exhibition at the Union League Club, including the specially written prologue by Dr. Frank Crane which serves as an introduction to the greatest drama on the silver sheet.

Gareth Hughes to Play Opposite Viola Dana

Gareth Hughes has been assigned to head of Viola Dana's supporting company for her three forthcoming special productions. This arrangement will postpone Hughes's own productions for Metro for several months to come, according to the Metro announcement just received. "Life's Darn Funny" is the title of the initial subject in which Viola Dana and Gareth Hughes appear in the leading roles. This picture is now completed. It was after the work of the two players in this picture was viewed that it was decided to assign Gareth Hughes to play opposite Viola Dana in her next three productions.

Ohio House Opens with "Scrambled Wives"

A neat tribute was paid Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and Marguerite Clark when Kenneth Sink, of the New Wayne theatre, Greenville, Ohio, selected her latest starring vehicle, "Scrambled Wives," as the attraction for the opening of his new playhouse. But First National not only secured the premier attraction in "Scrambled Wives," but followed it up with "Passion" and "The Kid," two of the Big Five. Miss Clark is reported to have scored a hit in "Scrambled Wives," playing to capacity crowds on the opening afternoon and night as well as on the two succeeding days.

Lesser and Gore Book Hodkinson Release

Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers, have booked Benj. B. Hampton's production, "The Dwelling Place Of Light" for a seven day showing at the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles. The leading roles are enacted by Robert McKim, Clarie Adams and King Baggot. Nigel de Bruiller, who has won recognition for his work in "The Four Horsemen," appears in one of the minor roles.

"The Copperhead" Billed for Decoration Day

PARAMOUNT reports that several of the largest first-run theatres in the country have booked the Paramount special, "The Copperhead," starring Lionel Barrymore, for the week of May 29, Decoration Day Week, for repeat engagements.

These bookings recall the big demand for this production for Memorial Day last year, when the requests exceeded the supply of prints by more than three to one. Anticipating a repetition of this demand this year, the company has ordered a number of new prints which will be available at all the exchanges for play dates throughout the week of the 29th.

Paramount Press Book on "Deception"

Paramount announces a comprehensive and elaborate press book on "Deception" which is now being distributed to exhibitors. The inside pages contain reproductions of special lobby display cards, heralds, newspaper illustrations and ad mats,

A screen version of David Belasco's famous play, "The Heart of Maryland," is scoring a great success at the Rialto.

This thrilling story of the struggle between the North and South is too well known to require repetition.

The production and cast are exceptionally good, and the picture is certainly one of the best that has been shown here.

Catherine Calvert, a remarkably handsome girl, presents a most picturesque and attractive appearance as the patriotic young Southerner, Maryland, and her performance is admirable throughout.

Crane Wilbur, who is very popular in this city, gives fresh proof of his histrionic excellence by the natural and manly manner in which he plays the hero. The remaining characters, down to the very smallest one, are in competent hands.

The fact that the picture was filmed in Maryland and is an accurate reproduction of the localities in which its story is laid imparts to it an extra charm.

Chicago Tribune Critic Lauds "Proxies"

Mae Tinee, motion picture editor of the "Chicago Tribune," finds "Proxies," a Cosmopolitan production, much to her liking. Miss Tinee leads her review of the picture by saying: "You're all going to like this picture. Of that I am sure."

Further on, the critic says:

"Now, this is one of those pictures that I mustn't tell you too much about. It has two or three surprises — good ones — that you mustn't know of. So, in closing brethren—and sisters—let's just say this:

"'Proxies' is good entertainment —well acted, photographed, directed, etc. It's one of those pictures you wouldn't think of leaving before it was ab-soloot-ly finished. For you gotta know how it's going to end—and you don't until it DOES end."

Rockett to Start Third Hodkinson Release

The Rockett Film Company are preparing to produce their third subject for Hodkinson and have leased space at the Louis B. Mayer studio. "Handle with Care," a Charles Belmont Davis story, published under the title of "All the Men Who Died for Her," is to be the vehicle. Phillip E. Rosen, late of Metro, is to direct, and an all-star cast has been selected. Grace Darmond will be the featured star supported by Landers Stevens, Harry Myers, William Courtleigh, William Austin, James Morrison and Ruth Miller. The continuity was written by Phillip J. Hern and the production will be made under the supervision of Will M. Ritchey.

New Maclyn Arbuckle Picture Announced

No sooner was word passed that the Maclyn Arbuckle feature, "Squire Phin," by Holman Day, was ready for release than the Producers Security Corporation announced that the second of the Arbuckle series would be a film version of George V. Hobart's well-known play, "Welcome To Our City."

The cast for the "Squire Phin" photoplay in addition to the star will include Mrs. Arbuckle, Gordon Russell, Bert Lindley, Ernest C. Joy, J. Edwin Brown, E. Gunnewein, Mrs. Woods and George Bauderer.

Society Bud to Appear in "Hurricane Hutch"

Society has been especially contributive of late in its offering of beauties to the screen. A new arrival from society's ranks is about to make her debut in the Charles Hutchison serial, "Hurricane Hutch," according to a report from the Pathe headquarters. Her name is Diana Deer, and she is said to come from one of the most prominent families in New York. Miss Deer is a Mt. St. Vincent graduate and also took a course in music in St. Cecilia's Academy in Rome. She has already achieved considerable notice for beauty and talent on the amateur dramatic stage.

Unite to Boost Zane Grey

Hodkinson Forces and Publishers Promote a Nation-Wide Campaign

ZANE GREY WEEK which was arranged as a tribute to Zane Grey by the Curtis Publishing Company, and by Harper Brothers and Grosset & Dunlap, who publish his books, is going to prove one of the greatest promotion plans ever devised for the popularizing of any individual author's work in book and picture form, declares a statement from the W. W. Hodkinson headquarters. The entire resources of the three organizations named above are actively engaged in putting this "stunt" across, according to the Hodkinson statement. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which releases the picturizations of Zane Grey's novels, is also bending every effort to make the event a memorable one.

The results of the intensive work which is being done are making themselves felt already, for from Los Angeles to the Atlantic Coast line, Hodkinson representatives report a heavy demand for all of Zane Grey's pictures and particularly for "The Man Of The Forest," a forthcoming Benj. B. Hampton Production, which will be released during Zane Grey Week.

The cast is headed by Claire Adams, Robert McKim and Carl Gantwort. The story is said to be particularly engrossing, filled to the brim with thrills and with many surprising novelties embodied in it.

Present indications are that one hundred of the finest theatres of the land will show "The Man Of The Forest" during Zane Grey Week, declares the Hodkinson statement.

Big Contract for Hodkinson

Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles, in Deal for First-Run Engagements

MILLER'S THEATRE of Los Angeles has contracted for the first showing in the United States of three Hodkinson releases: "A Certain Rich Man," "The Light in the Clearing" and "Rip Van Winkle," each of which will be put on for an indefinite run.

"A Certain Rich Man" is a Benj. B. Hampton production adapted to the screen from William Allen White's novel. It is claimed for this picture by Hodkinson that it will far exceed in popularity and in box office appeal any picture that has been given to the screen thus far. Benj. B. Hampton and his associates are emphatic in stating that it represents their greatest work.

T. Hayes Hunter's "The Light in the Clearing" was written by Irving Bacheller. Reports from the West Coast indicate that the director has caught the spirit of the author's work and transmitted it, living and breathing, to the silver sheet.

"Rip Van Winkle," a Ward Lascelle Production, is now under course of construction. It is Mr. Lascelle's first independent production for Hodkinson release and he has promised to create a picture which will not only meet with every Hodkinson requirement but will exceed them. It is a matter of interest to note that the leading role in the screen production will be played by Thomas Jefferson, son of the late lamented artist who created the character on the legitimate stage.

"Over the Phone" Alice Lake's New Vehicle

Alice Lake's new starring vehicle for Metro is titled "Over the Phone." The story was written specially for Miss Lake by Arthur Somers Roche. Wesley Ruggles is the director, and Edward Lowe, Jr., wrote the continuity for Mr. Roche's story.

Striking Design to Aid in Exploiting Film

Universal's exploitation department has worked out an extensive exploitation campaign for "Reputation," starring Priscilla Dean. The key-design for all the paper to be issued, including the posters, heralds, throw-aways, advertising cuts, slides and lobby display photos, is a striking picture of Priscilla Dean in an attitude of fright. This pose is made to serve as the focusing point in all the exploitation for the picture.

Corinne Griffith on a New Vitagraph Film

Corinne Griffith has begun work on a new Vitagraph production in which Catherine Calvert is a featured member of the cast. It is called "The Payment" and is an adaptation of a story by Harrison Goadby. William B. Courtney wrote the motion picture scenario and the production is being filmed under the direction of Webster Campbell. Others in the cast include Harry C. Browne, who plays opposite Miss Griffith, William Parks, Jr., and Alice Concord.

Two Paramounts Win Place in Honor List

Two of the four pictures reviewed in the April "Exceptional Photoplays" bulletin issued by the National Board of Review are Paramount pictures. These are "The City of Silent Men," in which Thomas Meighan is starred, and the European production, "Deception," which is now enjoying a record-breaking extended run at the New York Rivoli.

Donald Crisp Selects New Story

Word comes from the London Studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., to the effect that Donald Crisp, who has just finished the production of Cosmo Hamilton's "The Princess of New York," will next produce a screen version of Ian MacLaren's "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush." Margaret Turnbull has been working for some time on the scenario and the script is nearly completed.

"Affairs of Anatol" Has Clever Subtitles

Subtitles of epigrammatic brilliance mark "The Affairs of Anatol," the new Cecil B. DeMille production to be released by Paramount, it is claimed. Jeanie Macpherson, author of the story, is responsible for the scintillating phraseology and powerful thought behind the titles.

Mix at His Best in "A Ridin' Romeo"

Fox officials who have previewed Tom Mix's latest production for William Fox, declare that in "A Ridin' Romeo" Mix "will be seen at his very best." It is described to be a "whirlwind Western picture of love and adventure." George E. Marshall directed the picture for which Mix wrote the story.

BALTIMORE

Bernard Depkin, Jr., in connection with the opening of Dream street, entertained Ralph Graves and Charles Emmet Mack. Norman Clark and other newspaper critics also attended the dinner at the Emerson Hotel in honor of the visitors.

While E. V. Cupero has assumed charge of the orchestra of the new Century theatre, his old place at the New theatre has been taken by Benjamin Klasmer, heretofore a violinist with the New's orchestra.

Louis Schlichter, in celebration of the seventh anniversary of the Bridge theatre, arranged a special program, with souvenir fans to women patrons.

CLEVELAND

George W. Erdman has been appointed manager of the Cleveland exchange of Associated Producers. Mr. Erdmann steps into the place made vacant by H. A. Bandy. Mr. Bandy becomes division manager for Associated Producers, covering the Ohio, western Pennsylvania and eastern Indiana territory. Mr. Erdmann was division manager for Select Pictures Corporation until a recent illness which forced him to retire temporarily from active participation in the industry.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, and vice-president of Federated Features, together with Maurice Lebensberger, general manager of the Standard Film Service Company, were in New York last week, to attend the meeting of the officers of the Federated Film Exchanges.

Howard Reiff, of the Stork theatre, Lorain avenue, Cleveland, came into conflict with the music publishers last week, when they issued an injunction against him, restraining him from playing "Margie," published by Watterson, Berlin and Snyder.

"Better Movies" was the subject of discussion at a recent luncheon conference held at the Statler Hotel, under the auspices of the Cleveland Cinema Club, of which Mrs. Elmer G. Derr is president.

Harry Vail, of the Travelers Aid, said, "It is not a matter of censorship. It is a matter of educating the public. The moving picture men have their ears to the ground and want to give what the public wants."

William M. Gregory, of the Cleveland School of Education, said: "The work the Cinema Club has undertaken to control is as difficult to control as are the human emotions."

Mrs. Helen Green, of the County W. C. T. U., said, "The moving picture is the greatest educational medium of the day. We do not want to bring up a race of people believing that every home is a house of quarrels and that every home has a triangle problem."

E. Mandelbaum, president of First National Exhibitors' Association, representing the producers, said: "We want to do what is best for all of us. The distributors are willing to co-operate to this end."

Sam Bullock, secretary of the Exhibitor's League, representing the exhibitors, said: "Problems cannot be solved by isolated bodies of censors. Organizations for the betterment of films have nothing better to offer us as yet. You must have State organization under one head."

Several hundred prominent men and women, representing all the civic and social activities of the city were present at the meeting.

The reduced cost of living hit the movie fans here this week, when Loew's Euclid and Alhambra theatres announced a cut in admission prices. The new scale begins at 20c for all matinees except Sunday and holidays. Evening prices are 25c every day except Sunday when the price is 30c. This is the first reduction announced, but it is rumored that others are to follow.

Nothing has been done about "Passion." The injunction granted the Stillman Theatre Company against the Associated First National Company has not come up.

"A Child For Sale" opened a two-week engagement at the Opera House. J. M. Duskin, manager of the Fidelity Photoplay Corporation, which releases the picture, is in charge of the local engagement. At a dollar top, the show opened the beginning of last week to capacity house.

S. A. Gerson Film Exchange, 518 Film building, is the newest film firm to be added to the list of local independent exchanges. Gerson owned and ran the Buckeye Poster Rental for the past several years, so he brings considerable film experience to his new enterprise. The S. A. Gerson Film Exchange will handle only feature stuff.

H. Goldstein, owner and manager of the Diamond theatre, East Liverpool, Ohio, has taken over the Opera House at Millersberg, and is showing an exclusive Paramount program, including features and comedies.

CANADA

The Palace theatre, a new suburban moving picture house recently opened in Toronto by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, is now presenting vaudeville in addition to a picture programme, changes in the bill being made twice weekly. This theatre has been under the management of Charles Querrie. The Palace is situated in a rapidly growing district in the northeastern section of the city.

Oral D. Cloakey, who opened the new Allen theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, for Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, is back in Canada, having accepted an offer to manage the Lyceum theatre in Winnipeg, Man., which is controlled by Kenneth M. Leach, a prominent exhibitor of the Canadian west. The Lyceum theatre was recently overhauled and improved at a cost of $50,000. Cloakey is popular in Winnipeg, having managed the Walker theatre there for a number of years before he went to Vancouver, B. C., to open the new Allen theatre there. From Vancouver he went to Cleveland and now he is back in Winnipeg.

Mr. Leach opened the latest of his lengthy string of moving picture houses on May 5 when the new Rialto was formally opened with "The Greatest Love" as the attraction. Leach will also open the College theatre at Church and Main streets, Winnipeg, about June 1, building operations having rapidly reached the finishing mark.

O. J. Hallgrimson, formerly an exhibitor of Edmonton, Alberta, has been appointed manager of the Rialto theatre, one of Winipeg's new moving picture palaces.

Pete Egan, until recently associated with Manager Jack Ward, of the Allen's Province theatre, Winnipeg, has been appointed manager of the Gaiety theatre, Winnipeg, another of the Allen houses.

Robert Scott, formerly manager of the Fox exchange at Vancouver, B. C., has taken over the Empire and Lonedale theatres. North Vancouver, from Wiley Pettis, and has settled down as an exhibitor.

Fred W. Crosbie, Winnipeg manager of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, has resigned and plans to open an independent exchange in Winnipeg.

INDIANAPOLIS

Ground which had been gained by theatre owners of Huntington, Ind., in their fight to prevent rigid enforcement of the Sunday closing law was lost when Judge N. G. Hunter in Wabash County Circuit Court dissolved a temporary restraining order which had prohibited the authorities of Huntington from taking any action toward closing the theatres. The case was venued to Wabash from Huntington.

The restraining order was peculiar in that it prohibited the authorities from stopping Sunday performances, but did not forbid them to prosecute for violation of the blue law.

The suit for injunction was brought by T. Guy Perfect, owner of two theatres in Huntington. The scrap between Perfect, other theatre managers and the city authorities has been in progress since January.

Abraham Wallerstein, Jacob Wallerstein, Nathaniel Bernstein, M. J. Kenefick and John G. Yeagley are directors of the Michigan City Theatre Corporation, which was incorporated with $250,000 capital and stated purpose to operate opera houses and motion picture theatres.

The Dale Loomis Amusement Company, of Peru, Ind., has incorporated with $120,000 capital and S. D. Loomis, J. L. Murden, Charles Clifton and C. Y. Andrews as directors.

DETROIT

John H. Kunsky has reduced the admission scale at his Columbia theatre to 20 and 30 cents and at the Linwood-LaSalle to 20 cents. He recently re-reduced prices at the Liberty and Strand theatres.

The Majestic theatre has entered on its summer schedule, eliminating matinees from Monday to Friday inclusive.

Mason S. Bailey, known as "Bill" Bailey, died at his home in Ann Arbor last week and was buried in Woodmere cemetery, here. Mr. Bailey was connected for years with many film exchanges and theatre enterprises. He has

A stirring tale of one of the most interesting periods of American history is told in "The Heart of Maryland," the picture version of David Belasco's famous stage success, at the Rialto Theatre.

The play is filled with action, suspense and dramatic situations, while at the same time there is a vein of humor, which relieves the more tense situations. The film shows all of the big scenes, including the bell tower spectacular, where Maryland clings to the clapper of a swinging bell to prevent it ringing and giving the alarm of her lover's escape.

The settings for the play are particularly interesting, and ring true. Windy Bill Manor, where Aaron Burr was concealed; the Briars, the famous mansion used as General Grant's headquarters during the Civil War, and other historic spots were used in the picture.

The Problem of Pleasing the Largest Number of People

That exhibitor is successful who knows how to please the largest number of persons in his audience.

There is always a small minority which is interested in things which are "over the heads" of most persons. That minority will read serious essays, philosophy and study the human mind. But you can't talk to Tom, Dick and Harry of such things. When it comes to the "high-brow stuff" they pass it up. They prefer an exciting story of romance and adventure. They want thrills.

They want action. And they want lots of it.

The same goes for pictures. Show a feature which is a problem play and a few will tell you that it is great. But most of your crowd are going to yawn their way out.

Put on a Pathe serial and you'll have them coming men, women, children, old and young Most persons lead rather dull lives. They hunger for contrast. Pathe serials give it to them. And when you hear the whoops of joy you will know that the problem of pleasing the largest number of persons is not so hard after all,—if you show Pathe serials!

One Hundred Play Days in 24 Hours

WITHIN twenty-four hours after it was announced that Ivan Abramson's picture, "Mother Eternal," would be booked for immediate release more than 100 play days were entered, according to word received from authentic sources.

The picture has been booked for a week's run at the United States Theatre in Paterson, N. J., and at the Star theatre in New York City. Many New York, Brooklyn and New Jersey houses are showing it for three and four days. Many exhibitors are reported to be busy finding new publicity stunts for the picture.

Foreign Sales Reported by Arrow Film

The Foreign Export Department of the Arrow Film Corp., announces that J. Caba, of Havana, Cuba, has closed a deal with Arrow that gives him that company's entire product for 1921 for distribution. This means fifty-two comedies as well as all comedies and western.

L. H. Allen, of New York, bought the Jack Hoxie serial, "Thunderbolt Jack," for distribution in Spain, Portugal and Brazil. He also closed with Arrow for the New Ben Wilson serial, "The Blue Fox," starring Ann Little, for Mexico, Central America, Panama, Porto Rico, San Domingo, Hayti, the Argentine, Brazil, Chilli, Bolivia, Peru, Spain and Portugal.

The Sidney Garrett Productions bought five features for distribution in the Argentine, Paraguay, Uruguay, Chili, Bolivia and Peru.

Another big buy on the Ann Little serial, "The Blue Fox," was that of J. Pearson & Co., of Bombay, India. They have secured this new serial for India, Burmah, Ceylon, China, Japan, Dutch East Indies, The Strait Settlements and the Philippine Islands.

"Right of Way" Passed by Ohio Censor Board

Word came to the Producers Security Corporation recently that the Thomas Mott Osborne production, "The Right Way," had passed the Ohio State Board of Censorship without a dissenting vote from any member. So the picture in its entirety will have its initial Ohio showing in the Pantheon theatre, Toledo, starting May 22.

"The Right Way" is for the most part a prison picture and has scenes of life behind the walls.

Callahan Building Studio

New Building in Atlantic City is Started by Comedy Producer

IT was then that Mr. Callahan decided that it would be more advantageous to build a studio for himself. After a search a suitable location was found in Atlantic City at Atlantic and Richmond avenues. The cost of the land was said to be $70,000, and it is reported that twenty-four hours after the purchase the ground was broken.

The new building will be of steel frame construction. The stage will be 80 feet wide by 118 feet long, with a height of 35 feet. There will not be a pillar or obstruction of any kind on the stage, which will be erected on concrete piers based on spiles driven 30 feet through the beach sand to the underlying rock to minimize vibration.

The stage will be equipped with the latest lighting equipment. There will also be a scene carpenters' shop and paint frame in a building adjoining the stage, where Mr. Callahan will construct and paint all his interior sets and properties.

The contractors have agreed to have the building ready for Mr. Callahan's occupancy in four weeks from the day construction was begun, which will be Tuesday, June 14th.

In the meantime Mr. Callahan and his company will come to New York for four weeks and make the interiors for three productions in a New York studio, and later finish the exteriors in Atlantic City.

Mr. Callahan has sent to Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, who will direct the release, prints of three two-reel comedies—"Jimmy's Last Night Out," "The Stowaway," and one that has not yet been given its name. These have been placed in the hands of Tom Bret, who will edit them and write the titles. The first release, "Jimmy's Last Night Out," will be made Decoration Day.

New "Snapshot" Completed

First Issue for Federated Release Shows Many Noted Stars

THE first issue of Federated Screen Snapshots has been completed this week by its producers, Jack Cohn and Louis Lewyn, and after final editing by Mr. Cohn was turned over to Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., for release.

Plans are going forward at the Screen Snapshots offices to make this new series the greatest and most interesting single-reel release on the market; and to justify more than ever the description "the fan magazine of the screen" which has been accorded to it by exhibitors and audiences throughout the country.

As an example of what is to be expected of this series, there has been compiled for Issue No. 1 a collection of stars such as is seldom seen together in one-reel or on one program. Going the big-star issue containing Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin, which attracted wide attention, several steps better, the producers are offering in this new issue Mary Pickford, Max Linder, Lina Cavalieri, Lucien Muratore, May Allison, Doris May, and Wallace MacDonald, Jesse Lasky, Cecil De Mille, Dorothy Dalton, Fatty Arbuckle, Bebe Daniels, Monte Blue and Ben Turpin.

In addition to this, luminaries of equal note in the film world have been secured for the issues to follow, and film snapshots of them are being received every day from the Coast and from points East. It is announced that every big star, director, producer, and studio is to be included in the new Federated series, and in addition there will be many novelties, such as slow-motion, and other inventions and marks of progress in the film world.

N. Y. A. President Seen in "The Right Way"

When "The Right Way," the new Thomas Mott Osborne picture that the Producers' Security Corporation is handling for release, is shown on Broadway a theatre party of National Vaudeville Artists folks will foregather to see the president of that organization, Edward H. Davis play one of the leading male roles.

Kineto Review Shows Submarine Hunt

"Hunting the Sea Wolf," a Kineto Review, is the next release in the group of first thirteen Kineto Reviews which are being distributed by National Exchanges, Inc.

It is the complete story of the men in the United States Navy who tracked down the submarines.

"The Supreme Passion" Opens in Cleveland

ROBERT W. PRIEST'S much discussed production, "The Supreme Passion," had its initial presentation at the Euclid Avenue Opera House, Cleveland, Ohio, last Sunday afternoon and evening, where it was enthusiastically received by capacity audiences. This photoplay will be the attraction at Cleveland's famous theatre for one week.

First Fairfax Picture Finished Next Week

Marion Fairfax's initial production, "The Lying Truth," is now rapidly nearing completion and the last scene will be "shot" next week. The work of cutting and assembling this film will be handled by Miss Fairfax herself.

When the sample print is finished John Jasper, manager of Marion Fairfax Productions, will leave Los Angeles for New York to arrange for its distribution as well as the release of future pictures under this trade-mark. Mr. Jasper plans to arrive in Manhattan in about three weeks.

Boston Exchange Opens New Offices

The formal opening of the new offices and annex of the Eastern Feature Film Co., at 59 Church street and 19 Piedmont street, Boston, was held on May 10th.

Pat O'Malley gives Marjorie Daw a lesson in the Irish jig between scenes of "The Lying Truth," the first Marion Fairfax production, just completed

Pacific Film Starting Enlarged Program

Taking possession of the new $50,000 unit of its studios Monday morning, the Pacific Film Co. starts upon an ambitious program of production calling for fifty-two single reel comedies during the next twelve months. These are to be released under the White Cap banner, the George Ovey and Vernon Dent companies alternating weekly. As in the recent releases, Ovey will be supported by Arby Arly.

Dent will pursue the "boob" roles as in the past and will have playing opposite him Violet Joy. The new plant covers seventeen full city lots and is equipped with its own projection room and all mechanical shops required in making stage settings and handling the films from start to finish.

Greater Features Take Federated Franchises

Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle, has taken over the Federated franchise for the territory served by the Seattle and Salt Lake City offices of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., according to an announcement just made.

Lannon-Sheffield Exchanges have taken over the Federated franchise for the territory served by the Denver office. Jack Lannon is president, and J. T. Sheffield is secretary-treasurer and general manager of the above offices.

Hallroom Comedies in Advance of Schedule

A definite production scheduled, calling for the completion of all pictures at least three weeks in advance of the date on which they are to be turned over to Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., for release, has been established by Harry Cohn at the West Coast production centre of Hallroom Boys Comedies—the two-reelers featuring Sid Smith.

According to word that has just come from Mr. Cohn, production has been systematized so far as is possible, with allowances being made for weather conditions, disappointments of various kinds, and all the accidents that are apt to happen in the making of a picture.

Brisk Trading Reported In Mexican Territory

Renewed activity in the foreign film market is disclosed this week in the text of a statement forwarded to the trade press by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, well-known exporters, specializing in the distribution of American-made films in foreign territories.

Under the supervision of Gus Schlesinger, Manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales, a number of important territorial contracts have been closed. Mexico, which constitutes one of the poorest motion picture markets in the vast Latin-American territory has just reopened its trade relations with the United States and as a result a large portion of Inter-Ocean product has been disposed of for that territory.

Kineto Series Filled Out

"Water Babies" and Scenic Make Up First Series to Be Released

TWO forthcoming Kineto Reviews which will complete the first series for national distribution are "Water Babies" and "Beauty Spots In the United States and Canada." The latter is described as a scenic of unusual charm, and the former as an animal study that almost approaches a comedy, so refreshing are its views of creatures that take kindly to the water.

In "Beauty Spots of the United States and Canada" there is mixed a great deal of historic lore with photographic beauty. Seeing "Magnolia - on - the - Ashley" gardens in South Carolina, famed since 1671, one sees also prominent members of the family which have owned that garden in all the years since then and the audience gathers a good deal of the history that has affected that region since its settlement hundreds of years ago. This Kineto Review divides its attention with the beauty of our own South and that of Nova Scotia in the North; a real Acadian land, "The Land of Evangeline."

"Water-Babies" appeals to a much different interest. It contrasts the elephant, the hippopotamus and the bears with the little folks among the animals. They all enjoy their bath and their enjoyment makes a mighty happy picture, it is reported.

Wholesome Films Praised

Federated Releases Commended for Their Clean Entertainment

AN unusual volume of booking is reported on "Penny of Top Hill Trail" and "Hearts and Masks," the two latest feature releases of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc. In addition to the financial success assured these productions, communications are being received daily from exhibitors who have viewed the pictures, commenting favorably on the clean, wholesome atmosphere which pervades each of the films.

The tenor of these messages of praise is that patrons, in the large majority, would rather see clean pictures which are still able to hold their interest by the ingenuity or heart appeal of the plot, the excellence of the acting and the general artistic production, than pictures which depend largely on questionable or sex situations. Romance and adventure of a kind to which every member of the family can go, and which need have no fear of censorship, is what is wanted now, according to the exhibitors.

Both "Penny of Top Hill Traill" and "Hearts and Masks" fulfill these requirements, the exhibitors report, and they are booking them heavily, accordingly. Bessie Love is starring in the former, and the latter has an all-star cast, including Elinor Field, Francis McDonald and Lloyd Bacon, son of Franck Bacon of "Lightnin'" fame. Mystery, romance, action, are combined expertly in each.

Middle West Exchange Moves to New Offices

The Sterling Service and Amusement Co., of Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit, Joseph B. Diener, president and general manager, announces that they have moved into larger and more spacious quarters in the Film Exchange Building, Cleveland.

Camera Work Finished on Bacheller Story

ALL camera work on "The Light in the Clearing," by Irving Bacheller, the T. Hayes Hunter production for the Dial Film Company, was finished during the past week.

Mr. Hunter and his players —among whom Eugenie Besserer, George Hackathorne, Clara Horton, Eddie Sutherland and Frank Leigh have some of the principal parts— were delayed several weeks by bad weather in northern California, where they were shooting exteriors that completed the story, which has been in process of production for the past several months.

After resting a few days Mr. Hunter will return to the studio to supervise the cutting of this feature.

New Combine Purchase Melies Star Films

Leon Schlesinger of the Film Service Bureau and A. L. Feinman, now conducting a general advertising and publicity service, have joined hands in the formation of a partnership to exploit the series of Melies Star Films which were popular not so very long ago. Under the terms of a contract recently executed between Paul G. Melies and the factors in the new partnership, the Messrs. Schlesinger and Feinman have acquired by outright purchase, the rights to 150 negative subjects comprising a total of 65,000 feet of film.

Great Praise Accorded New Jungle Serial

No chapter drama produced recently has been accorded greater unanimity of praise than the super-animal production, "Miracles of the Jungle," according to a statement issued by the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., which will distribute the picture. "Miracles of the Jungle" was made at the Selig Studios for Warner Brothers.

Exhibitors, exchangemen and trade paper critics who have viewed the production alike have hailed it as a picture which will satisfy any audience, and which will, from the box-office viewpoint in addition, "go over big."

New Jack Hoxie Picture Released

The fifth of Arrow's Jack Hoxie series is ready for release. It is entitled "Cupid's Brand" and is one of those western stories which typically fit the abilities of Jack Hoxie.

Interesting to exhibitors will be the announcement in connection with the release of "Cupid's Brand" that it brings back to the screen the former well known and well liked favorite Mignon Anderson. Miss Anderson, before her temporary retirement, made herself very popular with the fans in Mutual and Universal products.

"Peggy Puts It Over" New Calhoun Feature

Alice Calhoun has begun a new Vitagraph production, to succeed "Closed Doors," recently completed and now nearing release. It is called "Peggy Puts It Over" and is based on an original story by G. Burr-Lynner, with the continuity by C. Graham Baker and Harry Dittmar. G. V. Seyffertitz, who directed Miss Calhoun in "Closed Doors," and in one of her earlier Vitagraph star productions, "Princess Jones," is in charge of the new production.

Included in the cast are Edwin Langford, who plays opposite the star; Leslie Stowe, Charles Mackay, Max Sunday, Dick Lee and Helen Lindroth. In addition there are a number of smaller roles and any number of small town types.

All-Star Cast in New Reelcraft Series

The "Hundinger" brand of comedies, which were announced recently as the latest addition to the short subject program of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, will have an all-star cast, which will include Johnny Haynes, Jimmy Rice, Dorothy Lee, Dorrit Kelton and others. Frank S. Mattison will supervise production of this unit, and Len Smith will be at the camera.

Howell Comedies to Be Released Shortly

National Exchanges, Inc., the new big distributing company, will announce shortly the release dates of the first of the Howell Comedies now being made by the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco. The first of the comedies have already been received from the Coast and more are expected shortly.

New Exchange Opened in St. Louis, Mo.

The New Era Film Co., of Chicago, of which C. S. Burlorn is manager, is opening a non-theatrical exchange in St. Louis, Mo., at 3405 Olive street.

Washington Exchange Aids Its Exhibitors

Super Film Attractions, the Washington, D. C., exchange, of which Sidney B. Lust is president and James B. Fitzgerald manager, are aiding their exhibitors in exploiting their pictures by allowing them the use of exploitation matter gratis after it has been used at the Leader theatre, which the exchange operates.

The exchange has an artist make a canvas drop each week a production is to be shown, and also have a fifteen foot canvas sign painted, which is stretched across the lobby of the theatre. Cutouts from three sheets are mounted on beaver board. This material is loaned to exhibitors for future use.

THE following sales on the independent market were reported during the week:

"For the Freedom of Ireland" (Creation Films of Chicago) to the Federated Film Exchanges of Baltimore, for Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and District of Columbia.

"For the Freedom of Ireland" to the Quality Film Corporation of Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

"The Invisible Web" (Fidelity Pictures Co.) to Zerner Film Company, for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Harry Dickson Starts Satevepost Comedies

The Harris Dickson Film Corporation has commenced making a series of two-reel comedies from the Saturday Evening Post stories that brought Dickson his first fame. Operations have been in progress at the Perry studios and the company has gone to Vicksburg, Miss., to complete the exterior scenes in their original locale.

The first comedy to be released is "The Custard Nine."

Foreign Sales Reported on Neal Hart Series

Salesmanager Belford, of Pinnacle Productions reports the sale of the Neal Hart series of five-reel features to Sidney Garret for South America, including Argentine, Paraguay, Uruguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

Talmadge Two Reelers Popular in South

Starting with the middle of March, bookings on the Norma Talmadge two-reel subjects being presented by Horizon Pictures, Inc., are being recorded at a rate which, according to A. M. Graham, promised well for the success of the series. Mr. Graham, as head of the Queen Features Service of Birmingham, Ala., has contracted for the entire set of fourteen Norma Talmadge pictures and releases the first at an early date, to be followed by one every two weeks.

Federated Trade Showing in Boston

ONE of the most successful trade showings ever held in New England took place on Tuesday evening, May 10th, when the Federated Film Exchange of Boston showed the Warner Brothers' newest wild animal serial, "Miracles of the Jungle."

General Manager Joseph L. Roth and Publicity Manager Ace Barry had been given instructions by President Samuel Grand to "go the limit" to make the affair a success, and as a result a huge screen and stage was erected in the grand ballroom of the Copley Plaza Hotel. Many film notables journeyed from New York to attend the affair.

Schools Help to Exploit "Deliverance"

The combined support of the board of education and the press was obtained in the successful publicity campaign used to exploit "Deliverance," starring Helen Keller, the deaf, blind and formerly dumb wonder woman, during its run at the Playhouse theatre, Chicago.

By special arrangements with the superintendent of schools, the deaf and dumb children in all the grammar schools were invited, through the newspapers, to attend the picture,

Reconstructed Pictures Do Big Business

The R. D. Lewis Film Company of Dallas report that they are doing an excellent business in the South on the twelve reconstructed American features known as the "Twin Six" series. In this territory, which covers Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and parts of Mississippi, Missouri, and Tennessee, these William Russell action pictures, the Mary Miles Minters and the J. P. McGowan Signals are booking rapidly. These five-reelers are not, strictly speaking, "re-issues," being new prints which have been thoroughly brought up to date with re-editing, new sub-titled, new art-titled and new music cues and new paper.

Jules Wolf and Freida Rubenstein Married

The marriage of Jules Wolf, manager of the Los Angeles Educational Film Exchange, and Miss Freida Rubenstein, who, for a number of years has been identified with the Sol Lesser enterprises as assistant to Mr. Lesser, was solemized Wednesday morning, May 18, at Bnai Brith Synagogue in Los Angeles in the presence of the immediate relatives. After a short honeymoon the couple will reside in Los Angeles.

Cast Is Assembled for New Rockett Film

The next Rockett Film Corporation Production for Hodkinson release will be "Handle with Care," the screen adaptation of an original Charles Belmont Davis story which appeared in "The Ladies' Home Journal." The cast will include Grace Darmond, W. Lander Stevens, William Courtleigh, Harry Myers, James Morrison, William Austin and Hugh Miller. Philip Rosen will direct.

New Technical Director for Pinnacle

C. E. Sprague, who served as technical director for Louis Gasnier in the production of "Kismet," has been engaged by Pinnacle Productions, Inc., to act as technical director for the latest picture starring Neal Hart.

P. B. Dana Resigns from Arrow Film Corp.

P. B. DANA, who for the past three years has been secretary and sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, has announced his resignation there to become vice-president and general manager of the J. J. Goodstein Enterprises, Inc., who control a chain of film exchanges and theatres throughout the country, with offices in Denver and Salt Lake City. He will assume charge of his new duties on June 1st and one of his first tasks will be to supervise the opening of a new exchange at Seattle, Wash.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

ANOTHER member of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, George Archainbaud, has joined the ranks of married men, Catherine Johnston having become Mrs. George Archainbaud, on Wednesday, May 18th.

Mr. Archainbaud is a most popular director, with a host of friends which he has acquired since first he came to America as an actor, sponsored by his step-father, Mr. Emile Chautard, eminent French director, also a member of M. P. D. A. It took only a few months for Mr. Archainbaud's natural executive ability to become evident, when he was assigned a picture to direct, and since then has been among the most successful of the younger men of the profession. In the past year his work has all been for Selznick, where he directed "Marooned Hearts," starring Conway Tearle, "The Wonderful Chance," starring Eugene O'Brien and "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," "The Pleasure Seekers," "The Girl from Nowhere," "The Gilded Butterfly," "Handcuffs and Kisses," starring Elaine Hammerstein. Hearty congratulations are being showered upon the couple, who will reside near Mamaroneck, where Director Archainbaud has taken a house.

Those who have seen "Intolerance" and "Broken Blossoms," will remember Wilbur Higby, who has just been signed by Lois Weber to appear in her forthcoming productions. Miss Weber has engaged Mr. Higby to play a leading role in a photoplay upon which she started work early in May. Others in the cast of this play besides Mr. Higby are Claire Windsor, Marie Walcamp and Louis Calhern.

He is best known for his screen work in "True Heart Susie," "Intolerance," "Diana of the Follies," "Broken Blossoms," "I'll Get Him Yet," "Brass Buttons" and "Homer Comes Home."

Jules Basil will direct Billy Quirk in a series of two-reel comedies for Reelcraft. Mr. Basil will be remembered as having been associated with productions for Vitagraph starring Larry Semon, for two years, earning his gradual promotion to the rank of director by painstaking efforts and commendable work.

Harry Millarde, who completed a picture starring William Farnum before the Fox star departed for Europe, is directing another special, as is J. Searle Dawley, also a Fox director, whose special starring of Pearl White has been held for opportune release, while Mr. Dawley completes another special production.

Hugo Ballin having finished his third play as an independent producer working title of which is "Ave Maria," is now engaged on a fourth picture, "Jane Eyre," which will also be a W. W. Hodkinson release. Mr. Ballin at the same time is collaborating with Mr. George S. Hellman on the scenario of their fifth play, which will be called "Home Sweet Home," and which will have as its motif the famous song of John Howard Payne.

Ray C. Smallwood, director of the productions during the past two years starring Alla Nazimova, for Metro release, has completed the finishing touches upon "Camille." Mr. Smallwood's name has been affiliated with many notable screen successes, "Billions," "Madame Peacock," "Heart of a Child," and now "Camille." Previous to 1908 the director was an artistic photographer, but after having devoted his interest to motion picture work, was assigned first camera on a Mary Pickford production. Thomas Ince made him an assistant director, and placed him in charge of the camera work for Ince productions. Universal first recognized his ability as a director. Following independent productions, Metro signed Mr. Smallwood to direct Nazimova. He is most optimistic, and recently stated that "the prsent year will bring a great influx of foreign films, but the American product will be bigger and better for the new competition. We must hustle, and when we know we have to do it, the American will always beat the other man to the tape, notwithstanding the stake." Mr. Smallwood stated further that he believed both eastern and western studios would be in full blast before the summer months were gone and that the fall would see a brighter and more dependable motion picture world.

"If we had the climate of California, transferred to the environment of New York, then we would be able to make the ideal photoplay!" so says Louis J. Gasnier, native of France, resident of California, and an American citizen, visiting New York. After ten years absence from France, he complains not of homesickness, except for California, where he has been located long enough to develop an eagerness to return.

Present day motion picture photography is about as nearly perfect as possible," states Mr. Gasnier. "The greatest need for improvement in pictures in better 'extras' for the big scenes, but these we cannot obtain so long as most of the members of the acting profession insist upon sticking close to Broadway. There is only one particular in which foreign countries offer better opportunities for the development pictures than America offers, and that is the responsive attitude of the people of other countries toward realism, as portraved on the screen. They accept realistic portrayals as a matter of course, while in America, the director is called upon to 'sugar coat' sordid phases of life," which, after all the great director believes all for the best.

ABOUT PLAYERS

"IT is the usual custom in the commercial world at the end of a successful campaign, to "cut a melon," which is generally a juicy one so far as the principal stockholders are concerned. The completion of Realart's Special "Birthday Production," starring May McAvoy, was made the occasion of special festivities at the West Coast Studio of that organization. A feature of the celebration was Miss McAvoy's temporary desertion of the stellar role for that of chief-cutter. The object of her dissecting activities, however, was not "fillum," but a giant pastry, five feet in diameter and three layers high, which was prepared for the entire studio staff by a boss baker. Miss McAvoy was unanimously elected to carve and received the valuable (verbal) assistance of Kathlyn Williams, Hector Turnbull and Chester Franklin.

"Carving a birthday cake is pie for me," said Miss McAvoy.

Alice Terry, famed for her work in the leading feminine role of the "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," will portray the characterization of a young French peasant girl in the next Rex Ingram production for Metro, "The Conquering Power." The host of admirers of the youthful talent attributed to Miss Terry will also be glad to know she will again play opposite Rudolph Valentino.

Eileen Percy has given up her sailing craft in favor of a new speed power boat, indicating the insidious influences of "Big Town Ideas," the title of her next Fox picture.

Eva Gordon, the dainty blonde player who appeared in Metro's "Life's Darn Funny," starring Viola Dana, is participating in Bert Lytell's "A Trip to Paradise." This is Miss Gordon's third Metro picture since her arrival from New York.

A quaint romance began under the very eyes of William D. Taylor during the latest production.

For obvious reasons the principals must be named in the manner established by Town Topics.

The lady in the case is Miss Jane X, a Hollywood beauty, who has a prominent part in support of Miss Ethel C., the star.

Miss X was struck with the appearance of Thomas K., another player, and practically demanded that the director introduce them. Mr. Taylor did, which was just as well as the script, written by Henry Arthur J., called for affectionate close-ups of the two. Afterwards Mr. Taylor told Miss Jane she could go for the day, but she demurred strenuously unless her newfound lov——that is, acquaintance accompany her.

To avoid a scene Mr. Taylor sent Mr. Tommy along with Miss

Jane . . . for what is a stuffed plush pussycat with bead eyes, when the happiness of a sweet little lady one year old is concerned?

Shirley Mason, who has just completed "The Mother Heart" for Fox, is apparently ambitious to establish a zoo. Her latest acquisition to the Mason family of rabbits, dogs, and turtles, etc., is a savage looking tortoise shell cat, whose nine separate existences are being conserved by being led around on a leash.

With permission of dainty June Caprice, a life-sized doll has been named for her, which will be put on the market as "The June Caprice Doll." It will be a most artistic miniature, and as near like the original as skill will permit. An impression was taken of Miss Caprice's features, and a drawing made of her piquant face, in order that the "June Caprice Doll" may actually resemble the motion picture actress for whom it is named.

Harry Carey has started work on his first Jewel picture, with a light heart and a proud parental feeling. The reason was disclosed in a telegram which he sent to R. H. Cochrane, dated May 16. "Henry George Carey arrived this morning. Both fine." Harry will doubtless train his son and heir in the ways that a properly prepared Western screen hero should follow. Young Henry's mother was Olive Fuller Golden, daughter of George Fuller Golden, founder of the White Rats, and very well known for years on the vaudeville stage.

Ollie Mack to Appear in Reelcraft Comedy

Ollie Mack, the funny little comedian, for many years a favorite with followers of farce comedy, and partner of Charles Murray, now of Sennett fame, will appear in a two-reeler in production for Reelcraft in a role that will combine several parts. He is always a rube jack of all trades, and when the occasion demands, is everything from a grocery boy to a fireman. Mr. Mack's well remembered facial expression should offer decidedly good material for screen comedy, and will remind some of the Murray and Mack fans of his old successes, the first of which was "Finnegan's Ball."

Marion Davies' Nines Play for Silver Cup

Property men of the International Film Studios, where Cosmopolitan Productions are made, proved their superiority over the Electrical Department in a well contested baseball game that marked the annual Spring Frolic of the studio employees.

The two teams are known as the Marion Davies Baseball Teams and their battle was waged for a large silver cup offered to the winner by the star. The Property men made ten runs to eight by the Electricians.

Miss Davies was present and threw out the first ball with unerring accuracy.

After the game the winners were challenged by the Animated Cartoon Department of the International Film Service Co. The studio employees also issue a challenge to any studio or laboratory team within a radius of fifty miles of New York.

Fox Changes Release of Eileen Percy Picture

Due to a change in the release schedule of Fox Film Corporation, Eileen Percy's newest vehicle, known as "Big Town Ideas," will not be released in May, as heretofore announced, but has been put over to June.

Pathe's Releases for 22nd of May

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces an impressive array of short subjects scheduled for release week of May 22. "Dangerous Waters" is the appropriate title of the eleventh episode of the Ruth Roland serial, "The Avenging Arrow." "Desert Law" is the title of the current episode release of the Seitz serial, "The Sky Ranger," in which George B. Seitz co-stars with June Caprice.

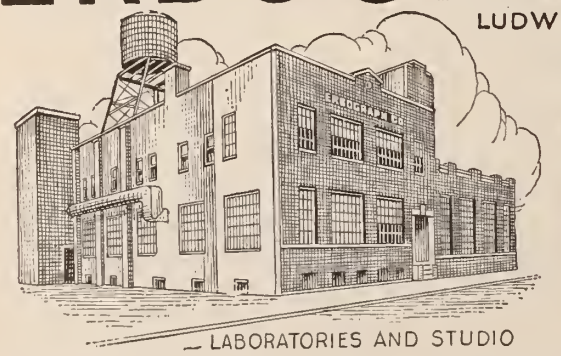
"Big Game," from the Hal E. Roach studios, is the current comedy release. "Snub" Pollard, the "pint sized" comedian, is featured, and Marie Mosquini, "Sunshine Sambo," the Hal Roach staff of comedians, and a number of animal actors complete the cast. A number of interesting features appealing to women are included among the carefully chosen subjects of Pathe Review, No. 104, the current issue of the screen magazine. "Hair-Combs on the Hoof" is an introduction by Dr. Ditmars of the New York Zoological Park to the tortoise and turtle. "Points on Your Fingers" presents a Fifth avenue manicurist, showing the proper way it should be done. "Watch Your Step" is a presentation by Novagraph in slow motion, showing that "form" is required by both man and beast in competing for an athletic record.

Title Artists Move to New Quarters

Announcement is made that Martin, McGuire and Newcombe, title artists, formerly located at 727 7th avenue, have taken offices at 130 West 46th street. The studio will be equipped with the latest devices for the production of art titles and special effects.

Several changes have been made in the personnel of the organization. F. C. Mims will have charge of the photographing of titles. A. J. Wildman is the cinematographer. Edward Side, formerly with Wids, will be in charge of sales.

Old Favorite Returns to Picture Work



Marguerite Gale, following a temporary absence from the silver sheet, will return to the screen, and will join the ranks of motion picture stars, in the stellar roles of a series of seven reel features sponsored by the Howard Productions, Inc., Captain C. J. Howard, ex-army officer and globe trotter, will act as chief executive of the new independent. His ability to handle affairs involving direction and distribution of capital, was proven in his career in connection with the world war. He was one of a very few men to receive a Congressional medal of honor, and medals recived for acts of extreme bravery form a unique collection, of which Captain Howard is the proud possessor. He was first impressed with the possibilities of motion pictures in entertaining and at the same time carrying messages of worth, during his protracted stay in the war zones. He had always admired Miss Gale's histrionic ability, having watched her career which began with musical comedy in companies of Joseph M. Gaites and George M. Cohan. "The Three Twins" still lingers in the memory of theatregoers, as does "Thais," "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," "Newly Married," "Broadway Jones" and many other plays in which Miss Gale figured prominently. In vaudeville she appeared with Jefferson De Angelis, and participated in an all-star attraction with Montagu Love and June Elvidge. Among her film activities were parts in "The Yellow Menace," "The Invisible Hand," "The Poison Pen," and a pre-release "In the Shadow of the Dome." In order to get "into harness" again she recently played less important roles in Famous Players Productions.

Combining Two Stories for Single Feature

Elmer Harris, Realart's supervising director, announces the purchase of two of Samuel Merwin's stories which will be combined in the making of a single feature production. Ewart Adamson is scenarizing the stories. The picture is scheduled for production during May under the title of "Brass Tacks." Wanda Hawley will be starred.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Now or Never"

(Harold Lloyd Comedy—Produced by Hal Roach—Released by Associated Exhibitors—Three Reels)

AFTER considerable delay, Harold Lloyd's first three-reel comedy has reached the New York public. There is little doubt but that Hal Roach's latest presentation of the young man who is making bone-rimmed glasses famous is the most consistently funny straight comedy of the year. It runs three reels, with never a dull moment after Lloyd makes his appearance. The star, still adapting his middle course, half way between the ultra-serious type of comedian and the grotesque facial contortionist, finds one clean-cut comedy situation after another to wring spontaneous bursts of laughter out of an audience.

The production is more elaborate and evidently more expensive than the last Lloyd comedy, "Number please." After running amuck through a countryside in an auto, the star hops a train. Having spent some perilous moments underneath the body of the car, he gets aboard. A six-year-old girl is assigned to his care. He has his difficulties in putting her to bed in the Pullman. He attempts to hold his sweetheart's hand, only to find that he has grabbed a stray foot protruding from a lower berth. He stops the train with great gusto to obtain a drink of milk for his little ward. There are a dozen laughs in the Pullman washroom the next morning. Lloyd cleans his teeth with shaving soap. He discovered a side-splitting manner of finding a place at the wash basin. He dresses the baby by throwing her head first into her dress. A strange garment is left over after the ordeal, so he jams it in his pocket. Then there is some fun as he tries to avoid the conductor. The picture ends with some thrilling scenes on top of the train, with Lloyd racing to avoid being hit by the roof of a tunnel. These are only some of the laugh getters which space allows us to mention. Lloyd's antics with the youngster are without a trace of vulgarity.

It is almost needless to say that "Now or Never" will lengthen the line at any box office window. This has been proven before, but "Now or Never" only proves that he can keep them happy for three reels as well as two.

Mildred Davis is as pretty as ever opposite the star. The picture was directed by Hal Roach and Fred Newmayer. The titles are by Harley Walker, the scenario by Sam Taylor and the photography by Walter Lindon.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Primitive Life in Tennessee"

(Kineto Reviews—Second Series)

THIS reel borders on the historical and gives the spectator a view of life as it exists today in the Tennessee mountains in and about Chattanooga. In viewing this subject one's mind is carried back to the time when the early colonists settled this country and by the hardest kind of toil conquered nature's forces, in their struggle for existence.

The featured player is probably the purest type of American pioneer, tall, lean, sinewy, watchful, with the courage of his forefathers which was so necessary in building up a new country.

Although the climate is invigorating and the beautiful rhododendrons and mountain laurels which grow in abundance an added attraction, as is shown, it is doubtful whether this life would interest those who care for the strenous, other than in story form.

And it is for this reason that the reel excels for the camera man and title-writer have developed the interest value to such a degree that one is kept in a continual state of wonderment, as the different scenes are flashed upon the screen.

As these people depend most entirely on their sheep for food, clothing and light, the animal is constantly in their care. In the spring they are gathered about the cabin and sheared, not by the husband but by the wife, after which the wool is combed, wove and spun by the merry housewife. The process of making candles in the old fashioned way by pouring tallow into moulds is interesting as is the method of moulding pewter spoons. Then the oven for making tasty cornbread; the old time flintlock and tinderbox and its uses; the methods of gathering honey and many other views showing the way these people obtain a livelihood, complete a pleasing reel which can be shown without any fear of disappointing.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Hey, Rube!"

(Christie Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

BOBBY VERNON, Helen Darling, a dilapidated flivver of the vintage of '95, a barn, a barn dance, plenty of good types which look like the original corn-feds of Hoehandle Corners, barnyard animals, an angry "hick" father, the slick fellow—these people and properties are thoroughly mixed in the movie mill of rural comedy, and the result is a lively and funny effort—by cracky! It is all about the cantankerous father, who is frustrated by the irrepressible Bobby. This comedian can play the son of green pastures like a true graduate of the soil. With his antiquated machine, which he tinkers up to good gags, he is sure of applause. It all ends up in an elopement and chase. "Hey, Rube!" is a first-rate comedy—one of the best from the Christie lots.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Greenhorn"

(Mermaid Comedy-Lloyd Hamilton-Educational)

LLOYD HAMILTON will give the patrons plenty of amusement in this two reeler, which fairly bubbles with humorous situations. From the opening scenes the star resorts to nonsense and continues this sort of "horse play" or whatever it may be called, until the finish, when the spectator will realize that he has been "well amused."

The star plays a country yokel, sticks closely to the characterization, and never tries to burlesque the part until the situations call for relief, when he jumps in with all sorts of grotesque comedy, which is a delight to witness.

One scene in particular may be used to illustrate Hamilton's style in this particular instance. He is being pursued by another comedian—but the method of pursuit and the way it is done "is what counts." The two comedians are seated on the floor when a dispute arises, and in this position they chase each other around the room, until Hamilton craftily opens a door, and, in the same position, emerges into the hallway, followed by the other fellow, until the two are seen going or falling down the stairs. Horse play and ridiculous, but it's funny, just the same, and good for a big laugh.

In trying to put the young yokel out of commission the Bolshevists or the nihilists, or whatever they may be called, are rung in with their bombs and plots and trap doors, but all to no avail, for our hero escapes from their clutches and comes out victorious.

In the final scenes the star impersonates a rough white woman and a negro wench, getting a lot of comedy out of the latter characterization.

"The Greenhorn" is full of nonsense, but it contains a good many laughs.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Naturalist's Paradise"

(Kineto Reviews—Second Series)

THIS picture was filmed under the auspices of the Barbados-Antigua Expedition from the State University of Iowa and shows the difficulties encountered by the scientists in and about Pelican Island near Barbados in their efforts to obtain rare specimens of insects, fish and sea denizens.

The opening views show the steamer surrounded by a school of porpoises off St. Pierre, Martinique, and then jump to some most peculiar views on the coast of Antigua, exhibiting results in erosive phenomena due to the constant bombardment of the heavy surf.

Upon arriving on the island the members of the expedition are seen using sweep-nets in collecting insects, some of them being adepts in bug catching and the handling of the poisonous centipedes and tarantulas. And then they appear in bathing suits swimming along the seawall collecting from the accumulation of centuries. After showing various scenes in which all sorts of "sea animals" appear from serpent-stars to land-crabs, not forgetting the peculiar sea-worms and turtles, a well equipped launch makes its appearance filled with fish-pots and dredge for collecting specimens of marine life. By means of a marine glass objects can be seen at a depth of forty feet and with the aid of the dredge which is dragged over the bed of the ocean and rapidly hoisted by an engine some most interesting collections are made.

The catch includes many varieties of fish, sea urchins, sea-worms, sea-anemone, crabs, the octopus and others too numerous to mention.

If your patrons are of the intellgent sort this film will interest and instruct.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Hayseed"

(Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels—Fox)

Al St. John has the featured role in this Sunshine. It is censorproof, and while not the most uproarious Sunshine by any means, it contains a few laughs and enough amusement to make it an acceptable offering.

The story is something about a bandit for whom a large reward is offered. Al St. John finds his clothes and impersonates him. The comedian also finds an opportunity to make his bicycle do some tricks. The gag of a man falling down a well, being drawn up and let fall again is used.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

SAN DIEGO

W. W. Whitson, who owns the Plaza theatre and has a lease on the Kinema, has added a third house to his chain by taking over the California theatre, which has been operated by J. B. Mason since it was opened last year. Mr. Mason will give his attention to his other house —the Dream. Russell Rogers, who is manager for the Plaza and Kinema, will also have charge of the California, with John W. Frewer as house manager. Mr. Frewer, who recently returned from three years in the service, and has been operating the Orpheum theatre at National City and the Moon theatre at La Mesa, has transferred his interests in those two suburban houses to his wife, Edith C. Frewer.

The Charlie Chaplin feature, "The Kid," went over big during the week's presentation at the Rialto. In addition to his regular publicity Manager Carl Lundquist put a man on the street wearing a Chaplin make-up. This picture was followed by "The Old Swimmin' Hole," featuring Charlie Ray, which showed to big houses for a week.

SPOKANE

The city federation of women's organizations will ask motion picture house managers to institute a "children's hour" as a part of their weekly program. The club women will ask that pictures especially adapted to children's tastes be shown during this hour and before carrying their petition to the theatre managers they will make it a point to see that mothers co-operate in the plan. The Clemmer followed the custom of a children's matinee for a time and dropped it, obviously for the reason that it did not pay, one woman stated, advancing the theory that the plan failed because co-operation was not forthcoming from the mothers. Another argued that children's tastes were now so blase, that she was not so sure they would care to patronize a children's show. The plan was proposed by a special committee which has been directing a survey of the local picture houses.

"The Kid," which had a record run at the Clemmer some time ago, is now being shown at the Majestic, featuring Charlie Chaplin and little Jackie Coogan. It is billed for a week's run and is drawing good houses.

Novel decorative features were used at the Casino for "The County Fair," which is having a week's engagement at that house. The Casino has been featuring week runs for some time, showing the James Oliver Curwood pictures and any number of high class productions at popular prices.

WESTERN NEW YORK

E. J. Hayes, manager of the Buffalo First National Exchange, is in New York this week, attending the big convention of the company at the home office. Mr. Hayes has closed the Cataract theatre, Niagara Falls, and the Majestic theatre, Hornell, for the F. N. franchise. Charlie Hayman is manager of the former house and F. F. Peters guides the policies of the latter. Mr. Hayes was in Syracuse last week, where he closed the Hippodrome and Happy Hour on "The Kid." This comedy will open a week run at the big Shubert-Teck theatre in Buffalo the week of May 29, following a peppy exploitation and publicity campaign put on by Ben Davis and assistants from the New York exchange office.

Bob Wagner has resigned as manager of the Buffalo Empire State Film Exchange and as a member of the Buffalo F. I. L. M. club to accept the management of the new Star theatre in Dansville, N. Y.

The F. I. L. M. Club of Buffalo is the name of the newly incorporated organization of Buffalo exchange men. Incorporation papers have been filed at Albany.

The new Hotel Statler in Buffalo will not include a theatre, announces Charles W. Mosier, vice-president of the company. The plans for a theatre are not as practical as at first believed, says a statement issued by Mr. Mosier.

Howard F. Brink, manager of the Buffalo Robertson-Cole exchange, has engaged Bob Matson, formerly with Select to cover the most of western New York for the company. H. C. Bissell has been transferred to the Albany territory. Mr. Brink has just returned from a visit to the towns on the main line, Rochester, Utica and Syracuse and reports closing a large amount of business.

George Cook, of the Fox sales forces, is now in the Syracuse territory having been transferred from the Albany office. Pat Rooney and George Canty, also salesmen at Buffalo, have resigned.

Phil Ryan, general franchise manager for Associated Exhibitors, was in Buffalo last week, visiting Harold B. Franklin and W. A. V. Mack, Pathe chief. Mr. Ryan was on his way from Chicago to New York.

Ralph Plimpton has reopened the Royal theatre at Lima, N. Y. It has been closed for two years.

KANSAS CITY

A suit for $5,000 against the H. & R. Amusement Company, owners of the Apollo motion picture theatre in Kansas City, was filed last Thursday by I. J. Weinberg in the circuit court.

Weinberg asked a receiver for the theatre and an injunction to prevent the company from operating it without court supervision. Weinberg alleges he took $10,000 stock in a company, paying $5,000 of the amount, and that the company never was formed.

Announcement that "The Angel of the Hills," a 15-episode picture, would be filmed about June 1 in Kansas City and the Ozarks, was made recently by Walter B. Tracy, manager of the Kansas City Producing Company, Inc. Mr. Tracy said Lillian Walker, a former Vitagraph star, would be featured.

The picture, which will be of the "thriller" type, will be directed by J. Davis Perry. The cast will be brought to Kansas City from New York and California, Mr. Perry said.

PORTLAND, ORE.

War against the portable motion picture projection machines is raging in Portland, Ore. An old ordinance has been revived making it unlawful to show motion pictures without a fire proof booth for the projection machine. Objection has been specifically raised to neglect and carelessness with which film is left lying around loose by those operating the portable machines. This film as well or even more than the projection machine, itself, should have the protection of the fire proof, scientifically equipped booth, it is declared. Public schools, lodges, community center work and churches are objecting to the ordinance which is backed by the underwriters, it is said.

Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, has returned from a month's vacation spent in and about Los Angeles, Cal. While there he visited film studios and renewed friendships with Oliver G. Wallace, Henry Murtagh and other former Portlanders.

C. S. Jensen, accompanied by his partner, J. G. Von Herberg of Seattle, spent a week in Great Falls, Mont., recently. Jensen and Von Herberg are about to open an elaborate cinema construction and equipment of which is said to have cost in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars.

Further Reviews of Short Subjects

"Money Talks"

(Gayety Comedy-Educational—One Reel)

"MONEY TALKS" is one of the best Gayety comedies we've seen. It has a bright idea running through it which holds the attention and situations which are exceedingly humorous when they are not amusing.

When the young hero extracts a twenty-dollar bill from his lady friend's purse after rescuing it from a thief, the plot for a moment begins to look like strong drama. It changes quickly, however, when we learn that this is done because the young fellow has borrowed his pal's new suit to keep his luncheon date and inadvertently left his wallet in his own suit.

The scenes in the restaurant which follow are humorous, especially when Henry discovers that the bill is an old counterfeit. Our hero deserts his friends, and in many humorous incidents, which are mostly played with a chauffeur, tries to obtain some money. He does, but arrives too late to pay the bill.

The final scenes are amusing, especially when Henry arrives at the young girl's home plastered in bandages and says that he has met another thief and given him a beating. He is forgiven.

The cast includes Henry Murdock, Thornton Edwards and Mary Wynn.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Lure of the Orient"

(Aywon—State Rights Feature)

THERE is no doubt about this feature being aptly named. It is unduly Oriental in characterization, although its plot carries an Occidental flavor—a flavor usually identified with serials. "The Lure of the Orient" crams a deal of action in its six reels and one cannot say that it fails to furnish the requisite amount of suspense. There are very few white people in the story, but those who do appear have a definite place in advancing the romance and thrills. The plot concerns the heroic task of rescuing an American girl from the clutches of a powerful mandarin. Her guardian gives her up to the Oriental to keep from disgrace, and at the hour of the marriage ceremony, the care free newspaper reporter comes to the rescue and takes her aboard a coolie ship bound for Vancouver.

Here is where most of the action occurs. A tong leader encourages the coolies to vengeance. So the conflict takes place. It defies logic to see the white men brandishing firearms and shooting with nary a Chink toppling over. The picture bears evidence of being made some time ago judging from the old-fashioned hair-dressing of the heroine and the peculiar cut of the men's clothes. Still the picture packs quite a punch, carries adequate atmosphere which is caught in the Oriental interiors, types, sets and detail. It is easy to follow and the finish can be guessed from the opening reel. The continuity is a trifle ragged and the action becomes picturey too often. Yet it is good enough to be booked, if for no other reason than it will hold the interest. Length, 6 reels. —LAURENCE REID.

"Hitting the Hot Spots"

(Chester Outing—Educational)

THIS one reeler contains many beautiful scenic shots of New Zealand. And in order to bring out the high spots the cameraman has added atmosphere in the form of the native Maoris who enter their canoes and paddle up and down the beautiful rivers surrounded on both sides with some of the wildest verdure ever seen upon the screen. These views are interesting from the fact that they bring the spectator into a land of dreams, as it were, and hold him there while the picture is in projection.

Many other views are also shown of the effervescing springs and gushers in this far off land, the native women indulging in humorous tricks while the water sprays about them.

A few long shots and close-ups of the rivers, some of which are in tinted form, add to the picture's value.

Although we have seen many scenics picturizing New Zealand, this one should interest if only from an educational point of view.—FRANK LEONARD.

Rebuild the New Victoria Without Interrupting Shows

Harrisburg, Pa., Theatre Now Up to Minute in Appointments

The big, new Victoria theatre at 221-223 Market Street, Harrisburg, Pa., owned by the Wilmer and Vincent Theatre Company, who operate a big chain of motion picture and other theatres in Pennsylvania and other states, is remarkable not alone for its beauty, its modern appointments and convenient arrangements, but because its completion, just effected, represents a very unusual feat of construction work. This theatre is an entirely rebuilt combination of the old Victoria, which occupied half the site of the present structure, with an adjoining store room, and work of transforming these two buildings into one absolutely new theatre, embracing both the old sites, was accomplished without the necessity of omitting a single performance. The building literally was done over the heads of the patrons and while the shows were going on.

The most difficult part of the work was the placing of the balcony, big steel trusses being inserted without interference with the film plays.

The problem of ventilation of the theatre has been solved by the placing of a mammoth Monsoon Cooling System on the roof. It is capable of blowing in 230,000 cubic feet of fresh air every minute, or nearly 14,000,000 cubic feet every hour. It was installed by the Monsoon Cooling System, 70 West 45th Street, New York City. Reiter Brothers & Vinicoff, 314 Chestnut Street, Harrisburg, supplied the wiring material and lighting fixtures. The lumber was provided by the Bogar Lumber Company, 3365 North 6th Street, Harrisburg, and the E. E. Snyder Lumber Yards, 18th and Holly Streets, Harrisburg. The Potts Manufacturing Company, Mechanicsburg, Pa., installed the ornamental railings for the stairs. All the attractive cement work in the theatre was provided by Andrew Schmidt, 1624 North 6th Street, Harrisburg; the sheet metal work for the electrical signs was done by Samuel B. Weidman, 800 to 810 North Seventh Street, Harrisburg, and the plumbing and heating work was done by M. H. Baker & Co., 1330 Derry Street, the same city.

The theatre has 2,200 seats and the local manager for Wilmer and Vincent is C. Floyd Hopkins. The Stanley Company of America has a financial interest in the theatre.

One of the most pleasing features of the Victoria theatre is the proscenium arch effect which is built around and over the picture screen and equipped with what is known as "cove" lighting, giving a wonderfully soft effect. The lighting of the auditorium has been done upon the most modern plan. Large lamps are sunk into the ceiling and placed behind art glass panels. This lighting system not only lends a charming and subduing effect, but it adds a sort of artistic design to the ceiling.

The main ceiling is lighted by means of six silk Japanese lanterns, each of which is seven feet tall. The general effect gained by looking down the large auditorium of the Victoria is that of a Japanese garden with large beds of lights, which seem to hover about fifteen to twenty feet above the carpet.

Another and very important feature of the new Victoria is the re-arrangement of the seats. The seats have now been placed to afford the greatest comfort. A full sweep of the stage and screen may be had from any seat in the house, thus causing no disadvantage to any patron of the theatre.

The mezzanine floor has been done in very artistic fashion, enveloping, as it were, fancy stand lamps in four niches in the wall. This unusual arrangement gives to the mezzanine the atmosphere of an oriental castle. The ladies' and gentlemen's rooms are on this floor?

The work of the master decorator is evident on all the walls of the theatre, and especially in the lobbies. The inner lobby is profusely and artistically decorated in old rose, with the lighting fixtures and shades harmonizing in every detail. The interior of the house, which is elaborately and intricately decorated, is done in a most unique treatment of gold and silk effect. It is hardly likely that a more becoming decorative scale will be found in any other theatre, for to obtain the artistic achievement of this house no expense has been spared to secure the services of the decorators whose work is conceded to be foremost.

In addition to the new equipment for seating in the new Victoria, twenty new boxes have been installed, thus enabling theatre parties to attend the Victoria motion pictures in groups. The Victoria has a seating capacity of 2200 people, and until the opening of the new Stanley theatre in Philadelphia there was no motion picture house in that city which was as large as the Victoria in Harrisburg.

One of the most serious complaints to many theatres of the old school is the poor ventilating system. Naturally, in times past, engineers had not been obliged to give much time to the ventilating of theatre buildings. With the rapid growth of the amusement industries, especially that of motion pictures, the requirements of the modern theatre building are such as to demand as perfect a ventilating system as is possible to build.

In the Victoria theatre four huge fans have been installed. These fans run at a terrific rate of speed and can be operated in such a manner as to blow fresh air in from the roof or draw air out through the roof. The same equipment acts as a cooling system in the Summer time. In short, the new ventilating system keeps the air fresh, and yet a uniform temperature in the Winter time, and in the Summer time it keeps the theatre cool and refreshed.

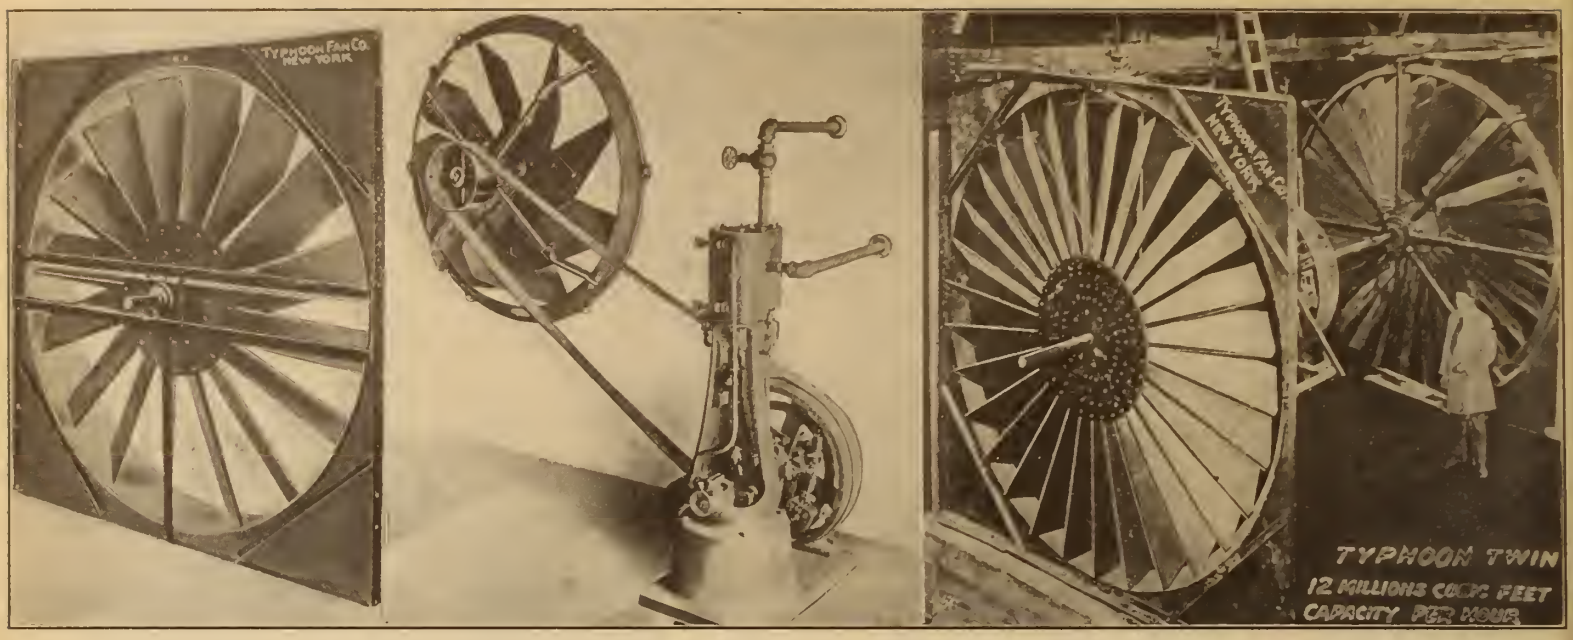
The ventilating and cooling system were furnished and installed by the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., of New York. This installation is, perhaps, one of the most difficult ever made by this company, owing to the limited space available for the huge Monsoons which were necessary to properly ventilate and cool the large auditorium. Although the Monsoons could not be placed in a perfectly advantageous position because of the limited space the difficulty encountered was not due to a lack of fresh air.

There was enough air in abundance and it was an easy matter for Monsoons to pull volumes of it into the auditorium, but the problem was to get these large volumes of air evenly distributed throughout the theatre—in the orchestra, in the topmost seat in the balcony, and under the balcony on the first floor. And, most important of all, do this without any drafts. Now, when hundreds of thousands of cubic feet of air must be supplied every minute, not only to make an audience breathe comfortably but also to keep them cool enough to thoroughly enjoy an afternoon or an evening's performance in sweltering summer weather, someone has to do some tall thinking. This same system was so figured and installed that it will be possible to properly ventilate the theatre and keep the audiences comfortable in winter and not only in a mild winter but in the coldest weather possible. It was necessary to install an equipment of a No. 8 and a No. 7 Duplex Set of Monsoons. The first set, placed in the attic space above the proscenium arch, draws great quantities of air and forces it down through the grilles in the ceiling, the air supply above the balcony and blow while the No. 7 set of Monsoons take it in gently through grilles above that portion of the auditorium.

A story covering the projection room and equipment of the New Victoria will be presented in the Projection Department of the NEWS.

Baltimore's Newest Theatre Dedicated to Public

Heralded everywhere and pronounced by critics to be on a par with the New York Capitol or the Metropolitan in Washington, Baltimore's newest temple of the silent drama has been dedicated to the public.



The opening was marked by a special showing of "Deception" to an ultra-exclusive audience who gained admittance on card only. Invites to the affair were at a premium. Many New Yorkers and visitors from other states visited Baltimore especially to attend.

Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Maryland; William F. Broening, Mayor of Baltimore, and Norman Clark, dramatic critic of the Baltimore News, delivered addresses. Needless to say, Charles E. Whitehurst and his associates who undertook to give the Monumental City its last word in motion picture theatres, were justly proud.

Girl ushers clad in silk breeches attracted much attention and proved as interesting as some of the mural paintings of R. MacGill Mackall. Opened with "The Star-Spangled Banner," played by a 30-piece orchestra directed by E. V. Cupero, the program got under way splendidly. Mr. Cupero responded with Hosmer's "Southern Rhapsody." Then a bit of "Aida" was offered by Warren M. Wilplaine and Helen MacNier Marshall of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who were costumed for the parts.

Photographs showing progressive development of Typhoon Ventilating System

Developments in Typhoon System of Ventilation

The accompanying illustrations point out quite vividly the changes which time and much thought and hard work have wrought in Typhoon design and construction. The first illustration shows one of the earlier types and one which might, with perfect candor be referred to as a "square-rigger"; reminding one as it does of the square-rigged vessels of the days of Columbus.

This earlier type of Typhoon, now known as the "drum type" because of its peculiar and drum-like form, represented at the time of its construction, the "nth power" in size, design, and construction, but has long since been superseded by the "cone-type" which obtains its name from the peculiar manner in which it delivers the air. In the earlier type much of the current of air generated was thrown against the deep supporting ring set almost at right angles with the square-tipped fan blades, this causing much of the air to be thrown against the ring, where it was caught on the rebound again and again, not only causing unnecessary noise, but because of the air being taken back upon the blade at a very vital point, wasted much of the power of the fan. This type was considered very efficient at the time and did generate a plenteous current of air, but, like some of the present-day types, it didn't put the air where it was needed.

In the newer type of Typhoon the inventor has developed the cone-shaped delivery of air, in which the air is picked up by the specially designed blade and delivered without noise or vibration and with a minimum of friction, calling for less power with better results. A cast iron ring of proven weight and design, around the circumference of the fan, absorbs the vibrations caused by the revolutions of the fan and is so shaped as to reduce friction to an absolute minimum.

Tests made under actual working conditions, and in which a "drum-type" fan of earlier make was literally "pitted" against a modern Typhoon, disclosed beyond any question of doubt the superiority of the latter. The fans were mounted in a box, opposed, with an equal amount of power applied to each, and in which the better fan would blow the air through the inferior one. Under these conditions the new Typhoon developed a delivery of 160,000 cubic feet of free-air per minute, while the "drum type" delivered only 70,000 feet per minute, giving the Typhoon an advantage of 90,000 feet per minute over the older type, or about 120 per cent "too much" Typhoon.

La Porte, Ind., to Have New Theatre Soon

GROUND is now being cleared in the down-town district of LaPorte for the new $250,000 theatre to be erected by the Princess Theatre Company during the present year. The Princess Theatre Company operates two motion picture houses at the present time, but which prove insufficient to accommodate the growth of the city.

The new structure to be erected by Henry L. Newhouse, architect of Chicago, will occupy one of the most prominent blocks in the city, will be three stories in height and shall have a modern hotel of 52 rooms and 24 apartments in conjunction with the theatre. The dimensions of the building, which is to be constructed of red brick, will be 210 feet by 115 feet.

The hotel lobby and entrance will occupy one corner of the building, while a large department store will be quartered in the other end of the building, with the theatre lobby in the center of the building and entering the theatre on the side. The lobby will be of white Vermont marble, 27 feet by 36 feet, opening into the foyer.

The theatre proper will be 74 feet by 150 feet, and will seat 1,300 on the main floor and 650 in the balcony. A stage large enough to accommodate the largest of legitimate plays will be constructed, 26 feet deep by 74 feet in width. Four dressing rooms will be constructed on the stage and a large number in the basement.

The plans of the new theatre have been drawn so as to give the utmost comfort both for the patrons and for the employes. Rest rooms, lavatories, smoking rooms, musicians' rooms and a manager's office have all been provided for. Specially ordered upholstered seats have been secured.

The orchestra pit will be eight feet in width and 38 feet long, affording ample room for an orchestra of 30 pieces. One of the newest pipe organs will be installed.

Specially convenient will be the court that will extend on three sides of the theatre, permitting ready exit from any point in the house.

It is intended to install a modern projection machine in a large projection room to occupy practically the entire length of the back of the house. An improved screen will be installed.

While the policy of the house has not been definitely announced, it is understood that only the highest class pictures will be exhibited in the new house.

It is expected that the contractors will break ground about the first of May and that the house will be ready for occupancy by the first of 1922.

The Added Attraction to Make Your Show "Go"

Lighting effects, good music, may help make your show a "puller." But they will go for naught if the air in your theatre is not such to make your patrons happy and alert.

IDICO CRYSTALS

(The Fragrant Disinfectant)

add this necessary touch.

No matter how bright your show, your patrons won't enjoy it to the fullest extent if your theatre is close and stuffy. A liberal sprinkling of fragrant IDICO CRYSTALS before each show will wash the air, dispel all odors, and virtually convert your place into an airdrome.

IDICO CRYSTALS evaporate quickly and cannot stain or harm the most delicate fabrics. It leaves a faint, clean, pleasant perfume.

Rebuilt Belnord Theatre Open to Public

Frank H. Durkee, president, and Charles E. Nolte, house manager, seized upon the opportunity of the planned opening of the rebuilt Belnord theatre in Baltimore and made much out of it. They played up to the public the names of the contractor, Henry L. Maas, 1119 Ensor street, and 16 sub-contractors in as many different businesses who worked on the construction, and made it entirely Baltimore's own.

The Belnord is situated at a triangular park formed by East Fayette street, Belnord and Philadelphia avenues. At an approximate cost of $130,000, the house has been built along Greek lines of brick, steel and concrete, with seating capacity of 2000. A $10,000 three-manual pipe organ and an up-to-date heating and ventilating system are part of the features. The Belnord will show Katherine MacDonald in "The Beauty Market" at its opening.

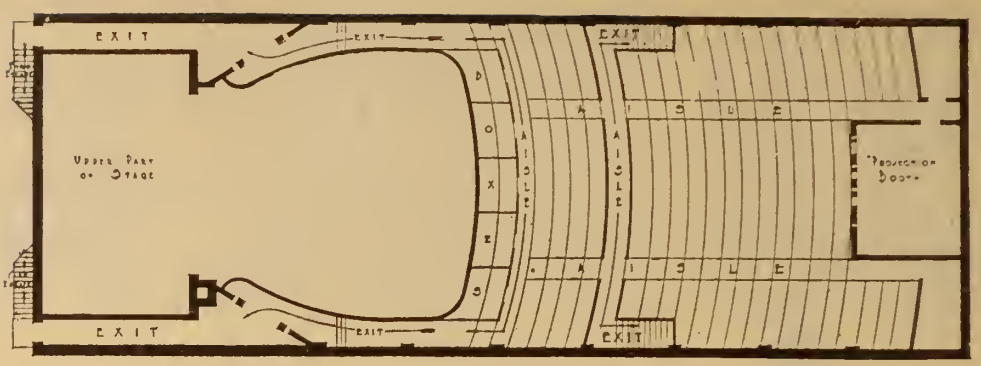
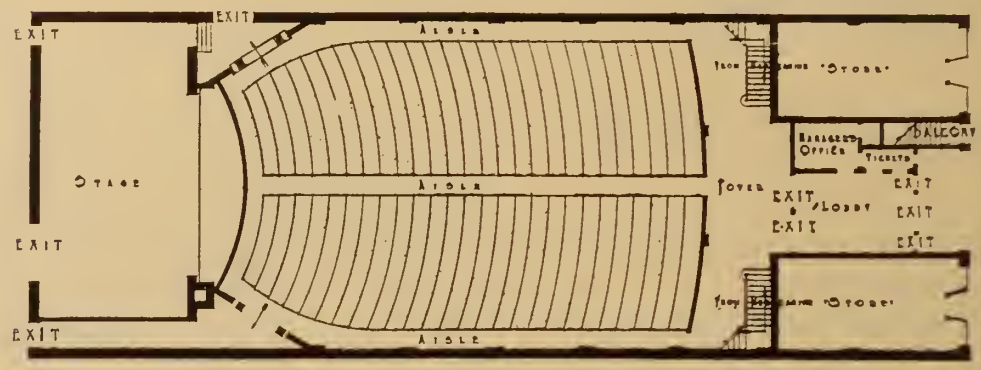
Murphy Amusement Co. Erecting Theatre in New London



Architect Herbert R. Brewster of Brooklyn, N. Y., has completed plans for a theatre to be erected in New London by the Murphy Amusement Co. The exterior of the building will be in the light French Renaissance, executed in light face brick with cornice, capitals, belt courses and other ornamental details in Indiana limestone. The design is constituted of three parts, the two flanks outlined by the ornamental plasters and the central portion, the main feature of which is the large ornamental window treatment.



The design of this window detail permits of the enclosing of the double fire exit stairs in such manner as to form an unique ornamental effect and also resulting in these stairways being fully lighted by natural light during the day and by electrical lighting during the evening, this detail to also form an illumination feature for the entire building at night.

A large and ornamental lobby will open into this foyer, or promenade, at a level midway between the proscenium and the back of the house, thus affording the greatest convenience in reaching all seats on the orchestra floor. From the foyer a broad inclined corridor leads to the sub-mezzanine, and thence by a short flight of stairs to the main mezzanine, where will be found the ladies' parlor, the men's smoking room and the open balcony looking down into the main orchestra floor.

From this mezzanine balcony, the lower and sub-levels and the balcony boxes are reached, while an entirely separate stairway, amply lighted, extends on each side to the high level of the balcony. The balcony boxes are extended down on each side to the proscenium boxes and may be entered both from the balcony and the proscenium box stairs.

Thorough and careful attention, regardless of expense, has been devoted to the care, health, convenience and safety of the patrons of the theatre. The floors are so pitched and graded and the seats so arranged and of such ample width that from every seat in the house an unobstructed view of the stage can be had in comfort.

Floor plans of the Strand theatre, Pontiac, Mich.

The building will be equipped with a large indraught fan and a large outdraught fan so studied and arranged as to supply a constant supply of fresh and properly warmed air throughout the house with draught. The most careful study has also been devoted to making the house safe under all conditions. There are ample stairways and exits, easily reached from all parts of the house. An especial feature will be that the fire exits, instead of being exposed, like those in most theatres, dangerous much of the time because of snow, ice and the elements, will be enclosed throughout, yet lighted during the day as though exposed.

The stage equipment will be complete and of the latest type, allowing production of all classes of motion pictures and other attractions.

Fire prevention equipment is of the most modern type.

Gentlemen:

I have a room located in an hotel, 110 feet long by 20 feet wide. The booth has to be located in the back on the outside. That leaves the screen at the other end to be passed as you enter the room. You might be able to tell me how I could use my screen at the other end of the room or maybe some other exhibitor has been up against the same thing and could help me out. They might tell me where to get a screen and lenses for such a job.

The Bell and Howell Ultra-Speed Device for Slow Motion Work

By C. E. Marshall

SCIENTIFIC and experimental research efforts during the last half decade have resulted in greater strides toward perfection in film bases and emulsions for high-speed photography than was evidenced in mechanical developments up to the present date for the fullest utilization of the extreme speed put in the emulsion by the chemist. In theory, exposures at 128 per second are as easily obtained as 16 per second, however, until some form of continuous movement camera is devised that will supersede the present intermittent. The laws of inertia of moving objects and the low tensile strength of film base will constitute the most obstinate obstacles to overcome in the negotiation of ultra-speed photography on a practical basis.

In order to make 128 individual exposures per second with present types of film cameras which will not permit of light being admitted to the film longer than 1/272nd of a second, at this speed the mechanism from which the film derives its movement is required to travel through a perpendicular path and completely reverse its direction of travel 256 times per second. This means that the film must be accelerated from the stationary period to a speed of approximately 16 feet per second during its travel downward for the succeeding exposure and then brought to the stationary period again, consuming but 1/242nd of a second to complete this entire cycle of events. It is thus quite obvious that the ordinary shuttle or claw movement, whose weight and construction is adjusted for a speed of 16 exposures per second, would be entirely unsafe when functioning at 128 exposures or more per second. Owing to the extreme rapidity of the oscillations of the moving element, the weight and mass must be kept as low as possible in order to minimize wear and undue vibration. This requires a film movement mechanism differing entirely from the conventional type, but built to efficiently perform the same duty. The shuttle of the regular Bell & Howell Cam and Shuttle Movement weighs approximately one ounce and is constructed as light as is consistent with regard to the duties imposed upon it. In the Bell & Howell Ultra-Speed Shuttle Movement the shuttle or vane is constructed of high-grade steel carefully tempered and accurately ground to size; the reciprocating element of which weighs but 70 grains or .166 ounce. By keeping the total weight of this reciprocating member at the low figure mentioned the inertia at the instant of the reversal of direction of travel is within limits that insure the same reasonable length of life that could be expected from the regular shuttle movement operating at 16 exposures per second. Aside from the qualities mentioned in the foregoing paragraph actual operating tests have proven the noise emitted by the ultra-speed movement to be less than that of the regular movements due to the finer state of equilibrium obtained between the moving parts as a result of their greatly reduced weight.

The Bell & Howell Ultra-Speed device consists of two separate and distinct units, one of which attaches in place on the exterior of the camera and increases the ratio of gearing between the operating crank and the normal crank shaft, thus effecting a shutter shaft speed of 128 revolutions per second with normal turning speed of the crank of two turns per second.

The other unit, comprising the ultra-speed device, is the auxiliary cam and shuttle movement by which the extreme speed of operation is transferred to the film. This entire unit displaces the regular register leaf and shuttle mounting when ultra-speed effects are desired, and is made with a view of quick change when in the field. The shuttle teeth differ materially with those of the regular movement in that eight teeth engage and film and draw it downward where as two only are used for normal speed work.

Owing to the extent registration effected by this method the use of pilot pins are eliminated in the ultra-speed movement and as a further insurance against a possible lateral movement a marginal pressure plate is employed contacting the film along a length approximating four frames.

It is quite obvious that the time required to expose a roll of film 400 feet in length is extremely short, being but fifty seconds. On lengthy subjects, or those requiring several minutes of actual photographing, this necessitates frequent changes of magazines where only the 400-foot capacity retort is used. A valuable feature of Bell & Howell construction is the employment of outside magazines which lends itself admirably for high-speed requirements, permitting the use of 1000-foot magazines, as is shown in the illustration. This furnishes ample footage for the average slow motion subject without the inconvenience of changes during the action which is highly important on subjects that will not permit of interruption.

Correct registration of the film is a matter that the Bell & Howell Company have exhaustively explored, and is the vital feature of their entire line of cine-machinery, including cameras, printers, perforators and splicing machine.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Isolated Power Plants for the Projection of Motion Pictures

A Paper by R. L. Lee from the Transactions S. M. P. E.

(Concluded from last week)

When I first went into this work about the only lighting plant made in any quantities had a capacity of 750 watts. This, of course, limited our activities to very small theatres, the lamps taking 600 watts and with the generator running a surplus of only 150 watts, or slightly less, was left over for supplying the battery. If the battery was fully charged we figured that it would be possible with this combination to operate a theatre whose exhibitions lasted only five hours a day or less. You can readily see that this combination would be successful only in the smaller or "part time" theatres. We were, therefore, called upon for an outfit which would handle a larger theatre. About this time, 3-KW. 32-volt generator outfits appeared on the market, and it was possible with them and the 600-watt lamp to handle larger theatres, operating an indefinite number of hours a day. Quite a number of these installations were made and from all reports are very satisfactory.

Due to the fact, however, that a limit of 9 x 12 was placed upon a possible picture at an 80-foot throw which would be entirely satisfactory, many requests appeared for outfits which would supply projection for larger audiences and theatres. It therefore became necessary to look around for something which would give us more light. We finally decided upon a 65-volt 3-KW generator with satisfactory battery and with it we could furnish screen illumination, etc., for practically any theatre excepting the larger ones. A number of these installations were made. We found after some practical experience that the light load, motors, etc., of the average theatre would consume enough current from the total output of the plant to leave only sufficient current for a 30-ampere arc. These installations were very satisfactory.

Later quite a lengthy discussion between the various lamp engineers was settled and a standard of 30-amperes, 30 volts, or 900-watt incandescent lamp was decided upon. We found that this lamp when properly installed and focused, would give us illumination equal to the 30-ampere direct-current arc. We therefore began to lose interest in the arc due to inconvenience in adjusting, etc., and concentrated in force on the 30-ampere incandescent lamp. This brings us up to the present time. At present, some difficulties are being experienced with the 30-ampere, 900-watt lamp, and it is my opinion that we had better go slowly until the lamp engineers give us their O. K. upon it.

I have given a brief history of my personal activities in this business and as a result of this experience, there are several principles which have been fortunately brought to my attention and which it seems to me are very important to the success of any engineering activity. As the only way through which the fruits of engineering may finally pass to a greater utility is through the sales force, it appears to me that the junction between engineering and sales activity is one of the most important points in any business. The salesman studies human nature and methods of overcoming prejudices and of painting pictures in the minds of his prospects and of creating a desire for the thing which he is selling. I have heard it said that if five per cent of what we sell some one else is actually digested, we are working very efficiently. In putting in the 95 per cent from my experience, I would say that there is a great temptation for the average salesman in his enthusiasm to stretch certain facts a certain amount and unintentionally make claims for apparatus which cannot be substantiated.

On the other hand, I would say that it is very easy for an engineer, when he is attempting to solve a certain problem, to get certain predetermined results, to coax the figures around a little bit toward the right direction and by accurately setting his apparatus, eliminate every feature which may detract from the maximum results and not considering that the fellow who uses this apparatus will know comparatively nothing about it, and will finally arrive at a figure entirely too high in relation to the actual performance of the apparatus.

When he turns these figures over to the salesman, who adds a little more on for good measure, the customer will be disappointed in the results he secures, and it seems to me that there is nothing more discouraging to the salesman, manufacturer, and every one connected with the project than to have a number of dissatisfied users. In fact, all the sales activity in the world attempting to combat this feature would result in failure.

I therefore believe that it is to every one's advantage, even though we are all keyed up with enthusiasm and have accomplished wonderful things, to deal rather conservatively rather than to overestimate the results of our activities.

The salesmen, with whom I come in contact, are interested in many types and kinds of apparatus. It is therefore impossible for them to become experts in any one particular line. However, so that they may be able to understand the fundamentals of projection, I supervised the writing of a booklet made up almost entirely of diagrams and illustrations showing just what may be expected from isolated lighting plants in connection with projection. I have made a number of these illustrations into slides and will now show you an attempt to educate in a very simple manner, these salesmen.

Well Finished Steel Lined Projection Room Important Feature of New Victoria

Wilmer and Vincent Believe in Safety and Efficiency in Theatre Construction

Embodied in the construction of the new Victoria theatre, just completed by the Wilmer & Vincent interests in Harrisburg, Pa., is an arrangement of projection booth and screen equipment which is regarded by S. R. Filson, the house manager who, incidentally, is an experienced machine operator, as meeting every requirement both as to safety and efficiency of service. The booth is built entirely outside the auditorium, behind a fire-proof brick wall at the rear of the balcony, the only connecting link between theatre proper and booth being three portholes—two for the two Simplex projection machines and one for the Kleigl spotlight.

The projection room or booth is located between the third and fourth floors of the building, on a slightly higher level than the mirror screen, which is 168 feet distant from the portholes through which the pictures are projected. The almost imperceptible drop from booth to screen is, in the opinion of Mr. Filson, the most advantageous arrangement that could be devised.

The only means of access to the booth is by way of a staircase which leads from an entrance on the street level in front of the theatre. The walls of the stairway are of fire-proof construction. The booth, which measures twenty feet along the brick wall at the rear of the balcony, is twelve feet deep and eleven feet high. It is entirely encased in extra heavy steel lathing on an angle metal frame, purchased from Henry Gilbert & Son, hardware dealers, of Second and Paxton streets, Harrisburg, and this is finished off on the interior by two heavy coats of hard plaster.

The booth was installed by E. C. Horn & Son, builders and architects, of 1476

Navy Turns Out Men Who Are Real Projectionists

The pictures shown on this page were sent in by W. G. Woods, of the Theatre Equipment Supply Co., San Francisco, distributors of Power's Projectors in that locality. The ordinary observer will see only a lot of sailors learning something about motion picture machines. To those on the inside it represents a group of "Professors" in one of the largest schools in the world. This school, the United States Navy, has become a great "University" for the development and education of film fans. The man in the navy these days sees first-class films at sea or ashore and when he comes out the exhibitor has him for life.

The "Professors" are sailors at t Mare Island Navy Yard, San Francis taking a post graduate course in proj tion.

In the Mare Island Navy Yard th is a completely equipped film exchan supplying ships with films. The offi shown is Lieut. C. W. Camera Man Need Not Worry About Turning Crank with This New Machine

Can Be Operated at Any Angle Without a Tripod—Excellent for Aeroplanes or Autos

Frank T. Morris, of 174 West 81st Street, New York, has brought out a new motion picture camera which completely eliminates the necessity of turning a crank. The camera is operated by a small electric motor which is controlled by a mere turn of the wrist.

The inventor has had considerable success in taking of aerial moving pictures and also fast moving objects with his new camera. It is especially suitable for operation from an aeroplane, as it can be used at any angle and no tripod is necessary. The illustration which accompanies this article shows the pneumatic cushion which the inventor is wearing to prevent vibration spoiling the picture. The camera is grasped firmly by the two handles and held tightly against this cushion, the speed of the motor being regulated by a rheostat controlled by turning the right hand handle. Thus the camera man can devote all his time to "spotting" his subject and is relieved of the worry and labor of cranking.

The motor is of the high-speed type and develops ⅛ horsepower. It is geared to the main shaft and can be regulated at speeds from 1 to 30 pictures per second as desired by the operator.

"The total weight of my new camera," explains Mr. Morris, "is but 21 pounds, and it has a 400 foot film capacity. The storage battery which supplies the juice is 8 volts 60 ampere, and will drive the camera 10 consecutive hours or a total length of 30,000 feet of film. The battery is cheaply and easily recharged. The camera has an especially large positive 20 to 1 finder.

"It is not only excellent for aeroplane moving picture photography, but any quick work on speedy moving objects and such work as football, polo, baseball, horse and auto races, hurdling, jumping, animals, game pictures, objects from boats, fast moving automobiles, trains and all sorts of trick pictures, as the camera can be made to swing and revolve at the same time taking the picture by applying the electric power. The camera can be also operated at a far distance by means of long wires in places where it would be dangerous for the camera man."
